89 The issue of the standard and type of proof required under s. 1 arises with particular acuity in the case at bar because the social science evidence, as in these previous cases, is in a state of some controversy. In light of this inconclusive evidence, the government submitted it is not for this Court to second-guess the judgment of the legislature when it has made a reasonable assessment that an apprehension of harm exists. It also argued that "common sense applied to what is known establishes the reasonableness of Parliament's assessment of the situation".

La question de la norme et du type de preuve que commande l'article premier se pose avec une acuité particulière dans la présente instance parce que, tout comme dans ces arrêts antérieurs, la preuve fondée sur les sciences sociales est, dans une certaine mesure, encore controversée. Vu cette preuve non concluante, le gouvernement a soutenu qu'il n'appartient pas à la Cour de remettre en question le jugement du législateur qui, après avoir fait une appréciation raisonnable de la situation, a conclu à l'existence d'une appréhension de préjudice. Le gouvernement a également plaidé que [TRADUCTION] «l'application du bon sens aux éléments connus établit le caractère raisonnable de l'appréciation de la situation qu'a faite le législateur».

90 I agree with McLachlin J.'s remarks in RJR-MacDonald that it is difficult to draw a sharp distinction between legislation in which the state is the antagonist of the individual, and that in which it is acting as a mediator between different groups. Indeed, nothing in these cases suggests that there is one category of cases in which a low standard of justification under s. 1 is applied, and another category in which a higher standard is applied. In my view, these cases further the contextual approach to s. 1 by indicating that the vulnerability of the group which the legislator seeks to protect (as in Irwin Toy, supra, at p. 995; Ross v. New Brunswick School District No. 15, [1996] 1 S.C.R. 825, at para. 88), that group's own subjective fears and apprehension of harm (as in R. v. Keegstra, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697, per McLachlin J., at p. 857), and the inability to measure scientifically a particular harm in question, or the efficaciousness of a remedy (as in Butler, supra, at p. 502), are all factors of which the court must take account in assessing whether a limit has been demonstrably justified according to the civil standard of proof. They do not represent categories of standard of proof which the government must satisfy, but are rather factors which go to the question of whether there has been a demonstrable justification. I propose to return to these factors in more detail in the course of a contextual approach to s. 1.

Je souscris aux propos du juge McLachlin dans RJR-MacDonald selon lesquels il est difficile d'établir une distinction nette entre les mesures législatives dans le cadre desquelles l'État agit en tant qu'adversaire singulier de l'individu et celles où il agit en tant que médiateur entre différents groupes. De fait, rien dans les arrêts susmentionnés ne tend à indiquer qu'il existe une catégorie de cas auxquels s'applique une norme peu exigeante de justification dans le cadre de l'article premier et une autre catégorie à laquelle s'applique une norme plus élevée. À mon avis, ces précédents étayent davantage le recours à une approche contextuelle dans l'application de l'article premier en indiquant que la vulnérabilité du groupe que le législateur cherche à protéger (comme dans Irwin Toy, précité, à la p. 995; Ross c. Conseil scolaire du district nº 15 du Nouveau-Brunswick, [1996] 1 R.C.S. 825, au par. 88), les craintes subjectives et la crainte de préjudice entretenue par ce groupe (comme dans R. c. Keegstra, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 697, motifs du juge McLachlin, à la p. 857), et l'incapa-

cité de mesurer scientifiquement le préjudice particulier en cause ou l'efficacité d'une réparation (comme dans Butler, précité, à la p. 502), sont autant de facteurs que le tribunal doit prendre en considération lorsqu'il décide si une restriction est justifiée suivant la norme de preuve applicable en matière civile. Ce ne sont pas des catégories de norme de preuve auxquelles le gouvernement doit satisfaire, mais bien des facteurs touchant la question de savoir s'il y a une justification démontrable. Je me propose de revenir plus en détail sur ces facteurs dans le cours de l'application de l'approche contextuelle à l'article premier.

Another contextual factor to be considered is the nature of the activity which is infringed. The degree of constitutional protection may vary depending on the nature of the expression at issue (Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326, at pp. 1355-56; Rocket v. Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 232, at pp. 246-47; Keegstra, supra, at p. 760; RJR-MacDonald, supra, at paras. 71-73 and 132; Libman, supra, at para. 60). This is not because a lower standard is applied, but because the low value of the expression may be more easily outweighed by the government objective. In this case, the speech infringed is political information. While opinion polls may not be the same as political ideas, they are nevertheless an important part of the political discourse, as manifested by the attention such polls receive in the media and in the public at large, and by the fact that political parties themselves purchase and use such information. Indeed, the government argues that opinion polls have an excessive impact on the electoral choices made by voters. As a genre of speech, unlike hate speech or pornography, this expression is not intrinsically harmful or demeaning to certain members of society because of its direct impact, or its impact on others. It is without moral content, and yet it is widely perceived as a valuable and important part of the discourse of elections in this country. The government urges, however, that under some circumstances polls may come to have an effect which interferes with the ability of individuals to make an informed choice.

91 Un autre facteur contextuel qui doit être pris en considération est la nature de l'activité à laquelle il est porté atteinte. Le degré de protection constitutionnelle peut varier selon la nature de la forme d'expression en cause (Edmonton Journal c. Alberta (Procureur général), [1989] 2 R.C.S. 1326, aux pp. 1355 et 1356; Rocket c. Collège royal des chirurgiens dentistes d'Ontario, [1990] 2 R.C.S. 232, aux pp. 246 et 247; Keegstra, précité, à la p. 760; RJR-MacDonald, précité, aux pp. 71 à 73 et 132; Libman, précité, au par. 60). Ce n'est pas parce qu'une norme moins exigeante est appliquée, mais plutôt parce que, compte tenu dans certains cas de la faible valeur de la forme d'expression en cause, l'objectif du gouvernement l'emporte plus facilement sur celle-ci. Dans le présent cas, le discours visé par l'atteinte est l'information politique. Même si les sondages ne sont pas assimilables aux opinions politiques, ils sont néanmoins un élément important du discours politique, comme en témoignent, d'une part, l'attention qu'ils reçoivent dans les médias et au sein du public en général, et, d'autre part, le fait que les partis politiques eux-mêmes achètent et utilisent ce type d'information. De fait, le gouvernement prétend que les sondages ont une influence excessive sur les choix électoraux des citoyens. Contrairement à la propagande haineuse ou à la pornographie, cette forme d'expression n'est pas intrinsèquement préjudiciable ou avilissante pour certains membres de la société à cause soit de son effet direct sur eux soit de son effet sur autrui. Quoique dénuée de contenu moral, elle est pourtant largement perçue comme un élément précieux et impor-

92 According to the purposes I describe below, there are two groups who might be negatively affected by polls: first, there are those who incorrectly assume that polls are a perfect measure of voting results on election day, and rely on them to an excessive degree in consequence; second, there are those voters who are perfectly aware of the general shortcomings of polls as predictions of the result on election day, but who are misled by the publication of an inaccurate poll result. Even assuming there to be some likelihood of these dangers, which shall be discussed more fully in the course of the s. 1 analysis proper, there can be no question that opinion surveys regarding political candidates or electoral issues are part of the political process and, thus, at the core of expression guaranteed by the Charter. As Dickson C.J. stated in Keegstra, supra, at pp. 763-64:

> The connection between freedom of expression and the political process is perhaps the linchpin of the s. 2(b) guarantee, and the nature of this connection is largely derived from the Canadian commitment to democracy. Freedom of expression is a crucial aspect of the democratic commitment, not merely because it permits the best policies to be chosen from among a wide array of proffered options, but additionally because it helps to ensure that participation in the political process is open to all persons.

In that case, hate speech was found to interfere with the ability of a specific and identifiable group to participate in the political process by directly undermining their dignity and their membership in the community. The same could be said of pornographic expression in Butler. And in Irwin Toy, the interest of advertisers meant that there was a likelihood that such speech would be manipulative of children and would play on their vulnerability.

tant du discours électoral dans notre pays. Toutefois, le gouvernement affirme que, dans certaines circonstances, il est possible que les sondages aient pour effet de diminuer la capacité de certains individus de faire un choix éclairé.

Suivant les objectifs que je vais décrire plus loin, deux groupes risquent de subir un préjudice du fait des sondages: premièrement, il y a les personnes qui supposent à tort que les sondages indiquent parfaitement quels seront les résultats du scrutin le jour de l'élection et qui, en conséquence, se fient à ceux-ci d'une manière excessive; deuxièmement, il y a les personnes qui savent parfaitement que les sondages en général ne permettent pas de prédire les résultats le jour du scrutin, mais qui sont induites en erreur par la publication d'un sondage inexact. Même en supposant une certaine vraisemblance à ces dangers, qui seront examinés de manière plus approfondie dans le cours de l'analyse fondée sur l'article premier proprement dite, il ne fait aucun doute que les sondages concernant les candidats ou les enjeux électoraux font partie du processus politique et sont, de ce fait, au cœur de la liberté d'expression garantie par la Charte. Comme l'a dit le juge en chef Dickson dans Keegstra, précité, aux pp. 763 et 764:

> Le lien entre la liberté d'expression et le processus politique est peut-être la cheville ouvrière de la garantie énoncée à l'al. 2*b*), et ce lien tient dans une large mesure à l'engagement du Canada envers la démocratie. La liberté d'expression est un aspect crucial de cet engagement démocratique, non pas simplement parce qu'elle permet de choisir les meilleures politiques parmi la vaste gamme des possibilités offertes, mais en outre parce qu'elle contribue à assurer un processus politique ouvert à la participation de tous.

Dans cette affaire, il a été jugé que la propagande haineuse entravait la participation d'un groupe précis et identifiable au processus politique en amoindrissant sa dignité et son sentiment d'appartenance à la collectivité. La même affirmation pouvait être faite dans Butler qui portait sur l'expression pornographique. Dans Irwin Toy, compte tenu de l'intérêt des annonceurs, il était vraisemblable que le discours en cause aurait un effet manipulateur à l'égard des enfants et jouerait sur leur vulnérabilité.

In each of these cases, the type of speech involved systematically and consistently undermined the position of some members of society. There is no evidence in this case that there is any such systematic opposition between the interests or position of the Canadian voter and opinion surveys. The government argues that there is the potential that some inaccurate poll might undermine the freedom of choice of the Canadian voter, or that some voters might be excessively influenced by polls. Leaving those exceptional or potential cases aside, polls are not generally inimical to the interests of Canadian voters. They are sought after and widely valued which, independently of their value to any one voter or specific content, places this type of speech at the core of the political process.

93 Dans chacune de ces affaires, le type d'expression en cause amoindrissait de façon systématique et uniforme la situation de certains membres de la société. Il n'y a aucune preuve, en l'espèce, de l'existence d'une telle opposition systématique entre les intérêts ou la situation des électeurs canadiens et les sondages. Le gouvernement prétend qu'il y a un risque que certains sondages inexacts puissent porter atteinte à la liberté de choix des électeurs ou que certains électeurs canadiens soient influencés de manière excessive par les sondages. Hormis ces cas exceptionnels ou potentiels, les sondages ne sont généralement pas incompatibles avec les intérêts des électeurs canadiens. Ils sont recherchés et largement appréciés, de sorte que, indépendamment de leur valeur pour un électeur donné ou de leur contenu précis, ce type de discours est au cœur du processus politique.

Although the Libman case involved expression related to political campaigning, there was a likelihood that the genre of paid political advertising would significantly manipulate the political discourse to the advantage of those with greater financial resources (paras. 50-51). Libman is not dissimilar to Irwin Toy in the sense that, under certain circumstances, the nature of the interests (i.e., a single party or faction with a great preponderance of financial resources) of the speakers could make the expression itself inimical to the exercise of a free and informed choice by others. The government does not suggest that there is any such systematic or structural danger in the case of opinion surveys, but relies simply on the possibility of an inaccurate poll, or the disproportionate reaction by certain voters to polls generally. These may be important objectives and will be assessed below; but the possibility of harm arising from the unfortuitous publication of an inaccurate poll does not displace the general nature of this expression as political expression at the core of s. 2(b).

94 Même si l'arrêt Libman concernait une forme d'expression rattachée aux campagnes politiques, il était vraisemblable que le genre d'annonces politiques payées qui étaient en cause dans cette affaire influencent de façon considérable le débat politique en faveur de ceux qui disposent de plus grandes ressources financières (par. 50 et 51). L'affaire Libman n'est pas sans similarité avec l'affaire Irwin Toy en ce sens que, dans certaines circonstances, la nature des intérêts (c'est-à-dire le fait qu'un parti ou une faction dispose d'une supériorité considérable du point de vue des ressources financières) de ceux qui s'expriment pourrait rendre la forme d'expression elle-même incompatible avec l'exercice par les autres intéressés d'un choix libre et éclairé. Le gouvernement ne suggère pas l'existence d'un tel danger systématique ou structurel dans le cas des sondages, mais invoque simplement la possibilité d'un sondage inexact ou d'une réaction disproportionnée de la part de certains électeurs aux sondages en général. Il s'agit là d'objectifs qui peuvent être importants et qui seront appréciés plus loin, mais la possibilité d'un préjudice résultant de la publication non fortuite d'un sondage inexact ne change pas la nature générale de cette forme d'expression, qui relève de l'expression politique au cœur de l'al. 2*b*).

95 I would conclude that the nature of the expression in issue here does not prima facie suggest that a deferential approach is appropriate in this case.

2. Legislative Objective

96 The characterization of the objective of s. 322.1 and the nature of the harm which it hopes to remedy are virtually correlatives of one another, and constitute the crucial first step in the s. 1 analysis. Unfortunately, the decisions below and some of the submissions before us have been unnecessarily vague in stating the precise objective of the limitation in issue, leaving many unanswered questions as to the proper approach to the s. 1 analysis. The respondent submitted before us that the objective of s. 322.1 is "to prevent the distorting effect of public opinion survey results which are released late in the election when there is no longer a sufficient opportunity to respond". But what is the exact nature of this "distorting effect"? The Court of Appeal did not elucidate any more precise objective than this. By contrast, Somers J. articulated four objectives from the legislative history of the provision which more precisely characterized the purpose of the limit on freedom of expression: prevention of dissemination of false information; prevention of polling information from being presented in a misleading way that lent an aura of scientific precision to poll results; a period of rest and reflection for voters prior to going to the polls; and a period of response after the final poll has been published, presumably to respond to its potential inaccuracy or simply to question the importance of polls in general. Before this Court, the respondent submitted that the sole objective of the provision on which it was relying was to provide a period during which the accuracy of a poll could be publicly questioned and debated, so that the scientific validity and accuracy of any particular poll would be more fully known to Canadian voters. The harm, then, which the provision purportedly addresses is the possibility that the scientific accuracy of polls may be overestimated by Canadian voters in a particular election and that Je suis d'avis de conclure que la nature de la forme d'expression en litige dans le présent cas ne tend pas à indiquer, à première vue, qu'une approche empreinte de retenue est appropriée en l'espèce.

2. L'objectif législatif

La qualification de l'objectif de l'art. 322.1 et la nature du préjudice qu'il est censé corriger sont pratiquement en corrélation, et constituent la première étape cruciale de l'analyse fondée sur l'article premier. Malheureusement, les décisions des juridictions inférieures ainsi que certaines des observations qui nous ont été soumises ont énoncé de manière inutilement vague l'objectif précis de la restriction en litige, laissant bien des questions sans réponse en ce qui concerne la démarche appropriée pour l'analyse fondée sur l'article premier. Devant nous, l'intimé a fait valoir que l'art. 322.1 a pour objectif [TRADUCTION] «de prévenir l'effet de déformation de la réalité que peut créer la publication des résultats de sondages tard dans une campagne électorale, lorsqu'il ne reste plus de temps pour y répliquer». Mais en quoi consiste précisément cet «effet déformant»? La Cour d'appel n'a pas énoncé d'objectif plus précis que celui-là. Par contraste, le juge Somers a, à partir de l'historique de la disposition, formulé quatre objectifs définissant plus précisément l'objet de la restriction à la liberté d'expression: prévenir la diffusion de faux renseignements; empêcher que des renseignements touchant les sondages soient présentés d'une manière trompeuse, propre à donner une aura de caractère scientifique aux résultats des sondages; donner aux électeurs une période de répit et de réflexion avant le scrutin; accorder une période de réplique après la publication du dernier sondage, vraisemblablement pour répondre aux inexactitudes qu'il pourrait contenir ou tout simplement pour s'interroger sur l'importance des sondages en général. Devant notre Cour, l'intimé a plaidé que le seul objectif qu'il invoquait était celui qui consiste à accorder une période permettant de remettre en question l'exactitude d'un sondage et d'en débattre publiquement de façon à bien renseigner les électeurs canadiens sur la validité et l'exactitude scientifiques d'un sondage donné. En conséquence, le préjudice censé visé par la disposithey may cast their vote based on this inaccurate perception.

As mentioned in the previous section, the voter's misapprehension of the true significance of a poll could be the result of either of two quite different reasons: first, the voter might systematically overestimate the validity and accuracy of poll results; or, second, there might be a poll which falls below the normal standard of accuracy of polling which Canadians are generally entitled to expect. This latter type of poll is more simply described as a bad poll, a false poll, or an inaccurate poll. The respondent is not explicit as to which distorting effect it refers, and the judgments below, as well as legislative pronouncements at the time of its passage, reflect this obscurity. The danger of the systematically overreliant voter is suggested in the purpose described by Somers J. as the need for "a rest period" so that the frenzy of polls will die down and voters will be encouraged to forget about the polls and concentrate on issues. This purpose is evident in the final report of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing ("Lortie Commission") entitled Reforming Electoral Democracy (1991), vol. 1, which concluded, at p. 460, that a polling ban was necessary to "provide voters with a period of reflection at the end of campaign to assess the parties and candidates". The second purpose of the legislation, to guard against an inaccurate poll which occurs late in the campaign, has nothing to do with a period of repose or reflection. Rather, the purpose is to provide an opportunity for the last opinion surveys on which the voter might base his or her vote to be subjected to public scrutiny. In this way, the voter will have the best information possible about the accuracy of the latest polls, and will not cast a vote without a potentially inaccurate opinion survey having been publicly scrutinized.

tion est la possibilité que l'exactitude scientifique des sondages puisse être surestimée par les électeurs canadiens au cours d'une campagne électorale donnée et qu'ils votent en fonction de cette perception inexacte.

97 Comme je l'ai dit dans la section précédente, il est possible qu'un électeur se méprenne sur la signification réelle d'un sondage pour deux raisons très différentes: premièrement, il peut surestimer systématiquement la validité et l'exactitude des résultats des sondages; ou, deuxièmement, il peut arriver qu'un sondage ne respecte pas le niveau normal d'exactitude en la matière auquel les Canadiens sont en droit de s'attendre. On peut qualifier plus simplement ce dernier type de sondage de mauvais sondage, de faux sondage ou de sondage inexact. L'intimé ne précise pas à quel effet déformant il se réfère, et les décisions des juridictions inférieures ainsi que les propos des parlementaires au moment de l'adoption de la disposition sont tout aussi obscurs. Le danger que les électeurs accordent systématiquement aux sondages une importance exagérée est suggéré dans l'objectif que le juge Somers a décrit comme étant la nécessité d'une «période de répit» durant laquelle la frénésie des sondages s'atténuerait et les électeurs seraient encouragés à oublier les sondages et à se concentrer sur les enjeux. Cet objectif est énoncé de façon manifeste dans le rapport final de la Commission royale sur la réforme électorale et le financement des partis («Commission Lortie») intitulé Pour une démocratie électorale renouvelée (1991), vol. 1, qui a conclu, aux pp. 478 et 479, à la nécessité d'interdire la publication des sondages pour «accorde[r] à l'électorat une période de réflexion à la fin de la campagne». Le deuxième objectif de la loi — savoir celui de protéger contre les sondages inexacts publiés tard dans les campagnes — n'a rien à voir avec une période de répit ou de réflexion. Il s'agit plutôt de donner la possibilité de discuter publiquement les derniers sondages sur lesquels les électeurs pourraient se fonder pour voter. De cette façon, ceux-ci possèdent la meilleure information possible au sujet de l'exactitude des derniers sondages et ne se rendent pas aux urnes avant que des sondages potentiellement inexacts aient été débattus publiquement.

98 At a higher level of generality, the purpose of providing more accurate information to Canadian voters is that they are more capable of making a free and informed choice, which engenders a freer and fairer election process. It is said that the election process will also be perceived as fairer by the electorate with this restriction in place. This, in turn, strengthens democracy. For the purpose of the s. 1 analysis, however, it is desirable to state the purpose of the limiting provision as precisely and specifically as possible so as to provide a clear framework for evaluating its importance, and the precision with which the means have been crafted to fulfil that objective (RJR-MacDonald, supra, at para. 144; Vriend v. Alberta, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 493, at para. 110).

99 Accepting these as the two objectives of s. 322.1, it is my view that any ambiguity in the words of the section should be interpreted in accordance with those purposes, rather than to frustrate them. I conclude, therefore, that Somers J. was correct in interpreting the prohibition in s. 322.1 as applying only to "new" poll results, i.e. results that are undisclosed as of midnight on the Friday before election day. Far from preventing old poll results from being mentioned, the very raison d'être of the section is that those old poll results should be aired and discussed in the media so that their accuracy can be fully determined in public debate.

3. Is the Objective Pressing and Substantial?

100 For clarity, I propose to examine each purpose separately, beginning with the "period of rest" purpose. I will examine this purpose briefly as the respondent all but withdrew this as part of its argument before this Court. However, I still consider this analysis necessary as the vague references to the "distorting effect" of polls could still accommodate this purpose. Moreover, there is little doubt that this was one of the original purposes of Parliament in enacting the provision. In addition to the statement in the final report of the Lortie Commis-

À un degré plus élevé de généralité, l'objectif qui consiste à fournir des renseignements plus exacts aux électeurs canadiens vise à les rendre plus aptes à faire un choix libre et éclairé, ce qui engendre un processus électoral plus libre et plus équitable. On affirme que, grâce à la restriction en cause, le processus électoral sera perçu par l'électorat comme plus équitable, situation qui, à son tour, renforcera la démocratie. Pour les besoins de l'analyse fondée sur l'article premier, toutefois, il est souhaitable d'énoncer de façon aussi précise et spécifique que possible, d'une part, l'objectif de la disposition attentatoire afin d'établir un cadre clair pour évaluer son importance, et, d'autre part, la précision avec laquelle les moyens choisis ont été conçus pour réaliser cet objectif (RJR-MacDonald, précité, au par. 144; Vriend c. Alberta, [1998] 1 R.C.S. 493, au par. 110).

Acceptant qu'il s'agit là des deux objectifs de l'art. 322.1, je suis d'avis que toute ambiguïté des mots employés dans cette disposition doit être dissipée de manière à favoriser et non à contrecarrer la réalisation de ces objectifs. En conséquence, je conclus que le juge Somers a eu raison de considérer que l'interdiction prévue à l'art. 322.1 s'applique uniquement aux résultats de «nouveaux» sondages, c'est-à-dire aux résultats qui n'ont pas encore été communiqués à minuit le vendredi qui précède le jour du scrutin. Loin d'empêcher que l'on fasse état des résultats de sondages déjà publiés, la raison d'être même de cet article est la diffusion et la discussion de ces sondages dans les médias de sorte que leur exactitude puisse être débattue pleinement en public.

3. L'objectif est-il urgent et réel?

Par souci de clarté, je me propose d'examiner chaque objectif séparément, en commençant par celui fondé sur la «période de répit». Je ne vais m'y arrêter que brièvement car l'intimé l'a pour ainsi dire abandonné dans sa plaidoirie devant notre Cour. Toutefois, je continue de considérer que cette analyse est nécessaire parce que les vagues allusions à l'«effet déformant» des sondages pourraient encore se rattacher à cet objectif. De plus, il fait peu de doute que c'était l'un des objectifs initiaux du législateur lorsqu'il a édicté la sion mentioned above, Senator Rivest, in introducing the bill containing s. 322.1 in the Upper House, declared that it was an attempt to [TRANSLATION] "reconcile the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press with the right of the voters to make a judgement peacefully, come election time": Debates of the Senate, April 29, 1993, at p. 3117.

disposition en litige. Outre les remarques précitées tirées du rapport final de la Commission Lortie, le sénateur Rivest, qui a présenté le projet de loi contenant l'art. 322.1 à la Chambre haute, a déclaré que celui-ci tentait de «marier la liberté d'expression et la liberté de presse avec la liberté et le droit du citoyen de pouvoir porter un jugement en toute quiétude au moment des élections»: Débats du Sénat, 29 avril 1993, à la p. 3117.

An examination of this purpose reveals some disturbing assumptions. First, this purpose does not rely on the inaccuracy of any opinion survey results. Rather, it suggests that Canadians will become so mesmerized by the flurry of polls appearing in the media that they will forget the issues upon which they should actually be concentrating. This reasoning cannot be countenanced. Canadian voters must be presumed to have a certain degree of maturity and intelligence. They have the right to consider the results of polls as part of a strategic exercise of their vote. It cannot be assumed that in so doing they will be so naïve as to forget the issues and interests which motivate them to vote for a particular candidate. Nor can Canadians be presumed to assume that polls are absolutely accurate in predicting outcomes of elections and that they thus will overvalue poll results. Many polls are released in the course of an election campaign which belies the suggestion that any one poll could be perceived as authoritative. These opinion polls yield differing results even when conducted contemporaneously, and, perhaps more importantly, opinion poll results fluctuate dramatically over time. I cannot accept, without gravely insulting the Canadian voter, that there is any likelihood that an individual would be so enthralled by a particular poll result as to allow his or her electoral judgment to be ruled by it.

101 L'examen de cet objectif révèle quelques suppositions troublantes. Premièrement, cet objectif n'est pas fondé sur l'inexactitude des résultats de sondages donnés. Il suppose plutôt que les Canadiens sont tellement hypnotisés par l'avalanche de sondages publiés dans les médias qu'ils en oublient les enjeux sur lesquels ils devraient plutôt se concentrer. Ce raisonnement ne peut être admis. Il faut présumer aux électeurs canadiens un certain degré de maturité et d'intelligence. Ils ont le droit de tenir compte des résultats des sondages pour voter d'une manière stratégique. On ne peut supposer que, en agissant ainsi, ils sont à ce point naïfs qu'ils oublient les enjeux et les intérêts qui les motivent à voter pour un candidat donné. On ne peut non plus supposer que les Canadiens présument que les sondages prédisent avec une exactitude absolue l'issue du scrutin et, pour cette raison, surestiment les résultats des sondages. Bon nombre de sondages sont publiés au cours d'une campagne électorale, ce qui contredit l'idée qu'un sondage en particulier puisse être perçu comme faisant autorité. Ces sondages produisent des résultats différents même quand ils sont réalisés en même temps, et, fait plus important peut-être, les résultats des sondages fluctuent radicalement sur une période donnée. Je ne peux admettre, sans faire gravement insulte aux électeurs canadiens, qu'il y ait la moindre chance qu'un individu soit tellement séduit par les résultats d'un sondage donné que, au moment de voter, il laisse ceux-ci l'emporter sur son jugement.

I am thus unable to perceive, and nor has the government seriously argued before us, that any pressing and substantial objective is served by the existence of a "rest period" for polls prior to the election date. I would, therefore, find that s. 322.1

102 Je suis donc incapable de concevoir — d'ailleurs le gouvernement n'a pas sérieusement plaidé devant nous — que l'existence d'une «période de répit» en matière de sondages avant le jour du scrutin serve un objectif urgent et réel. En consé-is not justified under s. 1 according to this objective.

103 The more difficult question is whether the blackout period can be justified by the other legislative purpose, which is to prevent an inaccurate poll from having an impact on voter choice because of a lack of response time prior to the voter casting his or her ballot. The first step in determining whether this is a pressing and substantial objective is to determine whether such a poll would actually influence voter choice, and to what extent; the second step is to evaluate the likelihood of an inaccurate poll being published.

104 Although the extent of the influence of polls on voter choice is uncertain, there is evidence suggesting that it may be significant. The key evidence in this case was gathered by the Lortie Commission and presented in its final report. The Lortie Commission, supra, at p. 457, concluded that: "Notwithstanding the frequent assertion of pollsters that their data have minimal influence on voters, recent research provides strong support for the proposition that published opinion polls can significantly influence campaigns and voters". More specifically, the Commission asserted that "the argument that published polls do not influence voter choice or affect the conduct of campaigns is simply untenable" (p. 458). Thus, the Commission found that polls not only have a general impact on the conduct of an election, but that they affect voter choice. The harmful influence, according to the Commission, arose because opinion polls are subject to errors which are not fully disclosed to the public (at p. 455):

> Because they are presented as 'scientific', published opinion polls raise issues of public confidence in the integrity of the electoral process. Notwithstanding their claims to scientific validity and accuracy in representing the views of all potential voters, opinion polls are susceptible to many forms of error and misrepresentation. The apparent precision of the data they report fails to reflect the fact that they are estimates of the distribution of opinion at a given time. Yet their apparent authority gives them considerable influence over the conduct of quence, je conclus que, au regard de cet objectif, l'art. 322.1 n'est pas justifié au sens de l'article premier.

La question plus difficile est de savoir si l'embargo peut être justifié par l'autre objectif de la disposition, savoir le fait d'empêcher qu'un sondage inexact influence la décision des électeurs en raison de l'absence d'un temps de réplique avant le scrutin. Pour décider s'il s'agit d'un objectif urgent et réel, il faut, dans un premier temps, se demander si un tel sondage influencerait réellement le choix des électeurs, et, si oui, dans quelle mesure il le ferait. Dans un deuxième temps, il faut évaluer le risque qu'un sondage inexact soit publié.

Quoique la mesure dans laquelle les sondages influencent la décision des électeurs soit incertaine, il existe des éléments de preuve tendant à indiquer qu'elle peut être importante. Les éléments clés dans le cas qui nous intéresse ont été recueillis par la Commission Lortie, qui les a présentés dans son rapport final. À la p. 475, celle-ci a tiré la conclusion suivante: «Bien que les maisons de sondage ne cessent de répéter que leurs données affectent peu le vote, des recherches récentes tendent à prouver le contraire». Plus précisément, la Commission a affirmé qu'«il est impossible de soutenir que la publication des sondages n'influence pas le choix des électeurs et électrices ou la conduite des campagnes» (p. 476). En conséquence, la Commission a conclu que non seulement les sondages ont une incidence générale sur la conduite des élections, mais qu'ils influencent également le choix des électeurs. Suivant la Commission, l'influence préjudiciable des sondages est imputable au fait qu'ils sont sujets à des erreurs qui ne sont pas divulguées intégralement au grand public (à la p. 473):

> Parce qu'ils sont présentés comme «scientifiques», les sondages d'opinion diffusés par les médias suscitent des inquiétudes quant à la confiance du public dans l'intégrité du processus électoral. En dépit de la précision scientifique revendiquée par leurs auteurs, les sondages sont sujets à maintes erreurs et distorsions. La précision apparente de leurs données occulte le fait qu'ils ne sont jamais qu'une estimation de la distribution de l'opinion à un moment donné. Leur apparence de rigueur leur confère néanmoins une influence considérable sur la campaigns and the choices made by voters. [Emphasis added.]

Again, I would observe that there appear to be two strains of thought in this passage: first, that the accuracy of any poll may be overestimated by Canadians, and second, that some polls may fall below the standard of accuracy generally expected through error or misrepresentation. I have found above that the first of these objectives is not of pressing and substantial concern justified under s. 1. However, the Lortie Commission appears also to be concerned about the influence of an inaccurate poll. The Lachapelle Study (Polls and the Media in Canadian Elections: Taking the Pulse (1991)) and the White Paper on Election Law Reform (1986) were considerably less certain of this influence, however. Drawing on the evidence presented to the Lortie Commission, Professor Lachapelle was able to identify a number of discrete influences of opinion polls, including: the bandwagon effect (rallying to support the leader in the polls); the underdog effect (rallying to support the trailing candidate); the demotivating effect (abstaining from voting); the motivating effect (encouraging voters to cast their ballots); the strategic effect (electors decide how to vote on the basis of the relative popularity of parties); and the free-will effect (voting to prove the polls wrong); see Lachapelle Study, supra, at pp. 13-14. There is dispute, however, regarding the overall influence on election results. For instance, it is suggested that one effect is simply counterbalanced by another and, therefore, the overall influence of polls is nil; see White Paper, supra, at p. 26. Professor Lachapelle cautioned that "no definitive conclusion about the actual impact of polls can be drawn from these briefs" (p. 14), and that "theories about the decline of political parties and the undue influence of polls on voters have not been convincingly supported" (p. 29).

Although the overall influence of polls may not have been scientifically established as "undue", I would nevertheless conclude that there is evidence of significant influence of polls on the electoral conduite des campagnes et l'issue des scrutins. [Je souligne.]

Encore une fois, je ferai observer que ce passage semble traduire deux courants de pensée: premièrement, que l'exactitude de tout sondage peut être surestimée par les Canadiens, et, deuxièmement, que certains sondages peuvent, en raison d'erreurs et de distorsions, ne pas respecter le niveau d'exactitude auquel on s'attend généralement. J'ai déjà conclu que le premier de ces objectifs n'est pas une préoccupation urgente et réelle justifiée au sens de l'article premier. Toutefois, la Commission Lortie semble s'inquiéter aussi de l'influence des sondages inexacts. L'Étude Lachapelle (Les sondages et les médias lors des élections au Canada: le pouls de l'opinion (1991)) et le Livre blanc sur la réforme de la loi électorale (1986) sont beaucoup moins affirmatifs sur ce point. À partir de la preuve présentée à la Commission Lortie, le professeur Lachapelle a pu recenser différents effets des sondages, entre autres: le ralliement au vainqueur («bandwagon effect»); le ralliement au candidat en difficulté («underdog effect»); l'effet démobilisateur (on s'abstient par certitude de gagner); l'effet mobilisateur (les sondages incitent à aller voter); le vote stratégique (l'électeur décide pour qui voter en fonction de la popularité des partis); et le libre arbitre (on vote pour faire mentir les sondages); voir l'Étude Lachapelle, op. cit., aux pp. 15 et 16. Il n'y a cependant pas unanimité quant à leur influence globale sur les résultats des élections. Par exemple, certains prétendent qu'un effet donné est tout simplement neutralisé par un autre, de sorte que l'influence globale des sondages serait nulle; voir le Livre blanc, op. cit., à la p. 27. Le professeur Lachapelle a fait les mises en garde suivantes: «[a]ucune réponse définitive ne peut être tirée de ces mémoires quant à l'impact réel des sondages» (p. 16); «[l]es thèses sur le déclin des partis ou les diverses interprétations sur l'influence indue qu'ils [les sondages] exercent sur les électeurs et électrices n'ont jusqu'à présent pas apporté de résultats très convaincants» (p. 32).

105 Même s'il n'a peut-être pas été scientifiquement établi que les sondages ont globalement une influence «indue», je conclurais néanmoins qu'il y a des preuves d'une influence importante des son-process and on individual electoral choice. Although the overall effect of these polls may be difficult to discern or predict, this evidence suggests that an uncertain number of voters might be influenced in their electoral choice by this false information. The pernicious aspect of an inaccurate poll is that no voter could discover its true nature because of the lack of response time.

106 The possibility of the publication of an inaccurate poll is not de minimis. The Lortie Commission, supra, at p. 457, reported that:

> Although the industry in general has become highly professional since public polling was introduced in Canada in 1941, the incidence of technically deficient and poorly reported polls is still substantial. In recent elections, there have been instances of misleading polls, some because of technical errors and others because of partisan misrepresentation. There have even been allegations of fraudulent polls, where the data were said to have been fabricated to counter a poll showing the opposition in the lead. Such "bogus" polls and the more common misrepresented poll have been released to the media in many democracies. (Cantril 1991, 67; Worcester 1991, 199; Hoy 1989, 189-202) It is the willingness of the media to report such polls that makes them significant and troublesome.

The close relationship between some polling organizations and political parties also suggests that polls released as purportedly scientific measures of public opinion could be subject to manipulation (Lachapelle Study, supra, at p. 133).

107 There is also evidence of public and governmental concern to guard against inaccurate polls which are published late in the campaign and which thus cannot be subject to the same scrutiny as polls published earlier in the election. The respondent submitted the results of a poll indicating that 45 percent of Canadians are in favour of such a ban, 28 percent are opposed, and 27 percent had no opinion. As a simple matter of logic, moreover, clear evidence of the influence of polls on individual voter choice, combined with indications that such inaccurate polls are not a remote possibility, suggests that the voting decision of those who rely dages sur le processus électoral et sur les choix électoraux individuels. Quoique l'effet global de ces sondages puisse être difficile à cerner ou à prédire, ces preuves tendent à indiquer qu'un nombre indéterminé d'électeurs sont susceptibles d'être influencés par cette information erronée. Un sondage inexact a un effet pernicieux en ce qu'aucun électeur ne peut découvrir sa vrai nature vu l'absence d'un temps de réplique.

La possibilité qu'un sondage inexact soit publié n'est pas négligeable. La Commission Lortie, op. cit., à la p. 475, a signalé ceci:

> Bien que l'industrie du sondage en général ait atteint un haut niveau de professionnalisme depuis l'apparition des sondages d'opinion au Canada en 1941, le nombre d'enquêtes techniquement déficientes et mal présentées demeure important. Certains sondages publiés à l'occasion d'élections récentes étaient entachés d'erreurs techniques, et d'autres étaient présentés de façon partiale. On a même signalé des sondages carrément frauduleux, dont les données auraient été fabriquées de toutes pièces pour contrer un sondage plaçant l'adversaire en tête. Les médias de maints pays démocratiques ont publié de tels sondages «bidon» et, de façon plus courante, des sondages présentés de manière trompeuse (Cantril 1991, 67, Worcester 1991, 199; Hoy 1989, 189-202). En fait, ces «sondages» posent un problème dans la mesure où les médias sont prêts à les diffuser.

Les liens étroits qui existent entre des maisons de sondage et des partis politiques tend également à indiquer que des sondages présentés comme des mesures scientifiques pourraient être l'objet de manipulations (Étude Lachapelle, op. cit., à la p. 152).

Il y a également des éléments de preuve indiquant l'existence, tant au sein du grand public que du gouvernement, d'un souci de se prémunir contre les sondages inexacts qui sont publiés tard durant les campagnes et ne peuvent, par conséquent, être examinés aussi attentivement que ceux publiés plus tôt. L'intimé a présenté les résultats d'un sondage indiquant que 45 pour 100 des Canadiens sont pour une telle interdiction, que 28 pour 100 s'y opposent et que 27 pour 100 des répondants n'ont pas exprimé d'opinion. Qui plus est, d'un simple point de vue logique, l'existence d'une preuve claire de l'influence des sondages sur on polls as part of their decision-making process could be distorted. The possibility of such a distortion is clearly a matter which the government may legitimately be concerned to remedy.

les choix électoraux individuels, conjuguée aux indications que de tels sondages inexacts ne sont pas qu'une vague possibilité, tend à indiquer que la décision de ceux qui se basent sur les sondages pour voter pourrait être faussée. La possibilité d'une telle distorsion est manifestement une préoccupation à laquelle le gouvernement peut légitimement vouloir remédier.

The validity of this concern is attenuated, however, by an important disjunction between the evidence and the harm which the legislation purports to address. The evidence and conclusions presented by the Lortie Commission and the Lachapelle Study relate to the influence of polls in the aggregate; the purported objective of this legislation relates to the inaccuracy of an individual poll which undeservedly benefits from the perception of scientific accuracy as a result of the generally high standards of accuracy maintained by polls, and by its presentation in the media as a scientific measure. But an opinion poll does not appear in a vacuum. Rather, it is published chronologically after a series of other polls which have been measuring public opinion throughout the election. In all likelihood, other polls conducted by other polling organizations will appear in other media outlets during the three days prior to election day. Thus, to the extent that any single poll is inaccurate, this will possibly be apparent to voters who are aware of the results of other polls, both those published immediately prior to this final period before the election, and those appearing in the media at the same time as the inaccurate poll. The more polls which appear during this period, the less likely that voters will base their decisions on the inaccurate poll. Moreover, the severity of the error, which one might speculate might enhance the influence of the error, would be offset by increased ease with which the mistake would be identified. In addition, voters' experience with opinion polls in previous elections will have demonstrated that opinion polls are of variable value and accuracy as predictive measures of the outcome of an election.

108

La validité de cette préoccupation est toutefois amoindrie par l'important écart qui existe entre la preuve et le tort auquel la loi est censée remédier. La preuve et les conclusions présentées par la Commission Lortie et l'Étude Lachapelle portent sur l'influence des sondages globalement; l'objectif censément visé par la loi se rattache à l'inexactitude d'un sondage donné, qui bénéficie à tort d'une perception d'exactitude scientifique en raison du niveau généralement élevé d'exactitude des sondages et du fait que les médias le présentent comme une mesure scientifique. Mais un sondage n'est pas fait dans l'abstrait. Au contraire, il est publié chronologiquement, dans une série de sondages mesurant l'opinion publique durant une campagne électorale. Selon toute vraisemblance, d'autres sondages effectués par d'autres maisons seront diffusés par d'autres médias au cours des trois derniers jours précédant le scrutin. Par conséquent, dans la mesure où un sondage donné est inexact, cette situation sera possiblement évidente aux électeurs qui sont au fait des résultats d'autres sondages, tant ceux publiés immédiatement avant le sprint final que ceux diffusés par les médias durant la même période que le sondage inexact. Plus il y a de sondages durant cette période, moins grand est le risque que les électeurs basent leur décision sur le sondage inexact. De plus, la gravité de l'erreur, élément qui, peut-on supposer, pourrait augmenter l'influence de celle-ci, serait contrebalancée par la facilité accrue avec laquelle cette erreur serait décelée. Au surplus, l'expérience acquise par les électeurs à l'égard des sondages au cours des élections précédentes leur aura démontré que les sondages ont une valeur et une exactitude variables en tant que moyens de prédire l'issue d'un scrutin.

109 Notwithstanding this qualification, I conclude that the purpose of guarding against the possible influence of inaccurate polls late in the election campaign by allowing for a period of criticism and scrutiny immediately prior to election day, is a pressing and substantial objective. As this Court stated in Harvey v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1996] 2 S.C.R. 876, at para. 38, measures that "maintain and enhance the integrity of the electoral process . . . [are] always of pressing and substantial concern in any society that purports to operate in accordance with the tenets of a free and democratic society". The purpose of this particular limitation on expression is to ensure that information which the evidence indicates has an important influence on the choice of at least some voters is presented according to the standards of accuracy which polls are normally expected to attain. When pollsters and the media present information which aspires to certain scientific standards of quality, and which invites reliance by voters in the exercise of their vote, then the government may legitimately be concerned. Such information is qualitatively different from partisan rhetoric, or even journalistic reporting which aspires to certain standards of accuracy and objectivity. Polling information is presented scientifically which reflects relatively settled and defined standards for determining accuracy. To the extent that the votes of some might be distorted as a result of polls being presented in a misleading fashion, this is a pressing and substantial objective.

Malgré cette réserve, je conclus que l'objectif qui consiste à prévenir l'influence possible de sondages inexacts publiés tard dans la campagne électorale par l'instauration d'une période de critique et d'examen immédiatement avant le jour du scrutin est un objectif urgent et réel. Comme l'a dit notre Cour dans Harvey c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Procureur général), [1996] 2 R.C.S. 876, au par. 38, des mesures qui «maint[iennent] et [. . .] renforc[ent] l'intégrité du processus électoral [. . .] [sont] toujours une préoccupation urgente et réelle de toute société qui prétend suivre les préceptes d'une société libre et démocratique». L'objectif de la présente restriction de la liberté d'expression est de faire en sorte que des données qui, selon la preuve, ont une influence importante sur la décision d'au moins certains électeurs soient présentées avec le niveau d'exactitude qu'on attend normalement des sondages. Lorsque les sondeurs et les médias présentent des données qui sont censées respecter certaines normes scientifiques de qualité et auxquelles les électeurs sont invités à se fier dans l'exercice de leur droit de vote, il est alors légitime pour le gouvernement d'être préoccupé. De telles données sont qualitativement différentes de la rhétorique partisane, ou même de la couverture journalistique qui prétend à certaines normes d'exactitude et d'objectivité. L'information touchant les sondages est présentée scientifiquement, ce qui emporte le respect de normes relativement bien établies et définies en matière de détermination de l'exactitude. Dans la mesure où la décision de certains électeurs pourrait être faussée par suite de résultats de sondages présentés d'une manière trompeuse, cet objectif est urgent et réel.

4. Rational Connection

110 The three-day blackout period on the publication of polls will serve, to some degree, the purpose of preventing the use of inaccurate polls by voters. The blackout period gives critics the opportunity to assess the methodological information made available by the pollster and to question the validity of the poll on that basis. To that extent, the ban is rationally connected to the purpose of the legislation. However, s. 322.1 does not prevent an opinion survey from being released without any information as to methodology. Thus, there may be

4. Le lien rationnel

L'embargo de trois jours sur les sondages permet, dans une certaine mesure, de réaliser l'objectif qui consiste à empêcher l'utilisation de sondages inexacts par les électeurs. Elle donne aux critiques la possibilité d'évaluer l'information fournie par le sondeur sur la méthodologie qu'il a utilisée et de mettre en doute la validité du sondage sur ce plan. Dans cette mesure, l'interdiction a un lien rationnel avec l'objet de la loi. Toutefois, l'art. 322.1 n'empêche pas la diffusion d'un sondage qui n'est pas accompagné de renseignements cases where it would be impossible for outside observers to scrutinize or challenge the validity of a poll. In those cases, the most that could be achieved by the blackout period is that the validity of a poll could be undermined by pointing out the failure of the pollster to publish the methodology of the poll. Having mentioned this infirmity in the connection between the purpose of the provision and the means designed to carry out that purpose, I prefer to focus my analysis of the inadequacies of this legislation under the rubric of minimal impairment.

5. Minimal Impairment

Section 322.1 does not minimally impair the right to freedom of expression guaranteed in the Charter and is, therefore, not justified under s. 1. Indeed, it is my view that s. 322.1 is a very crude instrument in serving the purpose articulated by the government in this case. To repeat, that objective is to prevent or minimize the distorting effect of inaccurate opinion polls, and, in particular, opinion polls released late in an election which may have an undue influence on voters and which are not subject to adequate criticism prior to the voter relying on them. As I have stated at the outset, the type of proof required to discharge the burden of justification on the government may vary from case to case depending on the context. In this section, I address a number of contextual factors pertaining to the seriousness and likelihood of the harm, as well as the standard and methods of proof in a case such as this one involving the evaluation of social science evidence and human behaviour. These contextual factors bear on the degree of deference which a court should accord to the particular means chosen to implement a legislative purpose; see RJR-MacDonald, supra, at paras. 132 and 160.

The first factor which could militate in favour of a deferential approach towards the legislation is the vulnerability of the group sought to be protected. In this case, however, the social science méthodologiques. En conséquence, il pourrait survenir des cas où il serait impossible à des observateurs indépendants d'examiner ou de contester la validité d'un sondage. En pareils cas, l'embargo permettrait tout au plus d'attaquer la validité d'un sondage en signalant l'omission du sondeur de publier des renseignements sur la méthodologie utilisée pour effectuer le sondage. Ayant mentionné cette déficience du lien entre l'objectif de la disposition et les moyens conçus pour le réaliser, je préfère faire porter mon analyse sur les lacunes de la mesure législative sous la rubrique de l'atteinte minimale.

5. L'atteinte minimale

111 L'article 322.1 ne porte pas atteinte le moins possible au droit à la liberté d'expression garanti par la Charte et il n'est donc pas justifié au sens de l'article premier. De fait, je suis d'avis que cette disposition est un instrument très grossier pour réaliser l'objectif énoncé par le gouvernement en l'espèce. Je le répète, cet objectif est de prévenir ou de réduire au minimum l'effet déformant des sondages inexacts et, en particulier, des sondages publiés tard dans les campagnes électorales, qui peuvent exercer une influence indue sur les électeurs et qui ne font pas l'objet d'une critique suffisante avant que les électeurs se fondent sur leurs résultats. Comme je l'ai dit au début, le type de preuve requise pour permettre au gouvernement de s'acquitter de son fardeau de justification peut varier d'un cas à l'autre, selon le contexte. Dans la présente section, je m'arrête à divers facteurs contextuels touchant à la gravité du préjudice et à sa vraisemblance, ainsi qu'à la norme et aux méthodes de preuve applicables dans un cas comme celui qui nous occupe, où il faut évaluer les comportements humains et une preuve fondée sur les sciences sociales. Ces facteurs contextuels concernent le degré de retenue dont le tribunal devrait faire montre à l'égard des moyens particuliers choisis pour réaliser un objectif législatif; voir l'arrêt RJR-MacDonald, précité, aux par. 132 et 160.

112 Le premier facteur susceptible de favoriser l'application d'une approche empreinte de retenue vis-à-vis de la loi est la vulnérabilité du groupe que celle-ci vise à protéger. En l'espèce, toutefois, la evidence did not establish that the Canadian voter is a vulnerable group relative to pollsters and the media who publish polls. The presumption in this Court should be that the Canadian voter is a rational actor who can learn from experience and make independent judgments about the value of particular sources of electoral information. As Professor Lachapelle's Study indicates, some voters clearly do consider polls to be of some value in making their electoral decision (supra, at p. 13). However, no evidence has been presented before this Court that voters have suffered from any misapprehensions regarding the accuracy of any single poll. Indeed, the fact that polls conducted contemporaneously yield differing results, or that poll results can fluctuate dramatically over time, suggests that voters have experience with the shortcomings of some polls. Indeed, perhaps the most important contextual factor in the analysis of this case is that polls are widely available throughout the election period in large numbers and from differing media sources. Professor Lachapelle reports, supra, at p. 86, that a total of 59 polls were published during the 1988 national election campaign, 22 of them national in scope, and 37 regional. Voters are constantly exposed to opinion poll results throughout the election and a single inaccurate poll result is likely to be spotted and discounted appropriately.

preuve fondée sur les sciences sociales n'a pas établi que les électeurs canadiens forment un groupe vulnérable par rapport aux sondeurs et aux médias qui publient les sondages. Notre Cour doit présumer que l'électeur canadien est un être rationnel, capable de tirer des leçons de son expérience et de juger de façon indépendante de la valeur de certaines sources d'information électorale. Comme l'indique l'étude du professeur Lachapelle, certains électeurs estiment que les sondages peuvent éclairer leur décision (op. cit., à la p. 15). Toutefois, il n'a été présenté à la Cour aucun élément de preuve établissant que les électeurs ont été victimes de méprise quant à l'exactitude d'un sondage. En effet, le fait que des sondages effectués simultanément produisent des résultats différents ou que les résultats des sondages peuvent fluctuer radicalement dans le temps permet de supposer que les électeurs connaissent les imperfections des sondages. De fait, le facteur contextuel peut-être le plus important dans l'analyse du présent cas est le fait qu'on a accès, durant toute la campagne électorale, à un large éventail de sondages diffusés par des médias différents. D'après le professeur Lachapelle, op. cit., à la p. 100, 59 sondages en tout ont été publiés durant la campagne électorale fédérale de 1988, 22 sondages pancanadiens et 37 régionaux. Les électeurs sont constamment bombardés de sondages pendant toute la campagne, et il est probable qu'un sondage aux résultats inexacts sera repéré et écarté comme il se doit.

113 The government responded to the paucity of evidence relating to this specific issue by stating that it was sufficient "to show a reasoned apprehension of harm. . . . [I]t is sufficient if it is reasonable to presume that there is a casual [sic] relationship between them". It relied on a number of cases for the proposition that even in the face of inconclusive social science evidence, the Court has adopted a deferential approach to determining whether the harm exists and in assessing the justification of the measures chosen to prevent those harms: Butler, supra, RJR-MacDonald, supra, Libman, supra, Keegstra, supra, and Irwin Toy, supra. In my view, the principles developed in those cases are not applicable here for three fundamental reasons. First, the presumptions which the Court made in those cases were not refuted by any contrary logical reasoning. That is not the case here. What I have said in the previous paragraph suggests, as a matter of logic, that there is reason to believe that, notwithstanding the scientific "aura" of polls, the Canadian voter is likely to be aware of a seriously inaccurate poll. Indeed, the more serious the inaccuracy, the more likely the awareness of the error. This is not to say, of course, that some voters might not be misled by an inaccurate poll and cast their vote on what amounts to a misrepresentation. Indeed, that possibility is precisely what I have found constitutes the pressing and substantial objective of this provision. The point here is simply that the claims of widespread or significant harm based on logical inferences derived from surrounding factors are not compelling in the context of factors which refute such logical inferences. As a matter of logical reasoning and inference, I find the government's claims of harm to be controverted by surrounding circumstances which suggest that the Canadian voter is already sensitive to the danger which the government is seeking to remedy.

Le gouvernement a obvié au manque de preuve sur ce point précis en affirmant qu'il suffisait de [TRADUCTION] «démontrer une appréhension raisonnée de préjudice [. . .] [C]ela suffit s'il est raisonnable de présumer l'existence d'un lien de causalité entre les deux». Il a invoqué un certain nombre d'arrêts au soutien de la proposition selon laquelle, même en présence d'une preuve non concluante fondée sur les sciences sociales, la Cour a adopté une approche empreinte de retenue afin de statuer sur l'existence d'un préjudice et, le cas échéant, de décider si les mesures choisies pour prévenir le préjudice étaient justifiés: Buttler, précité, RJR-MacDonald, précité, Libman, précité, Keegstra, précité, et Irwin Toy, précité. À mon avis, les principes élaborés dans ces arrêts ne s'ap-

pliquent pas en l'espèce et ce pour trois raisons fondamentales. Premièrement, les présomptions énoncées par la Cour dans ces affaires n'ont pas été réfutées par un raisonnement logique contraire. Tel n'est pas le cas en l'espèce. Les observations que j'ai formulées au paragraphe précédent suggèrent, d'un point de vue logique, qu'il y a des raisons de croire que, malgré l'«aura» de caractère scientifique des sondages, il est probable que les électeurs canadiens se rendent compte que les résultats d'un sondage sont sérieusement inexacts. À vrai dire, plus l'inexactitude est grande, plus il y a de chances que les électeurs en soient conscients. Ce qui ne veut pas dire, bien entendu, que certains électeurs ne pourraient pas être induits en erreur par un sondage inexact et voter en s'appuyant sur ce qui équivaut à une présentation inexacte des faits. De fait, cette possibilité est précisément ce qui, ai-je conclu, constitue l'objectif urgent et réel visé par cette disposition. Le point ici est simplement que les prétentions relatives à l'existence d'un préjudice répandu ou important, qui sont fondées sur des inférences logiques tirées de facteurs contextuels, ne sont pas convaincantes en présence de facteurs réfutant ces inférences. Du point de vue du raisonnement et de l'inférence logiques, j'estime que les prétentions du gouvernement relatives au préjudice sont contredites par les circonstances, qui tendent à indiquer que les électeurs canadiens sont déjà sensibilisés au danger que le gouvernement cherche à écarter.

Second, there is no suggestion in this case that the interests of the voter and of the pollster are opposed, or that the latter will systematically attempt to manipulate the former. This sets this case apart from cases involving advertisers (such as Irwin Toy, Libman or RJR-MacDonald), where advertisers encouraged choices which served their particular interests. Although it was legal for each of them to pursue those interests, and therefore legitimate to do so, there was a danger of undue manipulation in the first two cases, and of serious health consequences for individual Canadians in the third. Thus, not only was the government dealing with a situation in which expression would be used to manipulate vulnerable groups, but also in which there was a balancing of conflicting but legitimate social interests. None of those elements are present in the case at bar. There is no interest which favours inaccurate or misleading polls being foisted on the Canadian public. The media have an interest in providing poll results which are of interest to Canadians and which uphold their reputation for integrity and accuracy. Pollsters have an interest in maintaining a reputation for accurately measuring public opinion and election results. Although some individual polling firms have close relationships with particular parties which might encourage them, consciously or unconsciously, to tailor their methodologies in favour of their valued client, the polling industry as a whole does not favour one party over another (Lachapelle Study, supra, at p. 133). To the extent that individual polls may reflect a bias, divergent opinion survey results reflecting these biases will be obvious to voters and diminish the scientific aura of those polls. Voters, the third interested group, also desire accurate polls so that if they choose to rely on them, the most accurate and timely polls will be available. Unlike the advertising cases, this is not a case in which the government is intervening against a powerful interest to prevent expression from being a means of manipulation and oppression.

114 Deuxièmement, rien ne tend à indiquer, en l'espèce, que les intérêts des électeurs et des sondeurs sont opposés ou que ces derniers vont tenter systématiquement de manipuler les premiers. Ce fait distingue donc le cas qui nous occupe de ceux qui mettaient en cause des annonceurs (par exemple les affaires Irwin Toy, Libman ou RJR-MacDonald), où les annonceurs encourageaient des choix qui servaient leurs propres intérêts. Même s'il était légal pour chacun d'eux de favoriser ces intérêts et, partant, légitime de le faire, il y avait un risque de manipulation indue dans les deux premiers cas, et un risque de conséquences graves pour la santé des consommateurs canadiens dans le troisième. Par conséquent, non seulement le gouvernement était-il aux prises avec une situation

dans laquelle la liberté d'expression serait utilisée pour manipuler des groupes vulnérables, mais également où des intérêts sociaux opposés mais légitimes devaient être conciliés. Ni l'un ni l'autre de ces éléments n'est présent en l'espèce. Il n'y a en présence aucun intérêt favorisant la présentation à l'électorat canadien de sondages inexacts ou trompeurs. Les médias ont intérêt à diffuser des sondages qui intéressent les Canadiens et qui étayent leur propre réputation d'intégrité et d'exactitude. Pour leur part, les sondeurs ont intérêt à maintenir leur réputation en ce qui concerne la précision avec laquelle ils mesurent l'opinion publique et prédisent l'issue des scrutins. Bien que certaines maisons de sondage soient étroitement associées à l'un ou l'autre des partis politiques, ce qui pourrait les encourager, consciemment ou non, à adapter leur méthodologie de façon à favoriser le client auquel elles tiennent, dans l'ensemble les sondeurs ne favorisent pas un parti plus qu'un autre (Étude Lachapelle, op. cit., à la p. 153). Dans la mesure où certains sondages pourraient refléter un parti pris, leurs résultats divergents — traduisant ce parti pris — seront évidents aux électeurs et diminueront leur aura de caractère scientifique. Les électeurs, le troisième groupe intéressé, désirent eux aussi des sondages exacts afin de pouvoir compter, si c'est là leur volonté, sur les sondages les plus exacts et les plus à-propos. Contrairement aux affaires de publicité, il ne s'agit pas, en l'espèce, d'un cas où le gouvernement intervient contre des intérêts puissants pour empêcher que la liberté d'expression devienne un moyen de manipulation et d'oppression.

115 Third, the reasonable apprehension of harm test has been applied where it has been suggested, though not proven, that the very nature of the expression in question undermines the position of groups or individuals as equal participants in society. This has been accepted, in particular, when it is difficult or impossible to establish scientifically the type of harm in question. The respondent relied particularly on the reasoning in Butler, supra, to justify the reasoned apprehension of harm standard. In my view, the reasoning used in that case is not applicable here. In Butler, the difficulty of scientifically proving the harm in question was not the only feature of the case justifying the application of the reasonable or reasoned apprehension of harm test. First, there was, in that case, "a substantial body of opinion that holds that the portrayal of persons being subjected to degrading or dehumanizing sexual treatment results in harm, particularly to women and therefore to society as a whole" (p. 479). In this regard, at least, the reasonable apprehension of harm test was unnecessary. The difficulty which required the application of the reasonable apprehension of harm test was determining exactly what representations of a sexual nature were degrading or dehumanizing. Sopinka J. quotes, at p. 481, from Wilson J.'s judgment in Towne Cinema Theatres Ltd. v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 494:

Troisièmement, le critère de l'appréhension raisonnable de préjudice a été appliqué dans des cas où l'on affirmait, sans en faire la preuve, que, de par sa nature même, la forme d'expression en cause empêche des individus ou des groupes d'être des membres à part entière de la société. Une telle conclusion est acceptée, en particulier, lorsqu'il est difficile ou impossible de prouver scientifiquement le type de préjudice en cause. Les intimés ont invoqué spécialement le raisonnement énoncé dans Butler, précité, pour justifier la norme fondée sur l'appréhension raisonnée du préjudice. À mon avis, le raisonnement fait dans cette affaire n'est

> The problem is that we know so little of the consequences we are seeking to avoid. Do obscene movies spawn immoral conduct? Do they degrade women? Do they promote violence? The most that can be said, I think, is that the public has concluded that exposure to material which degrades the human dimensions of life to a subhuman or merely physical dimension and thereby contributes to a process of moral desensitization must be harmful in some way. It must therefore be controlled when it gets out of hand, when it becomes "undue".

Sopinka J. devised a test, at p. 485, which stated that depictions of a sexual nature would not be protected by the Charter where society perceived such depictions as likely to "predispos[e] persons to act in an anti-social manner as, for example, the physical or mental mistreatment of women by men". He found the anti-pornography provision in that case to be rationally connected to the valid objective of the legislation because Parliament had a "reasoned apprehension of harm" (p. 504) that sexual representations of women which were degrading affected men's attitudes in such a way that encouraged degrading treatment of women.

pas applicable en l'espèce. Dans Butler, la difficulté de prouver scientifiquement le préjudice en question n'était pas le seul aspect de l'affaire qui justifiait l'application du critère de l'appréhension raisonnée ou raisonnable de préjudice. Premièrement, dans cette affaire, il existait «un important courant d'opinions selon lequel la représentation de personnes qui subissent un traitement sexuel dégradant ou déshumanisant entraîne un préjudice, notamment à l'égard des femmes et, par conséquent, de l'ensemble de la société» (p. 479). À cet égard, du moins, le critère de l'appréhension raisonnable de préjudice était inutile. La difficulté qui commandait l'application de ce critère résidait dans la question de savoir quelles représentations de choses sexuelles étaient dégradantes ou déshumanisantes. À la p. 481, le juge Sopinka a repris les observations faites par le juge Wilson dans Towne Cinema Theatres Ltd. c. La Reine, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 494:

> Le problème est que nous savons très peu de choses sur les conséquences que nous cherchons à éviter. Les films obscènes provoquent-ils une conduite immorale? Sont-ils dégradants pour les femmes? Favorisent-ils la violence? On peut tout au plus affirmer, à mon avis, que le public a conclu que l'exposition à des choses qui dégradent les dimensions humaines de la vie à une dimension moins qu'humaine ou simplement physique doit avoir certaines conséquences nocives. Elle doit par conséquent être refrénée lorsqu'elle dépasse les bornes, lorsqu'elle devient «indue».

Dans Butler, précité, à la p. 485, le juge Sopinka a conçu un critère indiquant que les représentations sexuelles ne seraient pas protégées par la Charte lorsque la société percevrait celles-ci comme étant susceptibles de «prédispose[r] une personne à agir de façon antisociale comme, par exemple, le fait pour un homme de maltraiter physiquement ou mentalement une femme». Il a conclu que la disposition de lutte contre la pornographie en cause dans cette affaire avait un lien rationnel avec l'objectif valide visé par la loi, parce que le Parlement avait «une appréhension raisonnée du préjudice» (p. 504), que les représentations sexuelles avilissant les femmes modifiaient les attitudes des hommes au point d'encourager le traitement dégradant des femmes.

116 In the context of that decision, there was substantial evidence that depiction of degrading treatment of women leads, to an indeterminate extent, to degrading treatment of women in society. Although the precise nature of the link between depiction and attitudes, and from attitudes to actual harmful behaviour towards women, could not be conclusively proven, there was evidence that this harm actually occurred. The presumption also accords with certain logical inferences and shared perceptions of human behaviour which we might simply call "common sense". Sopinka J. concluded that the line between permissibly and impermissibly degrading representations of sexuality should be based on a collective social understanding of what Canadians believe could lead to anti-social behaviour. While courts should not use common sense as a cover for unfounded or controversial assumptions, it may be appropriately employed in judicial reasoning where the possibility of harm is within the everyday knowledge and experience of Canadians, or where factual determination and value judgments overlap. Canadians presume that expressions which degrade individuals based on their gender, ethnicity, or other personal factors may lead to harm being visited upon them because this is within most people's everyday experience. In part, this is because of what we know and perhaps have experienced in our own lives about degrading representations of our personal identity. In part, it is because we know that groups which have historically been disadvantaged in economic or social terms are vulnerable to such expression. In part, it is because our values encourage us to be solicitous of vulnerable groups and to err on the side of caution where their welfare is at stake. In part, it is based on the short logical leap that degrading representations, and exhortation of certain views which degrade the humanity of others, can beget that behaviour. It is also because we know that such representations and exhortations can themselves be harmful for those who are forced to endure the heightened risk of harm.

Dans le contexte de cette décision, il y avait une preuve considérable indiquant que le fait de représenter des traitements avilissants pour les femmes entraîne, dans une mesure indéterminée, de tels traitements contre les femmes dans la société. Quoique la nature précise du lien entre ces représentations et les attitudes, et entre les attitudes et un comportement préjudiciable concret envers les femmes, ne pouvait être établie de façon concluante, il y avait des preuves que ce préjudice se produisait réellement. La présomption concorde également avec certaines inférences logiques et certaines perceptions partagées concernant le comportement humain, qu'on pourrait appeler simplement le «sens commun». Le juge Sopinka a conclu que la ligne de démarcation entre les représentations dégradantes acceptables et les représentations dégradantes inacceptables des choses sexuelles devait être fondée sur la perception collective qu'a la société canadienne des choses susceptibles d'entraîner un comportement antisocial. Même si les tribunaux ne doivent pas invoquer le sens commun pour masquer des suppositions sans fondement ou controversées, ils peuvent toutefois l'utiliser à juste titre dans leur raisonnement lorsque la possibilité de préjudice relève des connaissances et expériences quotidiennes des Canadiens ou lorsqu'il y a chevauchement de constatations des faits et de jugements de valeur. Les Canadiens présument que les formes d'expression qui avilissent des individus du fait de leur sexe, de leur origine ethnique ou d'autres caractéristiques personnelles peuvent finir par leur être préjudiciables, parce qu'il s'agit d'une situation qu'ils sont pour la plupart à même de constater dans leur quotidien. Cela s'explique, en partie, par le fait que chacun d'entre nous a eu connaissance, dans sa propre vie, de l'effet de représentations dégradantes sur son identité personnelle ou en a peut-être fait l'expérience, et, en partie, par le fait que nous savons que les groupes qui ont été défavorisés dans le passé sur le plan économique ou social sont vulnérables à cette forme d'expression. Cela s'explique aussi par le fait que nos valeurs nous encouragent à faire montre de sollicitude à l'endroit des groupes vulnérables et à pécher par excès de prudence quand leur bien-être est en jeu. Cela s'explique en outre en partie par la facilité avec laquelle il est possible

As McLachlin J. put it in Keegstra, supra, at pp. 857-58:

> To view hate propaganda as "victimless" in the absence of any proof that it moved its listeners to hatred is to discount the wrenching impact that it may have on members of the target group themselves. For Jews, many of whom have personally been touched by the terrible consequences of the degeneration of a seemingly civilized society into unparalleled barbarism, statements such as Keegstra's may raise very real fears of history repeating itself. Moreover, it is simply not possible to assess with any precision the effects that expression of a particular message will have on all those who are ultimately exposed to it. . . . These considerations undermine the notion that we can draw a bright line between provisions which are justifiable because they require proof that hatred actually resulted, and provisions which are unjustifiable because they require only an intent to promote hatred.

Common sense reflects common understandings. In these cases dealing with pornography and hate speech, common understandings were accepted by the Court because they are widely accepted by Canadians as facts, and because they are integrally related to our values, which are the bedrock of any s. 1 justification. As a result, the Court did not demand a scientific demonstration or the submission of definitive social science evidence to establish that the line drawn by Parliament was perfectly drawn.

In my view, the case at bar does not approach this category of reasoning. The Canadian voter is not a historically vulnerable or disadvantaged group. Nor, as has been explained above, is the autonomy or dignity of any single group under attack from, or even facing the contrary interests of, another potentially more powerful group. Nor de conclure que les représentations dégradantes et la défense de certaines idées qui avilissent autrui peuvent engendrer un tel comportement. Cela s'explique également par le fait que nous savons que de telles représentations et idées peuvent elles-mêmes être préjudiciables à ceux qui sont obligés de supporter le risque accru de préjudice. Comme l'a dit le juge McLachlin dans l'arrêt Keegstra, précité, aux pp. 857 et 858:

> Dire que la propagande haineuse «ne fait pas de victime» quand il n'est pas prouvé qu'elle a incité ses destinataires à la haine c'est faire abstraction de l'effet déchirant qu'elle peut avoir sur les membres du groupe cible eux-mêmes. Chez les juifs, nombre desquels ont été personnellement touchés par les conséquences terribles de la dégénérescence d'une société apparemment civilisée vers une barbarie sans parallèle, des déclarations comme celles de Keegstra peuvent faire naître des craintes très réelles que l'Histoire se répète. Par ailleurs, il n'est simplement pas possible de déterminer avec exactitude les effets que l'expression d'un message donné aura sur tous ceux qui finiront par l'entendre. [. . .] Ces considérations mettent en doute la notion que nous pouvons tirer une ligne de démarcation très nette entre les dispositions qui sont justifiables parce qu'elles exigent la preuve que la haine a réellement été provoquée et celles qui sont injustifiables parce qu'elles n'exigent que l'intention de fomenter la haine.

Le sens commun reflète les perceptions communes. Dans les affaires portant sur la pornographie et la propagande haineuse, la Cour a accepté les perceptions communes parce qu'elles sont largement considérées par les Canadiens comme des faits et parce qu'elles font partie intégrante de nos valeurs, qui sont le fondement de toute justification conformément à l'article premier. En conséquence, la Cour n'a pas exigé une démonstration scientifique ou la présentation d'une preuve décisive fondée sur les sciences sociales pour établir que la ligne de démarcation tirée par le législateur était tout à fait appropriée.

117 À mon avis, ce type de raisonnement ne peut être fait dans le présent cas. Les électeurs canadiens ne constituent pas, historiquement, un groupe vulnérable ou défavorisé. Pas plus d'ailleurs, comme il a été expliqué précédemment, que l'autonomie ou la dignité de quelque groupe que ce soit n'est attaquée par un autre groupe potentiellement can it be said that there is a shared understanding amongst Canadians that a single inaccurate poll will mislead Canadians to an extent which, in the words of Wilson J. in Towne Cinema Theatres, is "undue". I am, therefore, unable to accept that the harm which the government is seeking to prevent affects a large number of voters, or that such possible distortions are significant to the conduct of an election, without more specific and conclusive evidence to that effect. Although there is a pressing and substantial objective in this case because there is a clear possibility that some voters might be misled by such polls, I am not willing to go further and accept that the harm in this case warrants a significant level of deference to the government in fashioning means which trespass on the freedom of expression.

plus puissant, ni même confrontée aux intérêts opposés d'un tel groupe. En outre, il est impossible d'affirmer qu'il existe, au sein de la population canadienne, une perception commune voulant qu'un seul sondage inexact puisse tromper les Canadiens dans une mesure qui, pour reprendre le terme employé par le juge Wilson dans l'arrêt Towne Cinema Theatres, est «indue». Je ne puis donc accepter que le préjudice que le gouvernement cherche à prévenir affecte un grand nombre d'électeurs ou que de telles déformations potentielles de la réalité ont une influence importante sur le déroulement des élections, sans disposer de preuves plus précises et concluantes à cet effet. Même si, en l'espèce, il existe un objectif urgent et réel du fait qu'il est nettement possible que certains électeurs puissent être induits en erreur par de tels sondages, je ne suis pas disposé à aller plus loin et à admettre que, dans le présent cas, le préjudice justifie de faire montre d'un degré important de retenue envers le gouvernement pour les mesures transgressant la liberté d'expression qu'il a conçues.

118 In determining whether a restriction is justified under s. 1 as minimally impairing the freedom of expression, this Court has stated (in RJR-MacDonald, supra, at para. 160):

> As the second step in the proportionality analysis, the government must show that the measures at issue impair the right of free expression as little as reasonably possible in order to achieve the legislative objective. The impairment must be "minimal", that is, the law must be carefully tailored so that rights are impaired no more than necessary. The tailoring process seldom admits of perfection and the courts must accord some leeway to the legislator. If the law falls within a range of reasonable alternatives, the courts will not find it overbroad merely because they can conceive of an alternative which might better tailor objective to infringement. . . . On the other hand, if the government fails to explain why a significantly less intrusive and equally effective measure was not chosen, the law may fail. [Emphasis added.]

Relativement à la question de savoir si une restriction est justifiée au sens de l'article premier parce qu'elle constitue une atteinte minimale à la liberté d'expression, notre Cour a dit ceci (dans RJR-MacDonald, précité, au par. 160):

> À la deuxième étape de l'analyse de la proportionnalité, le gouvernement doit établir que les mesures en cause restreignent le droit à la liberté d'expression aussi peu que cela est raisonnablement possible aux fins de la réalisation de l'objectif législatif. La restriction doit être «minimale», c'est-à-dire que la loi doit être soigneusement adaptée de façon à ce que l'atteinte aux droits ne dépasse pas ce qui est nécessaire. Le processus d'adaptation est rarement parfait et les tribunaux doivent accorder une certaine latitude au législateur. Si la loi se situe à l'intérieur d'une gamme de mesures raisonnables, les tribunaux ne concluront pas qu'elle a une portée trop générale simplement parce qu'ils peuvent envisager une solution de rechange qui pourrait être mieux adaptée à l'objectif et à la violation [. . .] Par contre, si le gouvernement omet d'expliquer pourquoi il n'a pas choisi une mesure beaucoup moins attentatoire et tout aussi efficace, la loi peut être déclarée non valide. [Je souligne.]

The application of these words is largely informed by the contextual factors which I have already canvassed. In my view, little deference should be shown in this case where the contextual factors mentioned above indicate that the government has not established that the harm which it is seeking to prevent is widespread or significant.

L'application de ces remarques dépend en grande partie des facteurs contextuels que j'ai déjà exa-

The provision in this case is also overbroad and underbroad in relation to the purpose of the legislation. The ban imposed in this case is overbroad because it prohibits in the final three days of an election campaign the publication and use by voters of all those polls which would meet the usual standards of accuracy. Its underbreadth has already been mentioned in the rational connection analysis: the blackout period may not adequately disabuse voters of an erroneous impression left by a poll which did not disclose its methodology to critics or the public. Indeed, as a matter of logic, the utility of the ban as a period of response and criticism is gravely undermined by the failure to require the publication of methodological information. Both the Lortie Commission, supra, at p. 464, and Professor Lachapelle, supra, at pp. 154-55, recommended that methodological information be disclosed in addition to a blackout period. In his affidavit before this Court (Case on Appeal, at pp. 92 et seq.), Professor Lachapelle, at para. 29, states:

> Even if sufficient information is available to assess the reliability of the survey, or if the survey results are inaccurately reported, an adequate period of time is required to effectively challenge or correct the published report. If an accurate public opinion survey is released on the day before an election, there will be no meaningful opportunity for public debate or response.

This evidence supports the view that the mandatory disclosure of methodological information combined with a blackout period fulfils the government's purpose more effectively than the mandatory disclosure alone. What we are dealing with here, however, is a blackout period without a mandatory disclosure of methodology. In assessing whether this provision is narrowly tailored, the minés de manière approfondie. Je suis d'avis qu'il convient de faire montre de peu de retenue dans la présente affaire, car les facteurs contextuels précités indiquent que le gouvernement n'a pas établi que le préjudice qu'il cherche à prévenir est répandu ou important.

119 De plus, la disposition en litige a une portée à la fois trop générale et trop limitée relativement à l'objectif de la loi. L'interdiction imposée en l'espèce est trop générale en ce qu'elle a pour effet d'interdire, durant les trois derniers jours des campagnes électorales, la publication et l'utilisation par les électeurs de tous les sondages qui respectent les normes habituelles d'exactitude. Pour ce qui est de sa portée trop limitée, elle a déjà été signalée dans l'analyse du lien rationnel: il est possible que l'embargo ne dissipe pas suffisamment chez les électeurs l'impression erronée laissée par un sondage dont la méthodologie n'a pas été communiquée aux critiques ou au public. De fait, sur le plan de la logique, l'utilité de l'embargo en tant que période de réaction et de critique est sérieusement amoindrie par l'omission d'exiger la publication de renseignements sur la méthodologie utilisée. Tant la Commission Lortie, op. cit., à la p. 482, que le professeur Lachapelle, op. cit., aux pp. 178, 180 et 181, ont recommandé, en plus d'un embargo, la communication des données méthodologiques. Dans son affidavit produit devant notre Cour (dossier, aux pp. 92 et suiv.), le professeur Lachapelle dit ceci, au par. 29:

> [TRADUCTION] Même s'il y a suffisamment d'information pour apprécier la fiabilité du sondage, ou si les résultats du sondage ne sont pas rapportés de manière inexacte, une période suffisante est nécessaire pour permettre de contester efficacement le reportage publié ou pour le corriger. Si un sondage d'opinion exact est diffusé le jour qui précède le scrutin, il n'y aura pas de possibilité réelle d'en débattre publiquement ou d'y réagir.

Ce témoignage étaye le point de vue selon lequel la communication obligatoire des données méthodologiques, conjuguée à un embargo, permet de réaliser plus efficacement l'objectif du gouvernement que la seule communication obligatoire. Cependant, nous sommes en présence d'un embargo sans communication obligatoire de la méthodologie. Pour déterminer si cette disposition obvious alternative which Parliament could have adopted was a mandatory disclosure of methodological information without a publication ban. Indeed, British Columbia has enacted just such a measure, as has the State of New York in the United States (Election Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 106, s. 235; NY statute cited in Lachapelle Study, supra, at p. 51). Although such a provision would still leave the door open to inaccurate poll results published immediately prior to the election having some impact, that possibility would be significantly reduced both by virtue of the reader's initial access to those methodological data, and by the opportunity for rapid response by parties whose interests are prejudiced by the inaccurate poll. The government has not explained, however, how or whether this danger is any less than that of a poll published prior to the three-day blackout period without methodological data which is effectively immune from the reasoned criticism which the blackout period purports to allow. The failure to address or explain the reason for not adopting a significantly less intrusive measure which appears as effective as that actually adopted weighs heavily against the justifiability of this provision.

a été conçue strictement, la solution de rechange évidente qui aurait pu être retenue par le législateur est la communication obligatoire des données méthodologiques sans interdiction de publication. De fait, la Colombie-Britannique a édicté une telle mesure, tout comme l'a fait l'État de New York (Election Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 106, art. 235; la loi de l'État de New York citée dans l'Étude Lachapelle, op. cit., à la p. 59). Bien qu'une telle disposition laisse encore subsister la possibilité que la publication des résultats d'un sondage inexact immédiatement avant le jour du scrutin ait quelque influence, cette possibilité serait considérablement amoindrie du fait que les électeurs auraient accès aux données méthodologiques et que les partis auxquels ce sondage serait préjudiciable auraient la possibilité de répliquer rapidement. Le gouvernement n'a toutefois pas expliqué en quoi ce danger est moins grand que celui créé par un sondage qui est publié avant l'embargo, sans information méthodologique, et qui échappe dans les faits à la critique raisonnée que l'embargo est censé permettre. L'omission d'exposer ou d'expliquer la raison pour laquelle on a écarté une mesure beaucoup moins attentatoire, qui semble aussi efficace que celle effectivement prise, milite fortement contre la reconnaissance du caractère justifiable de cette disposition.

120 The respondent countered this concern by suggesting that a law requiring pollsters to publish methodological information along with the poll results is actually more intrusive on the freedom of expression than the three-day ban. I would reject this argument. Without making any ruling on the constitutionality of such a measure, I would simply refer to the words of McLachlin J. in RJR-MacDonald, supra, at para. 163: "As this Court has observed before, it will be more difficult to justify a complete ban on a form of expression than a partial ban: Ramsden v. Peterborough (City), [[1993] 2 S.C.R. 1084], at pp. 1105-6; Ford v. Quebec (Attorney General), [[1988] 2 S.C.R. 712], at pp. 772-73." Whether a ban over a three-day period can properly be described as a "complete ban" is a subtle point. It is clear, however, that a provision which prohibited the publication of opinion polls without methodological information

L'intimé a répondu à cet argument en affirmant qu'une loi obligeant les sondeurs à publier des données méthodologiques en même temps que les résultats du sondage porte dans les faits davantage atteinte à la liberté d'expression que l'interdiction de publication pendant trois jours. Je rejette cet argument. Sans me prononcer sur la constitutionnalité d'une telle mesure, je citerai simplement les propos suivants du juge McLachlin dans RJR-MacDonald, précité, au par. 163: «Comme notre Cour l'a déjà fait remarquer, il sera plus difficile de justifier l'interdiction totale d'une forme d'expression que l'interdiction partielle: Ramsden c. Peterborough (Ville), [[1993] 2 R.C.S. 1084], aux pp. 1105 et 1106, et Ford c. Québec (Procureur général), [[1988] 2 R.C.S. 712], aux pp. 772 et 773.» La question de savoir si une interdiction de trois jours peut à juste titre être qualifiée d'«interdiction totale» est un point subtil. Il est toutefois would be less intrusive to freedom of expression than a ban on publication of polling information during a crucial period. In the first case, the speaker has a choice: by complying with the prescribed conditions, he or she may engage in the speech. In the case of the ban, the speaker has no such choice: the information may not be expressed regardless of any choice the speaker makes. I emphasize in saying this, that I do not here pronounce on the constitutionality of such a provision. I am merely rejecting the respondent's claim that the current legislative provision is the least intrusive measure which the government could have chosen to achieve its purpose.

évident qu'une disposition qui interdirait la publication des sondages non accompagnés de données méthodologiques porterait moins atteinte à la liberté d'expression qu'une interdiction de publier de l'information touchant les sondages durant une période cruciale. Dans le premier cas, celui qui désire s'exprimer a un choix à faire: s'il choisit de se plier aux conditions prescrites, il peut s'exprimer. Dans le cas de l'interdiction, il n'a pas ce choix: l'information ne peut être communiquée, peu importe ce qu'il aurait décidé. En disant cela, je tiens à préciser que je ne me prononce pas sur la constitutionnalité d'une telle disposition. Je rejette simplement l'argument de l'intimé selon lequel la disposition existante est la mesure la moins attentatoire que le gouvernement pouvait retenir pour réaliser son objectif.

The respondent pointed to the presence of similar blackout periods on public opinion surveys in other democratic countries to support its argument that this measure fell within the permissible range of alternatives. I do not find this evidence to be highly persuasive. Although a number of countries do have such provisions, most democratic countries have minimal or no restrictions on polling information; Lachapelle Study, supra, at pp. 52-62. This may be contrasted with the evidence before the Court in Butler, supra, at p. 497, to the effect that most free and democratic countries had legislation similar to that under scrutiny. Moreover, some of the bans on publication of polling information in other countries extend for very long periods, even the entire election campaign. This suggests that the purpose of those bans may be something other than ensuring that polls are as accurate as possible, which is the only permissible objective under our Charter. Where the approach in other countries is variable, or is in some relevant way different from the legislation under scrutiny in Canada, then those legislative measures must be examined more closely to determine their precise purpose and whether those purposes are of persuasive force here. Not only may the social context be quite different from that in Canada, but also the legal context within which measures restricting the freedom of speech are evaluated may be dissimilar. In the absence of some consensus in the international context, or of evidence explaining why the provisions adopted in some other free and democratic countries are compelling given the situation in Canada, the experience of some other countries as a justification under s. 1 should not be accorded great weight. This is no more than to say that the example of those countries which do not have such provisions is of as much weight in evaluating whether the legislation is justified as those which do. The key question, once the divergence of approach in the international community is established, is whether the values of Canadian society — of which the Charter itself forms a part — are more in accord with one approach rather than the other. The respondent has not taken this extra step in his analysis of those countries which do have publication bans, and therefore, I find this evidence neutral to the outcome of this case.

121 L'intimé a invoqué l'existence d'embargos semblables sur les sondages d'opinion dans d'autres pays démocratiques au soutien de son argument que cette mesure fait partie des solutions permises. Je ne trouve pas cette preuve très convaincante. Même si un certain nombre de pays ont effectivement adopté de telles dispositions, la plupart des pays démocratiques ne limitent que très peu ou pas du tout l'information touchant les sondages: Étude Lachapelle, op. cit., aux pp. 61 à 72. On peut comparer cette preuve avec celle qui a été soumise à notre Cour dans Butler, précité, à la p. 497, et qui établissait que la plupart des pays libres et démocratiques possédaient des textes législatifs de la nature de celui en litige dans cette affaire. En outre, les interdictions de publication visant l'information touchant les sondages en vigueur dans certains pays sont de très longue durée, s'étendant dans certains cas à toute la campagne électorale. Ce fait suggère qu'ils n'ont peut-être pas pour objet d'assurer la publication des sondages les plus exacts possible, seul objectif autorisé sous le régime de notre Charte. Quand la solution adoptée dans d'autres pays varie ou est, sous quelque aspect pertinent, différente de la loi contestée au Canada, les mesures législatives étrangères doivent être étudiées plus attentivement afin de dégager leur objectif précis et de déterminer si cet objectif

a une valeur persuasive au Canada. Non seulement le contexte social peut être complètement différent de celui qui existe au Canada, mais le contexte juridique dans lequel les mesures restreignant la liberté d'expression sont évaluées peut lui aussi être différent. En l'absence d'un certain consensus au niveau international ou de preuve expliquant pourquoi les dispositions adoptées dans d'autres pays libres et démocratiques ont une valeur persuasive compte tenu de la situation canadienne, il n'y pas lieu d'accorder beaucoup de poids à l'expérience de quelques autres pays en tant que justification dans le cadre de l'article premier. Cela revient tout au plus à dire que, pour décider si le texte de loi est justifié, l'exemple des pays qui ne possèdent pas de telles dispositions a autant de poids que celui des pays qui n'en ont pas. La question clé, une fois établie la divergence des solutions retenues dans le reste du monde, est de savoir si les valeurs de la société canadienne — dont la Charte elle-même fait partie — s'accordent mieux avec une solution plutôt qu'une autre. L'intimé n'a pas fait cette démarche supplémentaire dans son analyse de la situation des pays qui ont établi des interdictions de publication, et, par conséquent, j'estime que cette preuve a un effet neutre sur l'issue du présent pourvoi.

122 In summary, I find that the blackout period does not minimally impair the freedom of expression guaranteed in the Charter, and is therefore not justified under s. 1. The harm which the legislature is seeking to prevent does not warrant a high degree of deference to the legislature. Unlike the situation in Butler, Ross, Keegstra, and Irwin Toy, the government is not dealing with a vulnerable group which is in danger of manipulation or abuse because of an essential opposition of interests, or because of the nature of the speech itself. There were other measures which would have achieved the government's purpose equally well or even better than the publication ban, and which would have been far less intrusive to the freedom of expression. Finally, the experience of the international community is inconclusive.

En résumé, je suis d'avis que l'embargo n'est pas une atteinte minimale à la liberté d'expression garantie par la Charte et qu'il n'est donc pas justifié au sens de l'article premier. Le préjudice que le législateur cherche à prévenir ne justifie pas de faire montre d'un degré élevé de retenue envers ce dernier. Contrairement à la situation dans les arrêts Butler, Ross, Keegstra et Irwin Toy, le gouvernement n'est pas concerné par un groupe vulnérable, qui risque d'être victime de manipulation ou d'abus en raison d'un choc fondamental d'intérêts ou de la nature du discours en cause lui-même. Il existe d'autres mesures qui auraient permis de réaliser l'objectif du gouvernement et ce tout aussi bien, voire encore mieux que l'interdiction de publication, et qui auraient été beaucoup moins attentatoires à la liberté d'expression. Finalement, l'expérience au niveau international n'est pas concluante.

6. Proportionality Between the Deleterious Effects and the Benefits of the Ban

The third stage of the proportionality analysis was originally formulated in Oakes, supra, at p. 140, as ensuring a general proportionality between the measures and the pressing and substantial objective of the provision under scrutiny:

> Even if an objective is of sufficient importance, and the first two elements of the proportionality test are satisfied, it is still possible that, because of the severity of the deleterious effects of a measure on individuals or groups, the measure will not be justified by the purposes it is intended to serve. The more severe the deleterious effects of a measure, the more important the objective must be if the measure is to be reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

This formulation has been criticized as merely duplicating what is already accomplished by the first two stages of the proportionality analysis. As a practical matter, this is confirmed by the jurisprudence of this Court: there appears to be no case in which a measure was justified by the first two steps of the proportionality analysis, but then found unjustified by an application of the third step.

More recent cases have reformulated the third stage of the proportionality analysis in order to give it a distinct scope and function. In Dagenais, supra, at pp. 887-88, Lamer C.J. articulated the test as follows:

> . . . I believe that the third step of the second branch of the Oakes test requires both that the underlying objective of a measure and the salutary effects that actually result from its implementation be proportional to the deleterious effects the measure has on fundamental rights and freedoms. A legislative objective may be pressing and substantial, the means chosen may be rationally connected to that objective, and less rights-impairing alternatives may not be available. Nonetheless, even if the importance of the objective itself (when viewed in the abstract) outweighs the deleterious effects on protected rights, it is still possible that the actual sal-

6. La proportionnalité entre les effets préjudiciables et les effets bénéfiques de l'interdiction

123 La troisième étape de l'analyse de la proportionnalité a été formulée pour la première fois dans l'arrêt Oakes, précité, à la p. 140, comme moyen d'assurer une proportionnalité générale entre les mesures et l'objectif urgent et réel de la disposition examinée:

> Même si un objectif est suffisamment important et même si on a satisfait aux deux premiers éléments du critère de proportionnalité, il se peut encore qu'en raison de la gravité de ses effets préjudiciables sur des particuliers ou sur des groupes, la mesure ne soit pas justifiée par les objectifs qu'elle est destinée à servir. Plus les effets préjudiciables d'une mesure sont graves, plus l'objectif doit être important pour que la mesure soit raisonnable et que sa justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Cette formulation a été critiquée parce qu'elle ne ferait que reprendre ce qui est déjà accompli par les deux premières étapes de l'analyse de la proportionnalité. Dans la pratique, cette critique est confirmée par la jurisprudence de notre Cour: il ne semble pas y avoir d'affaire où une mesure dont la justification a été démontrée aux deux premières étapes de l'analyse de la proportionnalité a ensuite été déclarée injustifiée au terme de la troisième étape.

124 Dans des arrêts plus récents, la troisième étape de l'analyse de la proportionnalité a été reformulée pour lui conférer un champ d'application et un rôle distincts. Dans Dagenais, précité, le juge en chef Lamer a énoncé le critère dans les termes suivants, aux pp. 887 et 888:

> . . . j'estime que la troisième étape du second volet du critère formulé dans Oakes nécessite que l'objectif qui sous-tend la mesure et les effets bénéfiques qui résultent en fait de sa mise en application soient proportionnels à ses effets préjudiciables sur les libertés et droits fondamentaux. Un objectif législatif peut être urgent et réel, le moyen choisi peut avoir un lien rationnel avec cet objectif, et il se peut qu'il n'existe aucune autre mesure portant moins atteinte aux droits. Néanmoins, et bien que l'importance de l'objectif même (lorsqu'il est considéré dans l'abstrait) l'emporte sur les effets préjudiciables sur les droits garantis, il reste possible que les effets utary effects of the legislation will not be sufficient to justify these negative effects. [Emphasis in original.]

He went on, at p. 889, to state:

I would, therefore, rephrase the third part of the Oakes test as follows: there must be a proportionality between the deleterious effects of the measures which are responsible for limiting the rights or freedoms in question and the objective, and there must be a proportionality between the deleterious and the salutary effects of the measures. [Emphasis in original.]

In my view, the first part of this reformulation is already achieved by virtue of the first two parts of the Oakes proportionality test. The subsequent development of the Oakes test, particularly the broad contextual approach which has been adopted by this Court since the decision in the Edmonton Journal case, ensures that the rational connection and the minimal impairment tests are sufficient to determine whether there is a proportionality between the deleterious effects of a measure, and its objective. Once a determination had been made that there is a pressing and substantial objective behind the infringing measure which may justify some infringement of the Charter, then the first and second stages of the Oakes proportionality analysis assess whether there is a coherence and an efficiency between those measures and the justified purpose. The relevant efficiency measured at the second stage of the proportionality analysis is whether it infringes on the Charter right to the minimum extent possible while still fulfilling the justified purpose.

125 The third stage of the proportionality analysis performs a fundamentally distinct role. Determining whether there is a pressing and substantial objective behind the provision under scrutiny necessarily occurs in the abstract, before the specific nature of the legislation and its impact on the Charter right has been analysed. Of course, ascertaining that objective requires a consideration of what the provision actually does, as well as documentary evidence as to what the legislator thought it was doing. Moreover, the relevant purpose is the purpose specific to the provision which limits the Charter right. But the purpose must, nevertheless, be articulated abstractly because a purpose is a bénéfiques réels de la disposition législative ne soient pas suffisants pour justifier ces effets négatifs. [Souligné dans l'original.]

Il a ajouté ceci, à la p. 889:

Je reprendrais donc la troisième partie du critère Oakes comme suit: il doit y avoir proportionnalité entre les effets préjudiciables des mesures restreignant un droit ou une liberté et l'objectif, et il doit y avoir proportionnalité entre les effets préjudiciables des mesures et leurs effets bénéfiques. [Souligné dans l'original.]

À mon avis, l'objet de la première partie de cette reformulation est déjà accompli par les deux premiers éléments du critère de la proportionnalité de l'arrêt Oakes. Le développement ultérieur du critère établi dans Oakes, en particulier l'analyse largement contextuelle retenue par notre Cour depuis l'arrêt Edmonton Journal, fait en sorte que les critères du lien rationnel et de l'atteinte minimale sont suffisants pour permettre de décider s'il y a proportionnalité entre les effets préjudiciables d'une mesure et l'objectif visé par celle-ci. Une fois qu'il est jugé que la mesure attentatoire vise un objectif urgent et réel susceptible de justifier une certaine atteinte à la Charte, les première et deuxième étapes de l'analyse de la proportionnalité prévue par l'arrêt Oakes permettent alors de statuer sur la cohérence et l'efficacité de la mesure et de l'objectif justifié. Pour mesurer l'efficacité à la deuxième étape de l'analyse de la proportionnalité, on se demande si la mesure porte le moins possible atteinte à un droit garanti par la Charte tout en permettant de réaliser l'objectif justifié.

La troisième étape de l'analyse de la proportionnalité joue un rôle fondamentalement distinct. L'examen de la disposition en cause, afin de déterminer si elle repose sur un objectif urgent et réel, se fait nécessairement dans l'abstrait, avant l'analyse de la nature précise de la mesure législative et de son effet sur le droit garanti par la Charte. Évidemment, il faut, pour dégager cet objectif, étudier l'effet concret de la disposition ainsi que la preuve documentaire concernant l'effet que recherchait le législateur. De plus, l'objectif pertinent de la disposition est l'objectif particulier qui restreint le droit garanti par la Charte. Cependant, l'objectif doit néanmoins être formulé en termes abstraits, goal or outcome which, by definition, may be achieved in different ways. Before the specific effects of the measure in question have been scrutinized and concretized through the first two steps of the proportionality analysis, it is often difficult to assess, in the abstract, the possible impact on Charter freedoms of a laudable legislative objective. The focus of the first and second steps of the proportionality analysis is not the relationship between the measures and the Charter right in question, but rather the relationship between the ends of the legislation and the means employed. Although the minimal impairment stage of the proportionality test necessarily takes into account the extent to which a Charter value is infringed, the ultimate standard is whether the Charter right is impaired as little as possible given the validity of the legislative purpose. The third stage of the proportionality analysis provides an opportunity to assess, in light of the practical and contextual details which are elucidated in the first and second stages, whether the benefits which accrue from the limitation are proportional to its deleterious effects as measured by the values underlying the Charter. As Professor Jamie Cameron states ("The Past, Present, and Future of Expressive Freedom Under the Charter" (1997), 35 Osgoode Hall L.J. 1, at p. 66):

> . . . this branch of the section 1 analysis asks an important question. By assessing the proportionality of its deleterious effects and salutary benefits it considers, in direct and explicit terms, whether the consequences of the violation are too great when measured against the benefits that may be achieved. As such, it is the only part of the current analysis to acknowledge the harm or cost of justifiable limits: that a constitutional right has been violated.

The deleterious effects which may arise from an infringement of the Charter may be general, in the sense that any serious infringement of the right to freedom of expression may impair the climate of free exchange of ideas which is an essential value of our society; or the deleterious effects may be specific, in that a particular benefit which would car un objectif est un but ou un résultat qui, par définition, peut être réalisé de diverses manières. Avant que les effets précis de la mesure en question aient été examinés à fond puis dégagés à l'issue des deux premières étapes de l'analyse de la proportionnalité, il est souvent difficile d'apprécier, dans l'abstrait, l'effet possible d'un objectif législatif louable sur des libertés garanties par la Charte. Les première et deuxième étapes de l'analyse de la proportionnalité ne portent pas sur le rapport entre les mesures et le droit en question garanti par la Charte, mais plutôt sur le rapport entre les objectifs de la loi et les moyens employés. Même si l'étape de l'atteinte minimale du critère de la proportionnalité tient nécessairement compte de la mesure dans laquelle il est porté atteinte à une valeur prévue par la Charte, la norme qui doit être appliquée en bout de ligne consiste à se demander s'il est porté atteinte le moins possible au droit garanti par la Charte compte tenu de la validité de l'objectif législatif. La troisième étape de l'analyse de la proportionnalité donne l'occasion d'apprécier, à la lumière des détails d'ordre pratique et contextuel qui ont été dégagés aux première et deuxième étapes, si les avantages découlant de la limitation sont proportionnels aux effets préjudiciables, mesurés au regard des valeurs consacrées par la Charte. Comme le dit le professeur Jamie Cameron, dans «The Past, Present, and Future of Expressive Freedom Under the Charter» (1997), 35 Osgoode Hall L.J. 1, à la p. 66:

> [TRADUCTION] . . . ce volet de l'analyse fondée sur l'article premier pose une question importante. L'évaluation de la proportionnalité des effets préjudiciables et des effets bénéfiques de la violation soulève, directement et explicitement, la question de savoir si les conséquences de celle-ci sont disproportionnées aux avantages pouvant en découler. En tant que tel, ce volet est la seule partie de l'analyse actuelle qui reconnaît le préjudice ou coût des limites justifiables: c'est-à-dire le fait qu'un droit garanti par la Constitution a été violé.

Les effets préjudiciables susceptibles de découler d'une atteinte à la Charte peuvent avoir soit un caractère général, en ce sens que toute atteinte grave au droit à la liberté d'expression est susceptible d'altérer le climat de libre échange des idées qui est une valeur essentielle de notre société; soit un caractère particulier, en ce qu'ils font obstacle à accrue from the speech in question is prevented. Although both of these possible effects will and should be considered in deciding whether there is a pressing and substantial objective of the legislation, the focus at that stage is more in determining whether there is a significant harm which the government is addressing. Comparing the harm which may be prevented with the harm of the infringement itself is a balancing which can most effectively take place within the context of the proportionality analysis.

un avantage déterminé qui découle de la forme d'expression en question. Même si ces deux effets possibles doivent être pris en considération et le sont pour décider si la loi repose sur un objectif urgent et réel, cette étape de l'analyse porte davantage sur la question de savoir si le gouvernement vise à remédier à un préjudice important. Le fait de comparer le préjudice qui peut être évité et le préjudice causé par l'atteinte elle-même est une mise en équilibre qui peut être réalisée avec le plus d'efficacité dans le contexte de l'analyse de la proportionnalité.

126 This approach accords with the analysis in R. v. Laba, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 965, where the reformulated proportionality test proposed by Lamer C.J. in Dagenais, supra, was applied. The issue in Laba was the constitutionality of a provision which made it an offence to sell stolen ore unless the defendant could establish that he or she was the lawful owner. This was challenged under s. 11(d) of the Charter. Sopinka J. writing for the Court, at p. 1006, found that the specific objective of the provision was "to facilitate the prosecution of offenders given the special problem of proof" regarding the ownership of ore. He also found that the measure was not minimally impairing of s. 11(d) even given the validity of the purpose of the legislation. But he went on to state, at p. 1011:

Cette méthode concorde avec l'analyse effectuée dans R. c. Laba, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 965, où la Cour a appliqué la reformulation du critère de la proportionnalité proposée par le juge en chef Lamer dans Dagenais, précité. Dans Laba, la question en litige était la constitutionnalité d'une disposition qui interdisait à toute personne de vendre du minerai volé à moins qu'elle n'établisse qu'elle en est le propriétaire. Cette disposition a été contestée sur le fondement de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte. Le juge Sopinka, s'exprimant pour la Cour, a conclu, à la p. 1006, que la disposition avait précisément pour but «de faciliter les poursuites contre les contrevenants, compte tenu du problème de preuve» en ce qui concerne la propriété du minerai. Il a en outre conclu que la mesure ne portait pas atteinte le moins possible à l'al. 11*d*), même en tenant compte de la validité de l'objectif de la disposition législative. Toutefois, il a ajouté ceci, à la p. 1011:

> Even if I were persuaded that the imposition of a legal burden was clearly more effective in achieving Parliament's objective, I would find that it fails the proportionality test because of the excessive invasion of the presumption of innocence having regard to the degree of advancement of Parliament's purpose. [Emphasis added.]

> Même si j'étais convaincu qu'il serait nettement plus efficace d'imposer une charge ultime pour atteindre l'objectif du législateur, j'arriverais à la conclusion que cela ne satisfait pas au critère de proportionnalité à cause de l'empiétement excessif sur la présomption d'innocence compte tenu de la contribution à la réalisation de l'objectif du législateur. [Je souligne.]

This analysis directly addresses the relationship between otherwise justified measures and the extent of harm to the Charter right. This weighing exercise necessarily admits of some subjectivity, but this is lessened by the analysis of the purposes, the rationality, and the efficiency of the legislation required by the previous stages of the Oakes test.

Cette analyse porte directement sur le rapport entre des mesures par ailleurs justifiées et l'étendue du préjudice causé au droit garanti par la Charte. Cette mise en balance souffre nécessairement d'une certaine subjectivité, mais cette lacune est atténuée par l'analyse des objectifs, du lien rationnel et de l'efficacité de la disposition législative qui est requise par les volets précédents du critère de l'arrêt Oakes.

The impact on freedom of expression in this case is profound. This is a complete ban on political information at a crucial time in the electoral process. The ban interferes with the rights of voters who want access to the most timely polling information available, and with the rights of the media and pollsters who want to provide it. It is an interference with the flow of information pertaining to the most important democratic duty which most Canadians will undertake in their lives: their choice as to who will govern them. Such a polling ban also sends the message that the media in their role as a reporter of information, and not as an advertiser, can be muzzled by the government. Rather than approaching the problem of inaccurate polls as a question of too little information, or added incentives for preventing the publication of inaccurate polls, the government constrains the range of evaluations that a voter is permitted to make in fulfilling their sacred democratic function as a citizen. It justifies such a measure on the basis that some indeterminate number of voters might be unable to spot an inaccurate poll result and might rely to a significant degree on the error, thus perverting their electoral choice.

127 Dans le présent cas, l'effet sur la liberté d'expression est profond. Il s'agit d'une interdiction complète visant de l'information politique à un moment crucial du processus électoral. Cette interdiction porte atteinte, d'une part, aux droits des électeurs qui veulent avoir accès à l'information la plus à-propos disponible en matière de sondage, et, d'autre part, aux droits des médias et des sondeurs qui désirent fournir cette information. Il s'agit d'une atteinte à la circulation d'information se rapportant à la fonction démocratique la plus importante dont s'acquittent la plupart des Canadiens au cours de leur vie: le choix de ceux qui vont les gouverner. De plus, le message que transmet une telle interdiction de publication des sondages est que les médias, non pas en tant que publicitaires, mais en tant que communicateurs d'information, peuvent être muselés par le gouvernement. Plutôt que de considérer le problème des sondages inexacts comme un problème d'insuffisance d'information ou de besoin d'incitatifs supplémentaires afin de prévenir la publication de sondages inexacts, le gouvernement limite l'éventail des évaluations que les électeurs sont autorisés à faire dans l'accomplissement de leur devoir démocratique sacré de citoyens. Il justifie pareille mesure en soutenant qu'un nombre indéterminé d'électeurs pourraient être incapables de déceler des résultats de sondage inexacts et pourraient, dans une mesure importante, s'appuyer sur l'erreur, ce qui fausserait leur choix électoral.

In my analysis above, I have found that despite the many factors militating against the realization of this misinformed choice, including the presence of many other polls in the public domain both prior to and concurrent with the erroneous poll, such a scenario is conceivable for a small number of voters. However, in my view, the government cannot take the most uninformed and naïve voter as the standard by which constitutionality is assessed. To quote the words of Frankfurter J. speaking in another context: "The incidence of this enactment is to reduce the adult population of Michigan to reading only what is fit for children" (Butler v. Michigan, 352 U.S. 380 (1957), at p. 383). Just as Frankfurter J. could not accept that the standard of indecency for adults should be determined according to the vulnerability of a child, nor can I accept here a measure which decides that information which is desired and can be rationally and properly assessed by the vast majority of the voting electorate should be withheld because of a concern that a very few voters might be so confounded that they would cast their vote for a candidate whom they would not have otherwise preferred. That is to reduce the entire Canadian public to the level of the most unobservant and naïve among us. This concern is also very remote from any danger that the guarantee of effective representation will be undermined.

128 Dans l'analyse qui précède, j'ai conclu que, malgré les nombreux facteurs qui tendent à empêcher un tel choix mal éclairé de se concrétiser, notamment la présence de nombreux autres sondages dans le domaine public tant avant le sondage erroné que simultanément, un tel scénario est concevable à l'égard d'un petit nombre d'électeurs. Toutefois, je suis d'avis que le gouvernement ne peut pas faire de l'électeur le moins informé et le plus naïf la norme au regard de laquelle la constitutionnalité doit être appréciée. Pour reprendre les propos formulés par le juge Frankfurter, dans un autre contexte: [TRADUCTION] «L'effet de ce texte de loi est de condamner la population adulte du Michigan à ne lire que ce qui est convenable pour les enfants» (Butler c. Michigan, 352 U.S. 380

(1957), à la p. 383). Tout comme le juge Frankfurter ne pouvait accepter que, dans le cas des adultes, la norme en matière d'indécence soit déterminée en fonction de la vulnérabilité des enfants, je ne peux accepter, en l'espèce, une mesure disposant que des renseignements qui sont désirés et qui peuvent être évalués rationnellement et adéquatement par la vaste majorité des électeurs ne peuvent être communiqués parce qu'on craint qu'un très petit nombre d'entre eux pourraient être à ce point décontenancés par ces renseignements qu'ils voteraient pour un candidat qu'ils n'auraient pas appuyé autrement. Cela revient à réduire l'entière population canadienne au niveau des moins perspicaces et des plus naïfs d'entre nous. Cette préoccupation est également très éloignée de tout danger d'atteinte à la garantie de représentation effective.

129 My view is that, given the state of the evidence before the Court on this issue, the postulated harm will seldom occur. The benefits of the ban are, therefore, marginal. The deleterious effects are substantial. First, the ban sends the general message that the media can be constrained by government not to publish factual information. Second, it interferes with the reporting function of the media with respect to the election, which is an interference with the freedom of the media when its participation is most crucial to self-governance. These are the deleterious effects as they relate to the freedom of the speaker. But third, the ban denies access to electoral information which some voters may consider very useful in deciding their vote. If they feel that their votes are better informed as a result of having this information, then the ban not only interferes with their freedom of expression, but with their perception of the freeness and validity of their vote. This undermines the very faith in the electoral process which the government suggests is one of the rationales for this ban.

Je suis d'avis que, compte tenu de la preuve devant notre Cour sur cette question, le préjudice qui a été posé en postulat ne se produit que rarement. Les avantages de l'interdiction sont par conséquent minimes. Les effets préjudiciables sont considérables. Premièrement, l'interdiction transmet le message général que les médias peuvent être empêchés par le gouvernement de publier de l'information factuelle. Deuxièmement, il entrave le rôle de communicateurs de l'information des médias en période électorale, ce qui constitue une atteinte à la liberté d'expression des médias au moment où leur participation revêt une importance cruciale pour la démocratie. Voilà quels sont les effets préjudiciables par rapport à la liberté d'expression de la personne qui s'exprime. Mais, troisièmement, l'interdiction nie l'accès à une information électorale que certains électeurs peuvent considérer très utile pour arrêter leur choix. S'ils estiment que leur vote est plus éclairé parce qu'ils disposent de cette information, alors l'interdiction porte non seulement atteinte à leur liberté d'expression, mais également à leur perception que leur vote est libre et valide. Cette situation mine la confiance même dans le processus électoral qui, au dire du gouvernement, est précisément l'un des objectifs de l'interdiction.

130 In my view, the doubtful benefits of this ban are outweighed by its significant and tangible deleterious effects and therefore is not justified under the third stage of the proportionality analysis. The very serious invasion of the freedom of expression of all Canadians is not outweighed by the speculative and marginal benefits postulated by the government. This is not to say that there is no possibility for Parliament to legislate with regard to the dangers that represent bad polls. As mentioned earlier, the present legislation was found to be defective not with regard to its purpose, but with regard to the fact that the means chosen to carry out that purpose did not satisfy the minimal impairment and proportionality tests.

À mon avis, les effets préjudiciables importants et tangibles de l'interdiction l'emportent sur ses

VII. Disposition

I find that s. 322.1 of the Canada Elections Act infringes s. 2(b) of the Charter and that it is not a reasonable limit on freedom of expression under s. 1. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal with costs and declare s. 322.1 of the Canada Elections Act to be inconsistent with the Charter and hence of no force or effect by reason of s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982. I would answer the constitutional questions in the following manner:

1. Does s. 322.1 of the Canada Elections Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. E-2, as amended, infringe s. 2(b) and/or s. 3 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Answer: Yes with respect to s. 2(b), and no comment with respect to s. 3.

2. If s. 322.1 of the Canada Elections Act infringes s. 2(b) and/or s. 3 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is s. 322.1 a reasonable limit prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society for the purposes of s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Answer: No.

avantages douteux, et elle n'est donc pas justifiée selon le troisième volet de l'analyse de la proportionnalité. L'atteinte très grave à la liberté d'expression de tous les Canadiens n'est pas écartée par les avantages hypothétiques minimes avancés par le gouvernement. Ce qui ne veut pas dire qu'il est impossible au législateur de légiférer à l'égard des dangers que créent les mauvais sondages. Comme je l'ai dit plus tôt, la loi existante a été jugée défectueuse au regard non pas de son objectif, mais plutôt du fait que les moyens choisis pour réaliser cet objectif ne satisfont pas aux critères de l'atteinte minimale et de la proportionnalité.

VII. Le dispositif

J'arrive à la conclusion que l'art. 322.1 de la Loi électorale du Canada porte atteinte à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte et qu'il n'est pas une limite raisonnable à la liberté d'expression au sens de l'article premier. En conséquence, j'accueillerais le pourvoi avec dépens et déclarerais l'art. 322.1 de la Loi électorale du Canada incompatible avec la Charte et par conséquent inopérant par application de l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982. Je répondrais aux questions constitutionnelles de la manière suivante: 131

1. L'article 322.1 de la Loi électorale du Canada, L.R.C. (1985), ch. E-2, et ses modifications, contrevient-il à l'al. 2*b*) ou à l'art. 3 de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, ou aux deux à la fois?

Réponse: Oui pour ce qui est de l'al. 2*b*), mais aucun commentaire pour ce qui est de l'art. 3.

2. Si l'article 322.1 de la Loi électorale du Canada contrevient à l'al. 2*b*) ou à l'art. 3 de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, ou aux deux à la fois, constitue-t-il une limite raisonnable prescrite par une règle de droit, dont la justification peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique, aux fins de l'article premier de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

Réponse: Non.

Appeal allowed with costs, LAMER C.J. and L'HEUREUX-DUBÉ and GONTHIER JJ. dissenting.

Pourvoi accueilli avec dépens, le juge en chef LAMER et les juges L'HEUREUX-DUBÉ et GONTHIER sont dissidents.

Solicitors for the appellants: McCarthy Tétrault, Toronto.

Procureurs des appelantes: McCarthy Tétrault, Toronto.

Solicitor for the respondent: The Attorney General of Canada, Toronto.

Procureur de l'intimé: Le procureur général du Canada, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia: Arvay Finlay, Victoria.

Procureurs de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique: Arvay Finlay, Victoria.

Solicitor for the intervener the Canadian Civil Liberties Association: Sydney L. Goldenberg, Toronto.

Procureur de l'intervenante l'Association canadienne des libertés civiles: Sydney L. Goldenberg, Toronto.

Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Appellant

v.

Canadian Federation of Students — British Columbia Component and British Columbia Teachers' Federation Respondents

and

Attorney General of New Brunswick, Attorney General of British Columbia, Adbusters Media Foundation and British Columbia Civil Liberties Association Interveners

- and -

British Columbia Transit Appellant

v.

Canadian Federation of Students — British Columbia Component and British Columbia Teachers' Federation Respondents

and

Attorney General of New Brunswick, Attorney General of British Columbia, Adbusters Media Foundation and British Columbia Civil Liberties Association Interveners

Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Appelante

c.

Fédération canadienne des étudiantes et étudiants — Section Colombie-Britannique et British Columbia Teachers' Federation Intimées

et

Procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick, procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, Adbusters Media Foundation et Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique Intervenants

- et -

British Columbia Transit Appelante

c.

Fédération canadienne des étudiantes et étudiants — Section Colombie-Britannique et British Columbia Teachers' Federation Intimées

et

Procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick, procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, Adbusters Media Foundation et Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique Intervenants

INDEXED AS: GREATER VANCOUVER TRANSPORTATION AUTHORITY v. CANADIAN FEDERATION OF STUDENTS — BRITISH COLUMBIA COMPONENT

Neutral citation: 2009 SCC 31.

File No.: 31845.

2008: March 25; 2009: July 10.

RÉPERTORIÉ : GREATER VANCOUVER TRANSPORTATION AUTHORITY c. FÉDÉRATION CANADIENNE DES ÉTUDIANTES ET ÉTUDIANTS — SECTION COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Référence neutre : 2009 CSC 31.

N° du greffe : 31845.

2008 : 25 mars; 2009 : 10 juillet.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Bastarache,* Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Charron and Rothstein JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Application of Charter — Transit authorities' advertising policies permitting commercial but not political advertising on public transit vehicles — Actions brought alleging that transit authorities' policies violated freedom of expression — Whether entities which operate public transit systems "government" within meaning of s. 32 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Freedom of expression — Advertisements on buses — Transit authorities' advertising policies permitting commercial but not political advertising on public transit vehicles — Whether advertising policies infringing freedom of expression — If so, whether infringement can be justified — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2(b).

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Reasonable limits prescribed by law — Transit authorities' advertising policies permitting commercial but not political advertising on public transit vehicles — Policies infringing freedom of expression —Whether policies are "law" within meaning of s. 1 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Remedy — Transit authorities' advertising policies permitting commercial but not political advertising on public transit vehicles — Policies unjustifiably infringing freedom of expression — Declaration that policies are of "no force or effect" sought — Whether declaration ought to be based on s. 52 of Constitution Act, 1982 or s. 24(1) of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Whether policies are "law" within meaning of s. 52 of Constitution Act, 1982.

The appellant transit authorities, the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority ("TransLink") and British Columbia Transit ("BC Transit"), operate Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Bastarache*, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Charron et Rothstein.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Application de la Charte — Politiques publicitaires de commissions de transport autorisant la publicité commerciale mais non la publicité politique sur les véhicules de transport en commun — Actions alléguant que les politiques portent atteinte à la liberté d'expression — Les entités qui exploitent des réseaux de transport en commun font-elles partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32 de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Liberté d'expression — Publicité sur les autobus — Politiques publicitaires de commissions de transport autorisant la publicité commerciale mais non la publicité politique sur les véhicules de transport en commun — Les politiques violent-elles le droit à la liberté d'expression? — Dans l'affirmative, l'atteinte peut-elle être justifiée? — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 2b).

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Limites raisonnables prévues par une règle de droit — Politiques publicitaires de commissions de transport autorisant la publicité commerciale mais non la publicité politique sur les véhicules de transport en commun — Politiques portant atteinte à la liberté d'expression — Les politiques constituent-elles des « règles de droit » au sens de l'article premier de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Réparation — Politiques publicitaires de commissions de transport autorisant la publicité commerciale mais non la publicité politique sur les véhicules de transport en commun — Politiques portant indûment atteinte à la liberté d'expression — Demande d'un jugement déclarant les politiques inopérantes — Le jugement déclaratoire doit-il se fonder sur l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 ou sur l'art. 24(1) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés? — Les politiques constituent-elles des « règles de droit » au sens de l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982?

Les commissions de transport appelantes, Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority (« TransLink ») et British Columbia Transit (« BC Transit »), exploitent

* Bastarache J. took no part in the judgment.

* Le juge Bastarache n'a pas participé au jugement.

public transportation systems in British Columbia. They refused to post the respondents' political advertisements on the sides of their buses on the basis that their advertising policies permit commercial but not political advertising on public transit vehicles. The respondents commenced an action alleging that articles 2, 7 and 9 of the transit authorities' policies had violated their right to freedom of expression guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The trial judge dismissed the action, finding that the respondents' right to freedom of expression had not been infringed. The majority of the Court of Appeal reversed the trial judgment and declared articles 7 and 9 of the advertising policies to be of no force or effect either on the basis of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982 or on the basis of s. 24(1) of the Charter.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Abella, Charron and Rothstein JJ.: Both BC Transit and TransLink are "government" within the meaning of s. 32 of the Charter. On the face of the provision, the Charter applies not only to Parliament, the legislatures and the government themselves, but also to all matters within the authority of those entities. BC Transit is a statutory body designated by legislation as an "agent of the government" and it cannot operate autonomously from the provincial government, since the latter has the power, by means of regulations, to exercise substantial control over its day-to-day activities. Although TransLink is not an agent of the government, it is substantially controlled by a local government entity — the Greater Vancouver Regional District — and is therefore itself a government entity. Since the transit authorities are government entities, the Charter applies to all their activities, including the operation of the buses they own. [14] [17] [21] [24-25]

The s. 2(b) claim should not be resolved using the Baier framework. The transit authorities' policies do not prevent the respondents from using the advertising service as a means of expression. Only the content of their advertisements is restricted. Thus, their claim cannot be characterized as one against underinclusion. Nor can it be characterized as a positive right claim. The respondents are not requesting that the government support or enable their expressive activity by providing them with a particular means of expression from which they are excluded. They seek the freedom to express themselves — by means of an existing platform they are entitled to use — without undue state des réseaux de transport en commun en Colombie-Britannique. Elles ont refusé de diffuser les publicités à caractère politique des intimées sur les côtés de leurs autobus au motif que leurs politiques en la matière autorisaient la publicité commerciale, mais non la publicité politique, sur les véhicules de transport en commun. Dans l'action qu'elles ont intentée, les intimées ont allégué que les articles 2, 7 et 9 des politiques des commissions de transport portaient atteinte à leur liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Le juge de première instance a conclu que le droit des intimées à la liberté d'expression n'avait pas été violé et il a rejeté l'action. Les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel ont infirmé le jugement et déclaré inopérants les articles 7 et 9 des politiques publicitaires sur le fondement soit du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, soit du par. 24(1) de la Charte.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est rejeté.

La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Abella, Charron et Rothstein : BC Transit et TransLink font toutes deux partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32 de la Charte. Il appert de cette disposition que la Charte s'applique non seulement au Parlement, aux législatures et au gouvernement lui-même, mais aussi à tous les domaines relevant d'eux. Créature législative, BC Transit est désignée « mandataire du gouvernement » et ne peut fonctionner indépendamment du gouvernement provincial car ce dernier peut, par l'adoption de règlements, exercer un grand pouvoir sur ses activités quotidiennes. TransLink n'est pas un mandataire du gouvernement, mais elle est en grande partie assujettie au gouvernement local — le district régional de Vancouver —, de sorte qu'il s'agit d'une entité gouvernementale. Puisque les commissions de transport constituent des entités gouvernementales, toutes leurs activités, y compris l'exploitation des autobus qu'elles possèdent, sont assujetties à la Charte. [14] [17] [21] [24-25]

Il n'y a pas lieu de statuer sur l'allégation fondée sur l'al. 2*b*) en appliquant le cadre d'analyse établi dans l'arrêt Baier. Les politiques des commissions de transport n'empêchent pas les intimées de recourir au service publicitaire en tant que mode d'expression. Seul le contenu de leurs publicités est visé par une restriction. On ne peut donc affirmer qu'elles allèguent le caractère trop restreint de la tribune, non plus qu'elles revendiquent un droit positif. Les intimées ne demandent pas à l'État d'appuyer ou de permettre leur activité expressive par la mise à leur disposition d'un mode d'expression en particulier auquel l'accès leur serait refusé. Elles réclament la liberté de s'exprimer — à une tribune existante interference with the content of their expression. [26] [32] [35]

In order to determine whether the expression should be denied s. 2(b) protection on the basis of location, the City of Montréal framework should be applied. This inquiry leads to the conclusion that the transit authorities' policies infringe the respondents' freedom of expression. The proposed advertisements have expressive content that brings them within the prima facie protection of s. 2(b), and the location of this expression — the sides of buses — does not remove that protection. Not only is there some history of use of this property as a space for public expression, but there is actual use — both of which indicate that the expressive activity in question neither impedes the primary function of the bus as a vehicle for public transportation nor, more importantly, undermines the values underlying freedom of expression. The space allows for expression by a broad range of speakers to a large public audience and expression there could actually further the values underlying s. 2(b). The side of a bus is therefore a location where expressive activity is protected by s. 2(b) of the Charter. Finally, the very purpose of the impugned policies is to restrict the content of expression in the advertising space on the sides of buses. The wording of articles 2 and 7 clearly limits the content of advertisements. Article 9 is even more precise in excluding political speech. [36-38] [42] [46]

The limits resulting from the policies are "limits prescribed by law" within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter. Where a government policy is authorized by statute and sets out a general norm or standard that is meant to be binding and is sufficiently accessible and precise, the policy is legislative in nature and constitutes a limit that is "prescribed by law". Here, a review of the enabling legislation suggests that the transit authorities' policies were adopted pursuant to statutory powers conferred on BC Transit and TransLink. Where a legislature has empowered a government entity to make rules, it seems only logical, absent evidence to the contrary, that it also intended those rules to be binding. The policies are not administrative in nature, as they are not meant for internal use as an interpretive aid for "rules" laid down in the legislative scheme. Rather, the policies are themselves rules that establish the rights of the individuals to whom they apply. Moreover, the policies can be said to be general in scope, since they establish standards which are applicable to all who want to take advantage of the advertising service rather than to a specific case. They therefore fall within the meaning of the word "law" for the purposes of s. 1 and satisfy the "prescribed by law" requirement as the transit qu'elles ont le droit d'utiliser — sans que l'État ne limite indûment la teneur de leur expression. [26] [32] [35]

Pour déterminer si la protection de l'al. 2*b*) doit être refusée à l'expression en raison du lieu, il convient d'appliquer le cadre d'analyse de l'arrêt Ville de Montréal. La démarche mène à la conclusion que les politiques des commissions de transport portent atteinte à la liberté d'expression des intimées. Le contenu expressif des publicités projetées justifie leur protection prima facie par l'al. 2*b*), et le lieu d'expression — les côtés des autobus — n'a pas pour effet d'écarter cette protection. Il y a non seulement une certaine utilisation historique du bien en cause comme lieu d'expression publique, mais aussi une utilisation réelle à cette fin, deux facteurs permettant de conclure que l'activité expressive considérée ne nuit pas à la fonction première de l'autobus — le transport en commun — et, ce qui importe encore plus, qu'elle ne mine pas les valeurs qui sous-tendent la liberté d'expression. Le lieu permet à un grand nombre d'annonceurs de s'adresser à un large auditoire et pourrait en fait promouvoir les valeurs qui sous-tendent l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. L'activité expressive sur le côté d'un autobus bénéficie donc de la protection prévue à cet alinéa. Enfin, l'objet même des politiques contestées est de limiter le contenu de l'expression dans l'espace publicitaire sur les côtés des autobus. Les articles 2 et 7 restreignent expressément le contenu de la publicité. L'article 9 le fait encore plus précisément en écartant le discours politique. [36-38] [42] [46]

Les restrictions découlant des politiques sont apportées « par une règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier de la Charte. Lorsqu'une politique gouvernementale est autorisée par la loi, qu'elle établit une norme générale se voulant obligatoire et qu'elle est suffisamment accessible et précise, il s'agit d'une règle de nature législative constituant une « règle de droit ». En l'espèce, il appert des lois habilitantes que les politiques des commissions de transport ont été adoptées en vertu des pouvoirs légaux conférés à BC Transit et à TransLink. Il paraît simplement logique que le législateur qui autorise l'adoption de règles par une entité gouvernementale veuille également, sauf indications contraires, que ces règles soient obligatoires. Les politiques ne sont pas de nature administrative puisqu'elles ne sont pas destinées à une application interne comme guide d'interprétation de « règles » établies par le régime législatif. Elles constituent elles-mêmes des règles établissant les droits des personnes qui y sont assujetties. De plus, on peut leur attribuer une portée générale en ce qu'elles fixent des normes qui s'appliquent à toute personne désireuse de se prévaloir du service publicitaire, et non dans certains cas particuliers. Elles sont donc assimilables à des « règles de droit » authorities' advertising policies are both accessible and worded precisely enough to enable potential advertisers to understand what is prohibited. [65] [67] [71-73]

The limits resulting from the policies are not justified under s. 1 of the Charter. The policies were adopted for the purpose of providing "a safe, welcoming public transit system" and this is a sufficiently important objective to warrant placing a limit on freedom of expression. However, the limits on political content imposed by articles 2, 7 and 9 are not rationally connected to the objective. It is difficult to see how an advertisement on the side of a bus that constitutes political speech might create a safety risk or an unwelcoming environment for transit users. Moreover, the means chosen to implement the objective was neither reasonable nor proportionate to the respondents' interest in disseminating their messages pursuant to their right under s. 2(b) of the Charter. The policies amount to a blanket exclusion of a highly valued form of expression in a public location that serves as an important place for public discourse. They therefore do not constitute a minimal impairment of freedom of expression. Advertising on buses has become a widespread and effective means for conveying messages to the general public. In exercising their control over such advertising, the transit authorities have failed to minimize the impairment of political speech, which is at the core of s. 2(b) protection. To the extent that articles 2, 7 and 9 prohibit political advertising on the sides of buses, they place an unjustifiable limit on the respondents' right under s. 2(b) of the Charter. [76-77] [80]

With respect to remedy, the transit authorities' policies clearly come within the meaning of "law" for the purposes of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982. The transit authorities used their delegated rule-making power to adopt policies which unjustifiably limited the respondents' freedom of expression. Those policies are binding rules of general application that establish the rights of members of the public who seek to advertise on the transit authorities' buses. Since ensuring the largest numbers of potential claimants and beneficiaries of a constitutional challenge is in keeping with the spirit of the supremacy of the Charter, the appropriate remedy for an invalid rule of general application is one under s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, and not s. 24(1) of the Charter. As the transit authorities' advertising policies are "law" within the meaning of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, they are therefore declared au sens de l'article premier et elles satisfont à l'exigence de la restriction « par une règle de droit » en ce qu'elles sont à la fois accessibles et formulées avec suffisamment de précision pour permettre aux annonceurs éventuels de comprendre ce qui est écarté. [65] [67] [71-73]

Les restrictions découlant des politiques ne sont pas justifiées au regard de l'article premier de la Charte. Les politiques ont été adoptées dans le but d'offrir « un réseau de transport en commun sûr et accueillant » et il s'agit d'un objectif suffisamment important pour justifier la restriction de la liberté d'expression. Toutefois, l'exclusion de tout contenu politique aux articles 2, 7 et 9 n'a pas de lien rationnel avec cet objectif. On conçoit mal que la présence d'un message politique sur le côté d'un autobus puisse rendre le transport en commun moins sûr ou moins accueillant pour les usagers. En outre, le moyen choisi pour réaliser l'objectif n'est ni raisonnable ni proportionné au droit des intimées d'exercer leur liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte en diffusant leurs messages. Une forme d'expression à laquelle est attaché un grand prix est totalement exclue d'un espace public qui constitue un important lieu d'expression publique. Les politiques ne portent donc pas atteinte le moins possible à la liberté d'expression. On recourt désormais couramment à l'espace publicitaire des autobus pour communiquer efficacement de l'information au grand public. Dans l'exercice de leur pouvoir sur l'utilisation de cet espace, les commissions de transport n'ont pas respecté le critère de l'atteinte minimale à la liberté d'expression politique, laquelle est au cœur de la protection prévue à l'al. 2*b*). Dans la mesure où ils interdisent la publicité politique sur les côtés des autobus, les articles 2, 7 et 9 des politiques restreignent de manière injustifiée la liberté d'expression des intimées garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. [76-77] [80] of no force or effect to the extent of their inconsistency. [89-90]

Au chapitre de la réparation, les politiques des commissions de transport constituent clairement des « règles de droit » au sens du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982. Les commissions de transport ont exercé leur pouvoir de réglementation délégué pour adopter des politiques qui restreignent de façon injustifiée la liberté d'expression des intimées. Leurs politiques sont des règles obligatoires d'application générale qui établissent les droits des citoyens d'utiliser l'espace publicitaire des autobus. Étant donné que l'élargissement du bassin des personnes susceptibles d'intenter un recours sur le fondement de la Constitution et des personnes susceptibles d'en bénéficier est conforme à l'esprit qui sous-tend la suprématie de la Charte, la réparation appropriée dans le cas d'une règle d'application générale invalide est celle qui prend appui sur le par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, et non sur le par.

Per Fish J.: There is agreement that the transit authorities are subject to the Charter, that their advertising policies infringe s. 2(b) of the Charter, that this infringement cannot be justified under s. 1, and that the respondents are entitled to a declaration that the policies are of no force or effect. But there is disagreement with the analytical framework adopted in circumscribing freedom of expression under s. 2(b). [93] [100] [137]

Freedom of expression enjoys broad but not unbounded constitutional protection in Canada. It is subject to internal limits which allow government to curtail expressive activity that is inherently inconsistent with the object and purpose of s. 2(b), and it is subject as well to "external" limitation in virtue of s. 1 of the Charter. Two recognized internal limits are relied on by the transit authorities: the significant burden exception and the manifest incompatibility exception. Under the first, expressive activity will not normally be protected where it imposes on the government a significant burden of assistance, in the form of expenditure of public funds, or the initiation of a complex legislative, regulatory, or administrative scheme or undertaking. Government expenditures and initiatives may be undertaken to advance Charter rights and freedoms in innumerable ways, but given finite resources, it is generally considered to be a matter for the legislature and not the judiciary to determine which social priorities are to receive government assistance. Second, expressive activity will also fall outside the protected zone of s. 2(b) where it is manifestly incompatible with the purpose or function of the space in question. Governments should not bear the burden of strictly prescribing by law and justifying limits on those kinds of expression that are so obviously incompatible with the purpose or function of the space provided. Freedom of expression is also subject to an external limitation: even if an expressive activity falls within the protected zone of s. 2(b), it may be validly curtailed in virtue of s. 1 of the Charter pursuant "to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society". [95-98] [103] [105] [130-131]

24(1) de la Charte. Comme les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport s'entendent de « règles de droit » au sens du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, elles peuvent par conséquent être déclarées inopérantes dans la mesure de leur incompatibilité. [89-90]

Le juge Fish : Certes les commissions de transport sont assujetties à la Charte, leurs politiques publicitaires portent atteinte au droit garanti à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte, l'atteinte ne peut être justifiée au regard de l'article premier et les intimées ont droit à un jugement déclarant les politiques inopérantes, mais il convient d'appliquer un cadre d'analyse différent pour circonscrire la liberté d'expression que garantit l'al. 2*b*). [93] [100] [137]

Au Canada, la liberté d'expression jouit d'une protection constitutionnelle étendue, mais non illimitée. Elle fait l'objet de limitations internes qui permettent à l'État de restreindre l'activité expressive qui est intrinsèquement incompatible avec l'objet et la raison d'être de l'al. 2*b*), ainsi que d'une limitation « externe » découlant de l'article premier de la Charte. Les commissions de transport invoquent deux limitations internes reconnues : l'exception de l'obligation substantielle et celle de l'incompatibilité manifeste. Suivant la première exception, l'activité expressive n'est habituellement pas protégée lorsqu'elle impose à l'État une obligation d'aide substantielle, qu'il s'agisse de dépenser des fonds publics ou de mettre en branle un régime ou un projet complexe d'ordre législatif, réglementaire ou administratif. Des dépenses et des mesures gouvernementales peuvent être entreprises d'innombrables façons pour promouvoir les droits et libertés constitutionnels, mais vu la limitation des ressources disponibles, on considère généralement qu'il appartient au législateur, et non aux tribunaux, de déterminer les priorités sociales justifiant l'appui de l'État. Suivant la deuxième exception, la protection de l'al. 2*b*) ne sera refusée à l'activité expressive que lorsque celle-ci sera manifestement incompatible avec la raison d'être ou la fonction de l'espace en cause. L'État ne devrait pas être strictement tenu d'apporter une restriction dans une règle de droit et de la justifier lorsqu'elle vise un type d'expression qui est si clairement incompatible avec la raison d'être ou la fonction de l'espace offert. La liberté d'expression fait aussi l'objet d'une limitation externe : même lorsqu'elle bénéficie de la protection prévue à l'al. 2*b*), l'activité expressive peut, suivant l'article premier, être légitimement restreinte « par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique ». [95-98] [103] [105] [130-131]

Neither the significant burden nor the manifest incompatibility exception to the general rule of broad protection enshrined in s. 2(b) applies in this case. The respondents' request would not impose a significant burden on the transit authorities. Little change is needed to remove the infringing restrictions and the steps that would have to be taken require no meaningful expenditure of funds and no new operating initiatives of significance. They involve no administrative reorganization, restructuring or expansion that can reasonably be characterized as "burdensome". Also, advertisements conveying a political message are not incompatible — let alone manifestly incompatible — with a commercial and public service advertising facility. Having chosen to make the sides of buses available for expression on such a wide variety of matters, the transit authorities cannot, without infringing s. 2(b) of the Charter, arbitrarily exclude a particular kind or category of expression that is otherwise permitted by law. There is no inherent conflict between political advertisements on the sides of buses and orderly transportation. [97] [116-117] [121] [123]

Cases Cited

By Deschamps J.

Applied: Montréal (City) v. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 SCC 62, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 141; distinguished: Baier v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 31, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 673; referred to: Lehman v. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298 (1974); Godbout v. Longueuil (City), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 844; Eldridge v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 624; McKinney v. University of Guelph, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 229; Harrison v. University of British Columbia, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 451; Stoffman v. Vancouver General Hospital, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 483; Douglas/Kwantlen Faculty Assn. v. Douglas College, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 570; Lavigne v. Ontario Public Service Employees Union, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 211; Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295; RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573; Ford v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 712; Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927; R. v. Keegstra, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697; Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada v. Canada, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 139; Ramsden v. Peterborough (City), [1993] 2 S.C.R. 1084; Haig v. Canada, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 995; Dunmore v. Ontario (Attorney General), 2001 SCC 94, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 1016; Slaight Communications Inc. v. Davidson, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1038; R. v. Therens, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 613; B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), Ni l'exception de l'obligation substantielle ni celle de l'incompatibilité manifeste à la règle générale de la protection étendue que consacre l'al. 2*b*) ne s'appliquent en l'espèce. Faire droit à la demande des intimées n'imposerait pas une obligation substantielle aux commissions de transport. Peu de changements sont nécessaires pour supprimer les restrictions attentatoires, et les mesures requises n'exigent pas de dépenses importantes ni de grands changements sur le plan de l'exploitation. Ces mesures n'impliquent pas de réorganisation administrative, de restructuration ou d'expansion pouvant raisonnablement être qualifiée de « contraignante ». Aussi, la publicité renfermant un message politique n'est pas incompatible — et encore moins manifestement incompatible — avec un service publicitaire à vocation commerciale et publique. Après avoir permis que leurs véhicules servent de supports à l'expression sur une grande variété de sujets, les commissions de transport ne peuvent, sans violer la garantie prévue à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte, écarter arbitrairement une sorte ou une catégorie particulière d'expression par ailleurs légale. Il n'y a pas de conflit intrinsèque entre la publicité politique sur les côtés des autobus et le transport sans heurts. [97] [116-117] [121] [123]

Jurisprudence

Citée par la juge Deschamps

Arrêt appliqué : Montréal (Ville) c. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 CSC 62, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 141; distinction d'avec l'arrêt : Baier c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 31, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 673; arrêts mentionnés : Lehman c. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298 (1974); Godbout c. Longueuil (Ville), [1997] 3 R.C.S. 844; Eldridge c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1997] 3 R.C.S. 624; McKinney c. Université de Guelph, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 229; Harrison c. Université de la Colombie-Britannique, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 451; Stoffman c. Vancouver General Hospital, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 483; Douglas/Kwantlen Faculty Assn. c. Douglas College, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 570; Lavigne c. Syndicat des employés de la fonction publique de l'Ontario, [1991] 2 R.C.S. 211; Hunter c. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 R.C.S. 145; R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 R.C.S. 295; SDGMR c. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., [1986] 2 R.C.S. 573; Ford c. Québec (Procureur général), [1988] 2 R.C.S. 712; Irwin Toy Ltd. c. Québec (Procureur général), [1989] 1 R.C.S. 927; R. c. Keegstra, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 697; Comité pour la République du Canada c. Canada, [1991] 1 R.C.S. 139; Ramsden c. Peterborough (Ville), [1993] 2 R.C.S. 1084; Haig c. Canada, [1993] 2 R.C.S. 995; Dunmore c. Ontario (Procureur général), 2001 CSC 94, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 1016; Slaight Communications Inc. c. Davidson, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 1038; R. c. Therens, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 613;

[1988] 2 S.C.R. 214; R. v. Swain, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 933; R. v. Orbanski, 2005 SCC 37, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 3; Black v. Law Society of Alberta, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 591; Osborne v. Canada (Treasury Board), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 69; Little Sisters Book and Art Emporium v. Canada (Minister of Justice), 2000 SCC 69, [2000] 2 S.C.R. 1120; R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103; Canada (Attorney General) v. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 SCC 30, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 610; R. v. Labaye, 2005 SCC 80, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 728; R. v. Tremblay, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 932; R. v. Ferguson, 2008 SCC 6, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 96.

By Fish J.

Referred to: Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927; Baier v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 31, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 673; Montréal (City) v. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 SCC 62, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 141; R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295; Haig v. Canada, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 995; Native Women's Assn. of Canada v. Canada, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 627; Delisle v. Canada (Deputy Attorney General), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 989; Dunmore v. Ontario (Attorney General), 2001 SCC 94, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 1016; Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123; Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada v. Canada, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 139; Ramsden v. Peterborough (City), [1993] 2 S.C.R. 1084; R. v. Keegstra, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697; Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 1, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3; R. A. V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377 (1992).

Statutes and Regulations Cited

British Columbia Transit Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 38, ss. 2(5), 3(1)(c), 4(1), (4)(e), 32(2).

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2(b), 15, 24(1), 32.

Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52.

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, s. 83.02.

Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, c. 30, ss. 2(4), 8(1), (2), 14(3), (4), 25(3), 29(5), 29.1(5), 133(5).

Local Government Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 323, ss. 2, 5 "local government", 173, 174, 266(1), 783(1), 796(1), 803(1).

South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, c. 30.

Authors Cited

Hogg, Peter W. Constitutional Law of Canada, vol. 2, 5th ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Thomson/Carswell, 2007.

B.C.G.E.U. c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1988] 2 R.C.S. 214; R. c. Swain, [1991] 1 R.C.S. 933; R. c. Orbanski, 2005 CSC 37, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 3; Black c. Law Society of Alberta, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 591; Osborne c. Canada (Conseil du Trésor), [1991] 2 R.C.S. 69; Little Sisters Book and Art Emporium c. Canada (Ministre de la Justice), 2000 CSC 69, [2000] 2 R.C.S. 1120; R. c. Oakes, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 103; Canada (Procureur général) c. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 CSC 30, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 610; R. c. Labaye, 2005 CSC 80, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 728; R. c. Tremblay, [1993] 2 R.C.S. 932; R. c. Ferguson, 2008 CSC 6, [2008] 1 R.C.S. 96.

Citée par le juge Fish

Arrêts mentionnés : Irwin Toy Ltd. c. Québec (Procureur général), [1989] 1 R.C.S. 927; Baier c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 31, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 673; Montréal (Ville) c. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 CSC 62, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 141; R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 R.C.S. 295; Haig c. Canada, [1993] 2 R.C.S. 995; Assoc. des femmes autochtones du Canada c. Canada, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 627; Delisle c. Canada (Sous-procureur général), [1999] 2 R.C.S. 989; Dunmore c. Ontario (Procureur général), 2001 CSC 94, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 1016; Renvoi relatif à l'art. 193 et à l'al. 195.1(1)c) du Code criminel (Man.), [1990] 1 R.C.S. 1123; Comité pour la République du Canada c. Canada, [1991] 1 R.C.S. 139; Ramsden c. Peterborough (Ville), [1993] 2 R.C.S. 1084; R. c. Keegstra, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 697; Suresh c. Canada (Ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration), 2002 CSC 1, [2002] 1 R.C.S. 3; R. A. V. c. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377 (1992).

Lois et règlements cités

British Columbia Transit Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 38, art. 2(5), 3(1)c), 4(1), (4)e), 32(2).

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 2*b*), 15, 24(1), 32.

Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46, art. 83.02.

Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, ch. 30, art. 2(4), 8(1), (2), 14(3), (4), 25(3), 29(5), 29.1(5), 133(5).

Local Government Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 323, art. 2, 5 « local government », 173, 174, 266(1), 783(1), 796(1), 803(1).

Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, art. 52.

South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, ch. 30.

Doctrine citée

Hogg, Peter W. Constitutional Law of Canada, vol. 2, 5th ed. Scarborough, Ont. : Thomson/Carswell, 2007.

Holland, Denys C., and John P. McGowan. Delegated Legislation in Canada. Toronto: Carswell, 1989.

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Southin, Prowse and Lowry JJ.A.), 2006 BCCA 529, 275 D.L.R. (4th) 221, [2007] 4 W.W.R. 575, 233 B.C.A.C. 81, 386 W.A.C. 81, 64 B.C.L.R. (4th) 29, 148 C.R.R. (2d) 203, [2006] B.C.J. No. 3042 (QL), 2006 CarswellBC 2887, reversing a decision of Halfyard J., 2006 BCSC 455, 266 D.L.R. (4th) 403, 139 C.R.R. (2d) 148, [2006] B.C.J. No. 729 (QL), 2006 CarswellBC 865. Appeal dismissed.

David F. Sutherland and Clark Roberts, for the appellant the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority.

George K. Macintosh, Q.C., and Timothy Dickson, for the appellant the British Columbia Transit.

Mark G. Underhill and Catherine J. Boies Parker, for the respondents.

Gaétan Migneault, for the intervener the Attorney General of New Brunswick.

Neena Sharma and Jennifer J. Stewart, for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Ryan D. W. Dalziel and Audrey Boctor, for the intervener the Adbusters Media Foundation.

Chris W. Sanderson, Q.C., and Chelsea D. Wilson, for the intervener the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association.

The judgment of McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Abella, Charron and Rothstein JJ. was delivered by

[1] Deschamps J. — Can government entities, in managing their property, disregard the right of individuals to political expression in public places? The appellant transit authorities answered this question in the affirmative and refused to post the respondents' political advertisements on the sides of buses on the basis that their advertising policies

Holland, Denys C., and John P. McGowan. Delegated Legislation in Canada. Toronto : Carswell, 1989.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (les juges Southin, Prowse et Lowry), 2006 BCCA 529, 275 D.L.R. (4th) 221, [2007] 4 W.W.R. 575, 233 B.C.A.C. 81, 386 W.A.C. 81, 64 B.C.L.R. (4th) 29, 148 C.R.R. (2d) 203, [2006] B.C.J. No. 3042 (QL), 2006 CarswellBC 2887, qui a infirmé une décision du juge Halfyard, 2006 BCSC 455, 266 D.L.R. (4th) 403, 139 C.R.R. (2d) 148, [2006] B.C.J. No. 729 (QL), 2006 CarswellBC 865. Pourvoi rejeté.

David F. Sutherland et Clark Roberts, pour l'appelante Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority.

George K. Macintosh, c.r., et Timothy Dickson, pour l'appelante British Columbia Transit.

Mark G. Underhill et Catherine J. Boies Parker, pour les intimées.

Gaétan Migneault, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Neena Sharma et Jennifer J. Stewart, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique.

Ryan D. W. Dalziel et Audrey Boctor, pour l'intervenante Adbusters Media Foundation.

Chris W. Sanderson, c.r., et Chelsea D. Wilson, pour l'intervenante l'Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique.

Version française du jugement de la juge en chef McLachlin et des juges Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Abella, Charron et Rothstein rendu par

[1] La juge Deschamps — Un organisme public peut-il gérer ses biens sans égard au droit des particuliers à l'expression politique dans un espace ou un endroit public? Les commissions de transport appelantes ont estimé qu'elles le pouvaient. Elles ont donc refusé de diffuser les publicités à caractère politique des intimées sur les côtés de leurs permit commercial but not political advertising on public transit vehicles. This appeal raises the issues of whether those policies must comply with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, if so, whether they violate the respondents' right under s. 2(b) of the Charter to freedom of expression and whether such a breach can give rise to a declaration that the policies are invalid under s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

1. Facts and Judicial History

[2] The appellants, the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority ("TransLink") and British Columbia Transit ("BC Transit"), are corporations that operate public transportation systems in British Columbia. TransLink is responsible for running the transit system in the area under the jurisdiction of the Greater Vancouver Regional District ("GVRD"), whereas BC Transit operates in British Columbia communities outside the GVRD. For years, the appellants (the "transit authorities") have earned revenue by posting advertisements on their buses.

[3] In the summer and fall of 2004, the respondents, the Canadian Federation of Students — British Columbia Component ("CFS") and the British Columbia Teachers' Federation ("BCTF"), attempted to purchase advertising space on the sides of buses operated by the transit authorities. The CFS, a society which represents thousands of college and university students in B.C., sought to encourage more young people to vote in a provincial election scheduled for May 17, 2005 by posting, on buses, advertisements about the election. The first advertisement, which was to run the length of the bus, would have depicted a silhouette of a crowd at a concert with the following text:

Register now. Learn the issues. Vote May 17, 2005.
ROCKTHEVOTEBC.com

The second advertisement was a "banner ad" placed along the top of the bus which would have read in one long line as follows:

autobus au motif que leurs politiques en la matière autorisaient la publicité commerciale, mais non la publicité politique, sur les véhicules de transport en commun. Le présent pourvoi soulève la question de savoir si ces politiques doivent respecter la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Dans l'affirmative, la Cour doit déterminer si les politiques portent atteinte à la liberté d'expression des intimées garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte et, le cas échéant, s'il y a lieu de les invalider en application de l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982.

1. Faits et historique des procédures judiciaires

[2] Les sociétés appelantes, Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority (« TransLink ») et British Columbia Transit (« BC Transit »), exploitent des réseaux de transport en commun en Colombie-Britannique. TransLink gère le réseau de transport dans le territoire qui relève du district régional de Vancouver (« DRV »), et BC Transit exerce ses activités ailleurs en Colombie-Britannique. Depuis des années, les appelantes (les « commissions de transport ») tirent des revenus de l'affichage d'annonces dans l'espace publicitaire de leurs autobus.

[3] À l'été et à l'automne 2004, les intimées, la Fédération canadienne des étudiantes et étudiants — Section Colombie-Britannique (« FCEE ») et la British Columbia Teachers' Federation (« BCTF »), ont tenté de louer l'espace publicitaire sur les côtés des autobus des commissions de transport. Représentant des milliers d'étudiants des niveaux collégial et universitaire en Colombie-Britannique, la FCEE voulait, au moyen de messages publicitaires affichés sur les autobus, inciter les jeunes à voter aux élections provinciales du 17 mai 2005. Dans la première publicité devant occuper toute la longueur de l'autobus, la silhouette d'une foule assistant à un concert était accompagnée du texte suivant :

[TRADUCTION] Inscrivez-vous maintenant. Renseignez-vous sur les enjeux. Votez le 17 mai 2005.
ROCKTHEVOTEBC.com

La deuxième publicité — une bande censée occuper la partie supérieure de l'autobus — comportait le texte suivant sur une seule et même ligne :

Tuition fees ROCKTHEVOTEBC.com Minimum wage ROCKTHEVOTEBC.com Environment ROCKTHEVOTE BC.com

The BCTF, a society and trade union which is the exclusive bargaining agent for more than 40,000 public school teachers in B.C., sought to voice its concern about changes in the public education system by posting the following message:

2,500 fewer teachers, 114 schools closed.
Your kids. Our students. Worth speaking out for.

[4] The transit authorities refused to post the respondents' advertisements on the basis that such advertisements were not permitted by their advertising policies. The transit authorities had adopted essentially identical advertising policies, which included the following provisions:

POLICY:

. . .

2. Advertisements, to be accepted, shall be limited to those which communicate information concerning goods, services, public service announcements and public events.

. . .

Standards and Limitations

. . .

7. No advertisement will be accepted which is likely, in the light of prevailing community standards, to cause offence to any person or group of persons or create controversy;

. . .

9. No advertisement will be accepted which advocates or opposes any ideology or political philosophy, point of view, policy or action, or which conveys information about a political meeting, gathering or event, a political party or the candidacy of any person for a political position or public office;

[TRADUCTION] Frais de scolarité ROCKTHEVOTE BC.com Salaire minimum ROCKTHEVOTEBC.com Environnement ROCKTHEVOTEBC.com

Pour sa part, la BCTF, organisation syndicale et unique agent de négociation de plus de 40 000 enseignants de la Colombie-Britannique, voulait faire connaître son inquiétude au sujet de changements survenus dans le système d'éducation public. Son message était le suivant :

[TRADUCTION] 2 500 enseignants en moins. 114 écoles fermées.
Vos enfants. Nos élèves. Ça vaut la peine de se faire entendre.

[4] Les commissions de transport ont refusé les messages des intimées au motif que leur diffusion était contraire à leurs politiques publicitaires. Chacune de ces politiques essentiellement identiques comportait les dispositions suivantes :

[TRADUCTION]

POLITIQUE :

. . .

2. Seule est acceptée la publicité qui communique de l'information sur des biens, des services, des messages d'intérêt public et des événements publics.

. . .

Conditions et restrictions

. . .

7. Est exclue toute publicité susceptible, au regard des normes sociales reconnues, d'offenser une personne ou un groupe de personnes ou de susciter la controverse.

. . .

9. Est exclue toute publicité qui promeut ou conteste une idéologie ou une philosophie politique, un point de vue, une politique ou une mesure, ou qui renseigne sur une assemblée, un rassemblement ou un événement politique, un parti politique ou la candidature d'une personne à une fonction politique ou à une charge publique.

[5] The respondents commenced the present action, alleging that articles 2, 7 and 9 of the transit authorities' policies had violated their right to freedom of expression guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter. The respondents restricted their claim for relief to a declaration, "pursuant to s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, that [articles] 2, 7 and 9 of the advertising policies are unconstitutional and of no force and effect".

[6] Halfyard J. of the British Columbia Supreme Court dismissed the action (2006 BCSC 455, 266 D.L.R. (4th) 403). He determined that both BC Transit and TransLink were subject to the Charter since they were "government" within the meaning of s. 32 of the Charter. However, he concluded, on the basis of the factors set out in Montréal (City) v. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 SCC 62, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 141 ("City of Montréal"), and in Lehman v. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298 (1974), that the respondents' right to freedom of expression had not been infringed. In his view, since there was no history of permitting political or advocacy advertising on the sides of buses, the location was not a "public place".

[7] Halfyard J. went on to state that, had he found that the transit authorities' policies infringed the respondents' freedom of expression, he would have concluded that the total ban on political and other advocacy advertising was not a reasonably minimal impairment of freedom of expression and that the alleged benefits of the advertising restrictions did not outweigh their detrimental effects. Nevertheless, he would have found that the advertising policies failed the s. 1 test on the basis that the limits they imposed were not limits prescribed by law.

[8] The British Columbia Court of Appeal reversed the trial judgment (2006 BCCA 529, 64 B.C.L.R. (4th) 29). On the question of freedom of expression, Prowse J.A., writing for the majority, concluded that the trial judge had erred in finding that the transit authorities' advertising policies did not infringe the respondents' right to freedom of expression. In her view, Halfyard J. had

[5] Dans l'action à l'origine du présent pourvoi, les intimées ont allégué que les articles 2, 7 et 9 des politiques des commissions de transport avaient porté atteinte à leur liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Elles n'ont demandé, à titre de réparation, qu'un jugement [TRADUCTION] « fondé sur l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 déclarant inconstitutionnels et inopérants les articles 2, 7 et 9 des politiques publicitaires ».

[6] Le juge Halfyard de la Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique les a déboutées (2006 BCSC 455, 266 D.L.R. (4th) 403). Il a statué que BC Transit et TransLink étaient assujetties à la Charte puisqu'elles faisaient partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32 de la Charte, mais que le droit des intimées à la liberté d'expression n'avait pas été violé au regard des facteurs énoncés dans l'arrêt Montréal (Ville) c. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 CSC 62, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 141 (« Ville de Montréal »), et dans la décision Lehman c. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298 (1974). À son avis, le côté d'un autobus ne constituait pas un « espace public » parce que la publicité politique ou partisane n'y avait jamais été autorisée.

[7] Le juge Halfyard a ajouté que si les politiques des commissions de transport avaient violé le droit à la liberté d'expression des intimées, l'interdiction totale de la publicité politique ou partisane n'aurait pas constitué une atteinte raisonnablement minimale à la liberté d'expression, et les avantages allégués de la limitation de la publicité ne l'auraient pas emporté sur ses effets préjudiciables. Il aurait en outre conclu que les politiques publicitaires ne résistaient pas à l'analyse fondée sur l'article premier puisque, selon lui, les restrictions qu'elles prévoyaient n'étaient pas apportées par une règle de droit.

[8] La Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique a infirmé le jugement de première instance (2006 BCCA 529, 64 B.C.L.R. (4th) 29). Au sujet de la liberté d'expression, la juge Prowse a estimé au nom des juges majoritaires que le juge de première instance avait commis une erreur en concluant que les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport ne violaient pas le droit à la liberté d'expression erred, in applying City of Montréal, in considering the content of the advertisement and had mistakenly elevated the historical use of the sides of buses from a potential indicator that a place is a "public place" to an actual prerequisite for finding that it is. According to Prowse J.A., BC Transit and TransLink had a history of permitting advertising on their buses, and expression in this location could not therefore be viewed as inimical to the function of the buses as vehicles for public transportation.

[9] Regarding s. 1 of the Charter, Prowse J.A. declined to embark on her own analysis of whether the transit authorities' policies were "law" within the meaning of s. 1, and she neither accepted nor rejected the trial judge's finding on the issue. She felt that it was inappropriate to engage in this discussion given that the parties' submissions on s. 1 were insufficient. On a similar basis, she chose not to rule definitively on the issues of remedy, merely stating that if the policies were "law" within the meaning of s. 1, she could make an order under s. 52, and if they were not "law", she also had jurisdiction under s. 24(1) to make a similar order. Thus, she declared, without identifying the remedial provision upon which her order was actually based, that articles 7 and 9 of the advertising policies were of no force or effect. Although the validity of article 2 was raised before the trial judge, it was not referred to in the conclusion of the Court of Appeal.

[10] Southin J.A., dissenting, would have dismissed the appeal. In her view, what was at issue was the freedom of expression of both the transit authorities and the respondents. According to Southin J.A.'s interpretation, s. 2(b) includes a freedom not to publish a message or, in other words, it does not confer a right of access to "media of communication". Furthermore, in her view, there were no signs of state oppression in the transit authorities' refusal to post the respondents' advertisements.

des intimées. Selon elle, le juge Halfyard avait eu tort d'appliquer l'arrêt Ville de Montréal en tenant compte de la teneur de la publicité et en considérant l'utilisation antérieure des côtés des autobus non plus comme un simple indice possible du caractère public d'un espace, mais comme une condition essentielle à une conclusion en ce sens. À ses yeux, BC Transit et TransLink ayant déjà autorisé la publicité sur leurs autobus, on ne pouvait alors considérer que l'expression y était incompatible avec la fonction des véhicules, à savoir le transport en commun.

[9] Pour ce qui est de l'article premier de la Charte, la juge Prowse a refusé d'entreprendre sa propre analyse quant à savoir si la politique de chacune des commissions de transport constituait une « règle de droit ». Elle n'a ni accepté ni rejeté la conclusion du juge de première instance sur ce point. Cette analyse lui a paru inopportune, car les prétentions des parties portant sur l'article premier étaient insuffisantes. Pour les mêmes raisons, elle a décidé de ne pas se prononcer de façon définitive sur la question de la réparation, se contentant de dire que si chacune des politiques constituait une « règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier, elle pourrait rendre l'ordonnance en application de l'art. 52 et, dans le cas contraire, elle pourrait se prévaloir du par. 24(1) pour rendre une ordonnance au même effet. Sans préciser la disposition réparatrice en vertu de laquelle elle le faisait, elle a donc déclaré inopérants les articles 7 et 9 de chacune des politiques publicitaires. Bien que la validité de l'article 2 ait été soulevée devant le juge de première instance, la conclusion de la Cour d'appel ne mentionne pas cet article.

[10] Dissidente, la juge Southin aurait rejeté l'appel. À son avis, le litige opposait la liberté d'expression des commissions de transport à celle des intimées. Suivant son interprétation, l'al. 2*b*) comprenait la liberté de ne pas diffuser un message ou, en d'autres termes, il ne conférait aucun droit d'accès aux « moyens de communication ». En outre, elle ne voyait aucune manifestation d'oppression par l'État dans le refus des commissions de transport de diffuser les publicités des intimées.

[11] The transit authorities sought and were granted leave to appeal to this Court with respect to the constitutional validity of articles 2, 7 and 9 of the transit authorities' policies.

2. Issues

[12] There are four issues in this appeal: (1) whether the entities which operate the public transit systems in the GVRD and elsewhere in British Columbia are subject to the Charter; (2) if so, whether the impugned policies adopted by these entities infringe the respondents' right to freedom of expression; (3) if so, whether the limits imposed by those policies are "reasonable limits prescribed by law" within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter; and (4) whether a declaration can be made under s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982 with respect to the policies.

3. Analysis

3.1 Section 32 of the Charter: The Principles

[13] Section 32 identifies the entities to which the Charter applies. It reads:

> 32. (1) This Charter applies
>
> (a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and
>
> (b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

[14] On the face of the provision, the Charter applies not only to Parliament, the legislatures and the government themselves, but also to all matters within the authority of those entities. In Godbout v. Longueuil (City), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 844, La Forest J. explained the rationale for the broad reach of s. 32 as follows (at para. 48):

> Were the Charter to apply only to those bodies that are institutionally part of government but not to those [11] Les commissions de transport ont obtenu la permission d'en appeler devant notre Cour concernant la validité constitutionnelle des articles 2, 7 et 9 de leurs politiques publicitaires.

2. Questions en litige

[12] Quatre questions sont en litige. Premièrement, les sociétés qui exploitent les réseaux de transport en commun dans le DRV et ailleurs en Colombie-Britannique sont-elles assujetties à la Charte? Deuxièmement, dans l'affirmative, les politiques contestées adoptées par les sociétés portent-elles atteinte au droit à la liberté d'expression des intimées? Troisièmement, dans l'affirmative, chacune de ces politiques constitue-t-elle une « règle de droit » établissant des limites raisonnables au sens de l'article premier de la Charte? Et quatrièmement, ces politiques peuvent-elles faire l'objet d'un jugement déclaratoire fondé sur l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982?

3. Analyse

3.1 Les principes sous-tendant l'art. 32 de la Charte

[13] L'article 32, qui détermine l'assujettissement à la Charte, est libellé comme suit :

> 32. (1) La présente charte s'applique :
>
> a) au Parlement et au gouvernement du Canada, pour tous les domaines relevant du Parlement, y compris ceux qui concernent le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest;
>
> b) à la législature et au gouvernement de chaque province, pour tous les domaines relevant de cette législature.

[14] Il appert de cette disposition que la Charte s'applique non seulement au Parlement, aux législatures et au gouvernement lui-même, mais aussi à tous les domaines relevant d'eux. Dans l'arrêt Godbout c. Longueuil (Ville), [1997] 3 R.C.S. 844, le juge La Forest explique la raison d'être de la grande portée de l'art. 32 (par. 48) :

> Si la Charte devait en effet ne s'appliquer qu'aux organismes faisant institutionnellement partie du that are — as a simple matter of fact — governmental in nature (or performing a governmental act), the federal government and the provinces could easily shirk their Charter obligations by conferring certain of their powers on other entities and having those entities carry out what are, in reality, governmental activities or policies. In other words, Parliament, the provincial legislatures and the federal and provincial executives could simply create bodies distinct from themselves, vest those bodies with the power to perform governmental functions and, thereby, avoid the constraints imposed upon their activities through the operation of the Charter. Clearly, this course of action would indirectly narrow the ambit of protection afforded by the Charter in a manner that could hardly have been intended and with consequences that are, to say the least, undesirable. Indeed, in view of their fundamental importance, Charter rights must be safeguarded from possible attempts to narrow their scope unduly or to circumvent altogether the obligations they engender. [Emphasis added.]

[15] In Eldridge v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 624, La Forest J. reviewed the position the Court had taken in McKinney v. University of Guelph, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 229 (university), Harrison v. University of British Columbia, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 451 (university), Stoffman v. Vancouver General Hospital, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 483 (hospital), Douglas/Kwantlen Faculty Assn. v. Douglas College, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 570 (college), and Lavigne v. Ontario Public Service Employees Union, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 211 (college), on the issue of the status of various entities as "government". Writing for a unanimous Court, he summarized the applicable principles as follows (at para. 44):

. . . the Charter may be found to apply to an entity on one of two bases. First, it may be determined that the entity is itself "government" for the purposes of s. 32. This involves an inquiry into whether the entity whose actions have given rise to the alleged Charter breach can, either by its very nature or in virtue of the degree of governmental control exercised over it, properly be characterized as "government" within the meaning of s. 32(1). In such cases, all of the activities of the entity will be subject to the Charter, regardless of whether the activity in which it is engaged could, if performed by a gouvernement et non à ceux qui sont de nature gouvernementale (ou qui accomplissent des actes gouvernementaux) dans les faits, le gouvernement fédéral et les provinces pourraient facilement se soustraire aux obligations que la Charte leur impose en octroyant certains de leurs pouvoirs à d'autres entités et en leur faisant exécuter des fonctions ou appliquer des politiques qui sont, en réalité, gouvernementales. Autrement dit, le Parlement, les législatures provinciales et la branche exécutive des gouvernements fédéral ou provinciaux n'auraient qu'à créer des organismes distincts d'eux et à leur conférer le pouvoir d'exécuter des fonctions gouvernementales pour échapper aux contraintes que la Charte impose à leurs activités. De toute évidence, cette façon de faire réduirait indirectement la portée de la protection prévue par la Charte d'une manière que le législateur pourrait difficilement avoir voulue et entraînerait des conséquences pour le moins indésirables. En effet, compte tenu de leur importance fondamentale, les droits garantis par la Charte doivent être protégés contre toute tentative visant à en réduire indûment la portée ou à échapper complètement aux obligations qui en découlent. [Je souligne.]

[15] Dans l'arrêt Eldridge c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1997] 3 R.C.S. 624, le juge La Forest s'est penché sur le point de vue adopté par la Cour dans les arrêts McKinney c. Université de Guelph, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 229 (université), Harrison c. Université de la Colombie-Britannique, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 451 (université), Stoffman c. Vancouver General Hospital, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 483 (hôpital), Douglas/Kwantlen Faculty Assn. c. Douglas College, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 570 (collège), et Lavigne c. Syndicat des employés de la fonction publique de l'Ontario, [1991] 2 R.C.S. 211 (collège), au sujet du caractère « gouvernemental » de diverses entités. Au nom des juges unanimes de la Cour, il résume comme suit les principes applicables (par. 44) :

. . . il peut être jugé que la Charte s'applique à une entité pour l'une ou l'autre des deux raisons suivantes. Premièrement, il peut être décidé que l'entité elle-même fait partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32. Une telle conclusion requiert l'examen de la question de savoir si l'entité dont les actes ont suscité l'allégation d'atteinte à la Charte peut — soit de par sa nature même, soit à cause du degré de contrôle exercé par le gouvernement sur elle — être à juste titre considérée comme faisant partie du « gouvernement » au sens du par. 32(1). En pareil cas, toutes les activités de l'entité sont assujetties à la Charte, non-governmental actor, correctly be described as "private". Second, an entity may be found to attract Charter scrutiny with respect to a particular activity that can be ascribed to government. This demands an investigation not into the nature of the entity whose activity is impugned but rather into the nature of the activity itself. In such cases, in other words, one must scrutinize the quality of the act at issue, rather than the quality of the actor. If the act is truly "governmental" in nature — for example, the implementation of a specific statutory scheme or a government program — the entity performing it will be subject to review under the Charter only in respect of that act, and not its other, private activities.

indépendamment du fait que l'activité en cause pourrait à juste titre être qualifiée de « privée » si elle était exercée par un acteur non gouvernemental. Deuxièmement, une activité particulière d'une entité peut être sujette à révision en vertu de la Charte si cette activité peut être attribuée au gouvernement. Il convient alors d'examiner non pas la nature de l'entité dont l'activité est contestée, mais plutôt la nature de l'activité elle-même. Autrement dit, il faut, en pareil cas, s'interroger sur la qualité de l'acte en cause plutôt que sur la qualité de l'acteur. Si l'acte est vraiment de nature « gouvernementale » — par exemple, la mise en œuvre d'un régime légal ou d'un programme gouvernemental donné — l'entité qui en est chargée est assujettie à l'examen fondé sur la Charte, mais seulement en ce qui a trait à cet acte, et non à ses autres activités privées.

[16] Thus, there are two ways to determine whether the Charter applies to an entity's activities: by enquiring into the nature of the entity or by enquiring into the nature of its activities. If the entity is found to be "government", either because of its very nature or because the government exercises substantial control over it, all its activities will be subject to the Charter. If an entity is not itself a government entity but nevertheless performs governmental activities, only those activities which can be said to be governmental in nature will be subject to the Charter.

[16] Deux avenues s'offrent donc pour déterminer si la Charte s'applique aux activités d'une entité : l'examen de la nature de l'entité ou celui de ses activités. Si on conclut que l'entité fait partie du « gouvernement », soit par sa nature même, soit à cause du pouvoir substantiel que l'État exerce sur elle, toutes ses activités sont assujetties à la Charte. Si l'entité comme telle ne fait pas partie du gouvernement, mais qu'elle exerce tout de même des activités gouvernementales, seules les activités pouvant être qualifiées de gouvernementales par nature sont assujetties à la Charte.

3.1.1 Application of the Principles to the Transit Authorities

3.1.1 Application des principes aux commissions de transport

[17] In this Court, BC Transit does not address the trial judge's conclusion that it is itself "government" within the meaning of s. 32 of the Charter. It is clearly a government entity. It is a statutory body designated by legislation as an "agent of the government", with a board of directors whose members are all appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council (British Columbia Transit Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 38, ss. 2(5) and 4(1)). Moreover, the Lieutenant Governor in Council has the power to manage BC Transit's affairs and operations by means of regulations (s. 32(2)). Thus, BC Transit cannot be said to be operating autonomously from the provincial government, since the latter has the power to exercise substantial control over its day-to-day activities.

[17] Devant notre Cour, BC Transit n'a formulé aucune observation concernant la conclusion du juge de première instance selon laquelle elle fait elle-même partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32 de la Charte. Il s'agit clairement d'une entité gouvernementale par nature. Créature législative, elle est désignée [TRADUCTION] « mandataire du gouvernement » et dotée d'un conseil d'administration dont les membres sont tous nommés par le lieutenant-gouverneur en conseil (British Columbia Transit Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 38, par. 2(5) et 4(1)). En outre, ce dernier a le pouvoir de diriger les activités de BC Transit par l'adoption de règlements (par. 32(2)). BC Transit ne peut donc pas être considérée comme une entité indépendante du gouvernement provincial, car ce dernier a un grand pouvoir sur son fonctionnement quotidien.

[18] As for TransLink, it argues that the trial judge and the majority of the Court of Appeal erred in finding that it is "government" within the meaning of s. 32 of the Charter. Prowse J.A. found that because TransLink is controlled by the GVRD, which itself is "government" within the meaning of s. 32, it is an apparatus of government. She based her finding that the GVRD was governmental in nature on s. 5 of the Local Government Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 323 ("LGA"), which defines "local government" as "the council of a municipality" and "the board of a regional district". She added that regional districts are corporations (s. 173), that they are governed by boards (s. 174) and that the boards consist of municipal directors and electoral area directors (s. 783(1)). Furthermore, the LGA describes regional districts as "independent, responsible and accountable order[s] of government within their jurisdiction" and states that a regional district is intended to provide "good government for its community" (s. 2(a)). The GVRD therefore clearly falls within the definition of "local government".

[18] Pour sa part, TransLink prétend que le juge de première instance et les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel ont conclu à tort qu'elle fait partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32 de la Charte. La juge Prowse est arrivée à la conclusion que TransLink appartient à l'appareil gouvernemental parce qu'elle relève du DRV, qui fait lui-même partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32. Sa conclusion que le DRV est par nature assimilable au gouvernement repose sur l'art. 5 de la Local Government Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 323 (« LGA »), suivant lequel [TRADUCTION] « gouvernement local » s'entend du « conseil d'une municipalité » et du « conseil d'un district régional ». La juge a en outre fait observer qu'un district régional est une société (art. 173), que dirige un conseil (art. 174), lui-même composé d'administrateurs municipaux et d'administrateurs de secteurs électoraux (par. 783(1)). De plus, la LGA dispose que le district régional est un [TRADUCTION] « palier de gouvernement indépendant et responsable sur son territoire » et que sa raison d'être est de veiller au [TRADUCTION] « bon gouvernement dans l'intérêt de la collectivité » (al. 2a)). Le DRV est donc clairement un « gouvernement local ».

[19] One might add to the criteria upon which Prowse J.A. based her conclusion the facts that, subject to specific limitations established in the LGA, a regional district may operate any service that the board considers necessary or desirable for its geographic area (s. 796(1)), and that it may recover the costs of its services (s. 803(1)). Moreover, the board of a regional district has the power to make bylaws which are enforceable by fine or by imprisonment (s. 266(1)). Consequently, not only is the GVRD designated as "government" in the LGA, but the legislature has granted it powers consistent with that status.

[19] On pourrait ajouter aux critères invoqués par la juge Prowse le fait que, sous réserve des restrictions particulières établies en vertu de la LGA, un district régional peut exploiter tout service que le conseil juge nécessaire ou souhaitable sur son territoire (par. 796(1)) et recouvrer le coût de ses services (par. 803(1)). Par ailleurs, son conseil peut prendre des règlements et les faire respecter au moyen d'amendes ou de peines d'emprisonnement (par. 266(1)). Ainsi, le DRV fait non seulement partie du « gouvernement » suivant la LGA, mais le législateur lui accorde des pouvoirs en conséquence.

[20] Having established that the GVRD is "government", Prowse J.A. went on to conclude that the GVRD exercises substantial control over TransLink:

[20] Après avoir déterminé que le DRV fait partie du « gouvernement », la juge Prowse conclut qu'il exerce un grand pouvoir sur TransLink :

. . . the GVRD has substantial control over the day-to-day operations of TransLink which, when combined with the GVRD's powers to appoint the vast majority of the members of TransLink's board of directors, satisfies the control test posited by the authorities. To the extent that the GVRD does not have complete control over TransLink, control is shared by the provincial government. In either case, I conclude that TransLink cannot be viewed to be operating independently or autonomously in a manner similar to either universities or hospitals. It has no independent agenda other than that provided in its constituent Act and no history of being an entity independent of government. [para. 93]

[TRADUCTION] . . . le DRV exerce sur le fonctionnement quotidien de TransLink un grand pouvoir qui, jumelé à celui de nommer la grande majorité des membres du

[21] Prowse J.A. came to this conclusion after reviewing the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, c. 30, and remarking that the GVRD must appoint 12 of the 15 directors on TransLink's board (s. 8(1) and (2)) and must ratify TransLink's strategic transportation plan (s. 14(4)), that TransLink must "prepare all its capital and service plans and policies and carry out all its activities and services in a manner that is consistent with its strategic transportation plan" (s. 14(3)), and that the GVRD must ratify bylaws relating to a variety of taxes and levies (ss. 25(3), 29(5), 29.1(5) and 133(5)). Although TransLink is not an agent of the government, Prowse J.A. concluded that it is substantially controlled by a local government entity — the GVRD — and is therefore itself a government entity. The control mechanisms are substantial, and I agree with Prowse J.A.'s analysis and conclusion on this issue.

[22] The conclusion that TransLink is a government entity is also supported by the principle enunciated by La Forest J. in Eldridge (at para. 42) and Godbout (at para. 48) that a government should not be able to shirk its Charter obligations by simply conferring its powers on another entity. The creation of TransLink by statute in 1998 and the partial vesting by the province of control over the region's public transit system in the GVRD was not a move towards the privatization of transit services, but an administrative restructuring designed to place more power in the hands of local governments (B.C.C.A. reasons, at paras. 75-79). The devolution of provincial responsibilities for public transit to the GVRD cannot therefore be viewed as having created a "Charter-free" zone for the public transit system in Greater Vancouver.

conseil d'administration, satisfait au critère établi par la jurisprudence. Dans la mesure où TransLink ne relève pas entièrement du DRV, elle relève aussi en partie du gouvernement provincial. Dans un cas comme dans l'autre, j'arrive à la conclusion que TransLink ne peut être considérée comme une entité exerçant ses activités de façon indépendante à l'instar d'une université ou d'un hôpital. Elle n'a pas d'autres objectifs que ceux prévus dans sa loi constitutive et elle n'a jamais constitué une entité indépendante du gouvernement. [par. 93]

[21] La juge Prowse arrive à cette conclusion après avoir constaté que suivant la Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, ch. 30, le DRV nomme 12 des 15 administrateurs de TransLink (par. 8(1) et (2)) et ratifie son plan stratégique de transport (par. 14(4)), TransLink [TRADUCTION] « établit ses plans et ses politiques en matière d'immobilisations et de services, exerce ses activités et offre ses services conformément à son plan stratégique de transport » (par. 14(3)) et le DRV ratifie les règlements se rapportant à divers taxes et prélèvements (par. 25(3), 29(5), 29.1(5) et 133(5)). TransLink n'est pas un mandataire du gouvernement mais, pour la juge Prowse, elle est en grande partie assujettie au gouvernement local — le DRV —, de sorte qu'il s'agit d'une entité gouvernementale. Les indices de cet assujettissement sont importants, et je suis d'accord avec l'analyse et la conclusion de la juge Prowse sur ce point.

[22] Le principe énoncé par le juge La Forest dans les arrêts Eldridge (par. 42) et Godbout (par. 48) — le gouvernement ne devrait pas pouvoir se soustraire aux obligations que lui impose la Charte en octroyant simplement ses pouvoirs à une autre entité — étaye également la conclusion que TransLink est une entité gouvernementale. La création légale de TransLink en 1998 et le transfert partiel au DRV du pouvoir de la province sur le réseau de transport en commun de la région ne visaient pas la privatisation des services de transport, mais plutôt la réorganisation administrative par l'octroi de pouvoirs accrus aux gouvernements locaux (motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 75-79). On ne saurait donc conclure que ce transfert de pouvoirs provinciaux au DRV a soustrait le réseau de transport en commun du Grand Vancouver à l'application de la Charte.

[23] At this point, I should mention that the legislation considered by the courts below has been repealed since the time of the events at issue in this case. Pursuant to the South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, c. 30, TransLink's activities are now conducted by the South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority. The provisions of the new statute are not before the Court, and I need not comment on them here.

[24] In summary, both BC Transit and TransLink are "government" within the meaning of s. 32 of the Charter. Consequently, it is not necessary to enquire into the nature of individual activities, because all their activities are subject to the Charter, regardless of whether a given activity can correctly be described as "private" (Eldridge, at para. 44).

3.2 Section 2(b) of the Charter

[25] Since I have established that, for the purposes of s. 32 of the Charter, the transit authorities are government entities, it follows that the Charter applies to all their activities, including the operation of the buses they own. As I mentioned above, the transit authorities have earned revenues from advertising posted on their buses for years. BC Transit has permitted advertising inside its buses since the 1980s and on the outsides for over a decade, and TransLink has permitted advertising on the outsides of its buses ever since it came into existence in 1998. The transit authorities' policies, which regulate both the content and the form of advertisements, are at the heart of the debate. The respondents sought to post various advertisements on the sides of buses, and their requests were rejected by the transit authorities on the basis that articles 2, 7 and 9 of the policies prohibited political advertisements or advertisements of a controversial nature.

[26] The respondents submit that articles 2, 7 and 9 unjustifiably infringe their rights under s. 2(b) of the Charter. In the respondents' view, their claim centres on the use of government property for public expression without undue state interference with the content of their expression, and should

[23] Signalons au passage que les dispositions législatives considérées par les tribunaux inférieurs ont été abrogées depuis les événements à l'origine du litige. La South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority Act, S.B.C. 1998, ch. 30, confie désormais les activités de TransLink à South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority. Les dispositions de la nouvelle loi ne sont pas visées par le présent pourvoi, et il n'y a pas lieu de les commenter.

[24] En résumé, BC Transit et TransLink font toutes deux partie du « gouvernement » au sens de l'art. 32 de la Charte. Il n'est donc pas nécessaire d'examiner la nature de chacune de leurs activités, car elles sont toutes assujetties à la Charte, peu importe qu'elles puissent à juste titre être qualifiées de « privées » (arrêt Eldridge, par. 44).

3.2 L'alinéa 2b) de la Charte

[25] Puisque les commissions de transport constituent des entités gouvernementales aux fins de l'art. 32 de la Charte, toutes leurs activités, y compris l'exploitation des autobus qu'elles possèdent, sont assujetties à la Charte. Je rappelle que depuis des années, les commissions de transport tirent des revenus de la publicité sur les autobus. BC Transit autorise la publicité à l'intérieur des véhicules depuis les années 1980 et à l'extérieur depuis plus d'une décennie. TransLink autorise la publicité sur la partie extérieure des autobus depuis sa création en 1998. Les commissions de transport réglementent le contenu et la forme de la publicité. Leurs politiques en la matière sont au cœur du litige. Les intimées ont demandé l'affichage de différentes publicités sur les côtés des autobus, et les commissions de transport ont refusé au motif que les articles 2, 7 et 9 de leur politique respective interdisaient la publicité politique ou celle prêtant à controverse.

[26] Les intimées soutiennent que les articles 2, 7 et 9 portent indûment atteinte aux droits que leur garantit l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Elles disent revendiquer le droit à l'utilisation de biens gouvernementaux aux fins d'expression publique sans restriction injustifiée de la teneur de leur expression par l'État, de therefore be resolved using the analysis for public space expression set out by this Court in City of Montréal. The transit authorities counter that the respondents are seeking to gain access to a particular platform for expression and that they are invoking the Charter to place these government entities under a positive obligation to make buses available for their expression. More specifically, BC Transit describes the respondents' claim as one of underinclusion on the basis that they are seeking to have the scope of the advertising service extended to include political advertising. In addition, both BC Transit and TransLink characterize the claim as a positive rights claim on the basis that the respondents cannot engage in the expression at issue without their support or enablement. Accordingly, the transit authorities state that the claim should be resolved using the framework set out in Baier v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 31, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 673, rather than by applying the City of Montréal test, as the trial judge and the majority of the Court of Appeal have done in the case at bar.

[27] This Court has long taken a generous and purposive approach to the interpretation of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter (Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295). It has not departed from this general principle in the context of s. 2(b): RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573, at p. 588; Ford v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 712, at pp. 748-49 and 766-67; Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927; R. v. Keegstra, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697. An activity by which one conveys or attempts to convey meaning will prima facie be protected by s. 2(b) (Irwin Toy, at pp. 968-69). Furthermore, the Court has recognized that s. 2(b) protects an individual's right to express him or herself in certain public places (Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada v. Canada, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 139 (airports); Ramsden v. Peterborough (City), [1993] 2 S.C.R. 1084 (utility poles); and City of Montréal, at para. 61 (city streets)). Therefore, not only is expressive activity prima facie protected, but so too is the right to such activity in certain public locations (City of Montréal, at para. 61).

sorte que la question devrait être tranchée en fonction du cadre d'analyse établi par notre Cour dans l'arrêt Ville de Montréal relativement à l'expression dans un espace ou un endroit public. Les commissions de transport rétorquent que les intimées revendiquent plutôt l'accès à une tribune particulière et qu'elles invoquent la Charte pour imposer à l'État l'obligation positive de mettre les autobus à leur disposition aux fins d'expression. Plus précisément, BC Transit estime que les intimées plaident la restriction excessive puisqu'elles demandent que la publicité acceptée englobe celle dont la teneur est politique. De plus, pour BC Transit et TransLink, il s'agit de la revendication d'un droit positif en ce que les intimées ne peuvent s'exprimer comme elles le veulent sans que les appelantes appuient l'activité expressive ou la permettent. De l'avis des commissions de transport, il faudrait donc trancher en fonction du cadre d'analyse que la Cour a établi dans l'arrêt Baier c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 31, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 673, et non appliquer le test de l'arrêt Ville de Montréal comme l'ont fait en l'espèce le juge de première instance et les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel.

[27] Depuis longtemps, la Cour interprète de manière généreuse et téléologique les droits et libertés garantis par la Charte (Hunter c. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 R.C.S. 145; R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 R.C.S. 295). Son interprétation de l'al. 2*b*) ne fait pas exception : SDGMR c. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., [1986] 2 R.C.S. 573, p. 588; Ford c. Québec (Procureur général), [1988] 2 R.C.S. 712, p. 748-749 et 766-767; Irwin Toy Ltd. c. Québec (Procureur général), [1989] 1 R.C.S. 927; R. c. Keegstra, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 697. L'activité par laquelle on transmet ou tente de transmettre un message bénéficie de prime abord de la protection de l'al. 2*b*) (Irwin Toy, p. 968-969). De plus, la Cour a reconnu que l'al. 2*b*) protège le droit individuel de s'exprimer dans certains endroits ou espaces publics (Comité pour la République du Canada c. Canada, [1991] 1 R.C.S. 139 (aéroport); Ramsden c. Peterborough (Ville), [1993] 2 R.C.S. 1084 (poteau électrique); Ville de Montréal, par. 61 (voie publique)). La Charte protège donc de prime abord non seulement l'activité expressive, mais aussi le droit de l'exercer dans certains lieux publics (Ville de Montréal, par. 61).

[28] However, s. 2(b) of the Charter is not without limits and governments will not be required to justify every restriction on expression under s. 1 (Baier, at para. 20). The method or location of expression may exclude it from protection: for example, violent expression or threats of violence fall outside the scope of the s. 2(b) guarantee, and individuals do not have a constitutional right to express themselves on all government property.

[29] As well, although s. 2(b) protects everyone from undue government interference with expression, it generally does not go so far as to place the government under an obligation to facilitate expression by providing individuals with a particular means of expression (Haig v. Canada, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 995). Thus, where the government creates such a means, it is generally entitled to determine which speakers are allowed to participate. A speaker who is excluded from such means does not have a s. 2(b) right to participate unless she or he meets the criteria set out in Baier. Of course, other constitutional obligations — those under s. 15 of the Charter, for example — still apply.

[30] In Baier, Rothstein J., writing for the majority, summarized the criteria for identifying the limited circumstances in which s. 2(b) requires the government to extend an underinclusive means of, or "platform" for, expression to a particular group or individual. In that case, schoolteachers were challenging Alberta legislation which prohibited them from running for election as school trustees. Rothstein J. observed that the teachers, by seeking access to a government-created platform for expression, were asking the government to enable their expressive activity and were therefore asserting a positive right. The question that must be answered in the case at bar, therefore, is whether the Baier analysis is triggered.

[31] The transit authorities' advertising policies authorize any "[a]dvertisements . . . which communicate information concerning goods, services, public service announcements and public events"

[28] Cependant, la protection offerte à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte n'est pas illimitée, et le gouvernement n'a pas à justifier au regard de l'article premier toute restriction de la liberté d'expression (Baier, par. 20). Le mode ou le lieu de l'expression peut écarter la protection : par exemple, l'expression violente ou la menace de recourir à la violence ne bénéficient pas de la garantie constitutionnelle, et la Charte ne garantit pas à chacun le droit de s'exprimer dans tout espace gouvernemental.

[29] Aussi, même si l'al. 2*b*) protège chacun contre la restriction injustifiée de l'expression par l'État, il n'oblige généralement pas ce dernier à favoriser l'expression individuelle par la mise à la disposition de chacun d'un mode d'expression en particulier (Haig c. Canada, [1993] 2 R.C.S. 995). Ainsi, lorsqu'il crée un mode d'expression, l'État est généralement admis à décider de ceux qui pourront s'en prévaloir. La personne qui n'y a pas accès ne peut invoquer l'al. 2*b*) à l'encontre de cette exclusion que si elle satisfait aux critères de l'arrêt Baier. Évidemment, d'autres obligations constitutionnelles — dont celles découlant de l'art. 15 de la Charte — s'appliquent toujours.

[30] Dans l'arrêt Baier, au nom des juges majoritaires, le juge Rothstein résume les critères permettant de déterminer les quelques circonstances dans lesquelles l'al. 2*b*) exige du gouvernement qu'il mette à la disposition d'une personne ou d'un groupe de personnes un mode d'expression ou une « tribune » dont l'accès est trop restreint. Dans cette affaire, des enseignants contestaient une loi albertaine qui leur interdisait de se porter candidats aux postes de conseillers scolaires. Le juge Rothstein a fait observer qu'en demandant l'accès à une tribune d'origine législative, les enseignants demandaient au gouvernement de leur fournir un moyen pour donner cours à leur activité expressive et visaient donc l'obtention d'une mesure positive. Il faut donc déterminer si le cadre de l'arrêt Baier s'applique en l'espèce.

[31] Les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport autorisent [TRADUCTION] « la publicité qui communique de l'information sur des biens, des services, des messages d'intérêt public et des (article 2). The policies are designed to enable a large number of speakers to reach a large audience. The respondents sought to post political advertisements on buses by means of the transit authorities' advertising service. The content of their expressive activity was the political message and the means of expression was the advertising service enabling expression on the sides of the buses. The advertisements were rejected on the basis of their political content, not on the basis that the advertising service was not available to the respondents.

[32] At first glance, since the respondents are not themselves excluded from access to the advertising service, it seems difficult to characterize their claim as one against underinclusion. The advertising service is not a platform created for a limited group of individuals or for a very narrow purpose. Rather, it is accessible to anyone who wishes to advertise and is willing to pay a fee. According to BC Transit, however, the respondents are challenging the underinclusive scope of the platform for expression on the basis that it excludes political advertising. Care must be taken not to confuse the notion of an underinclusive platform for expression with government limits on the content of expression. I do not need to revisit here the factors set out in Dunmore v. Ontario (Attorney General), 2001 SCC 94, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 1016, at paras. 24-26 and 31-33, and summarized in Baier, at para. 27 — suffice it to say that to succeed in its argument that the respondents' claim is one of underinclusiveness, BC Transit had to at least demonstrate that the respondents themselves were excluded from the particular means of expression. But this is not what the respondents are arguing. The policies do not prevent them from using the advertising service as a means of expression. Only the content of their advertisements is restricted. Thus, their claim cannot be characterized as one against underinclusion. In contrast, in Baier, school trusteeship was the very means of the expressive activity, and the claimants were being denied access to that means.

[33] However, both BC Transit and TransLink also characterize the claim as one for a positive right on the basis that the respondents required événements publics » (article 2). Elles sont conçues pour permettre à un grand nombre d'annonceurs d'avoir accès à un large auditoire. Les intimées se sont adressées au service publicitaire des commissions de transport pour faire afficher leurs publicités politiques sur les autobus. La teneur de l'activité expressive était le message politique et le mode d'expression était le service publicitaire permettant l'expression sur les côtés des autobus. Les publicités ont été refusées à cause de leur teneur politique, et non parce que les intimées n'avaient pas accès au service publicitaire.

[32] À première vue, comme les intimées ne sont pas elles-mêmes privées de l'accès au service publicitaire, il paraît difficile de considérer qu'elles contestent le caractère trop restreint d'une tribune. Le service publicitaire ne constitue pas une tribune créée à l'intention d'un groupe limité de personnes ou à une fin très précise. Il est en fait à la disposition de tout annonceur disposé à payer les frais exigibles. Or, selon BC Transit, les intimées prétendent que la tribune a un caractère trop restreint parce qu'elle exclut la publicité politique. Il ne faut pas confondre caractère trop restreint de la tribune et restriction par l'État du contenu de l'expression. Nul besoin de revenir en l'espèce sur les facteurs énoncés dans l'arrêt Dunmore c. Ontario (Procureur général), 2001 CSC 94, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 1016 (par. 24-26 et 31-33), et résumés dans Baier (par. 27). Il suffit de signaler que pour faire valoir sa thèse avec succès, BC Transit devait au moins prouver que les intimées n'avaient pas elles-mêmes accès au mode d'expression en cause. Or, ce n'est pas ce que les intimées avancent. Les politiques ne les empêchent pas de recourir au service publicitaire en tant que mode d'expression. Seul le contenu de leurs publicités est visé par une restriction. On ne peut donc affirmer que les intimées contestent le caractère trop restreint de la tribune. Enfin, dans l'affaire Baier, le conseil scolaire constituait le mode même de l'activité expressive, et l'accès à ce mode d'expression était refusé aux demandeurs.

[33] Or, BC Transit et TransLink attribuent toutes deux aux intimées la revendication d'un droit positif parce que celles-ci leur auraient demandé their support and enablement to convey the messages in question. A few comments are in order.

[34] In Baier, Rothstein J. stated (at para. 35):

> To determine whether a right claimed is a positive right, the question is whether the appellants claim the government must legislate or otherwise act to support or enable an expressive activity. Making the case for a negative right would require the appellants to seek freedom from government legislation or action suppressing an expressive activity in which people would otherwise be free to engage, without any need for any government support or enablement.

The words "act to support or enable", taken out of context, could be construed as transforming many freedom of expression cases into "positive rights claims". Expression in public places invariably involves some form of government support or enablement. Streets, parks and other public places are often created or maintained by government legislation or action. If government support or enablement were all that was required to trigger a "positive rights analysis", it could be argued that a claim brought by demonstrators seeking access to a public park should be dealt with under the Baier analysis because to give effect to such a claim would require the government to enable the expression by providing the necessary resource (i.e., the place). But to argue this would be to misconstrue Baier.

[35] When the reasons in Baier are read as a whole, it is clear that "support or enablement" must be tied to a claim requiring the government to provide a particular means of expression. In Baier, a distinction was drawn between placing an obligation on government to provide individuals with a particular platform for expression and protecting the underlying freedom of expression of those who are free to participate in expression on a platform (para. 42). Consequently, the transit authorities' interpretation of the notion of a positive rights claim is overly broad and was in fact rejected in Baier. The respondents seek the freedom to express d'appuyer et de permettre leur activité expressive par la diffusion des messages. Quelques remarques s'imposent.

[34] Dans l'arrêt Baier, le juge Rothstein dit ce qui suit (par. 35) :

> Pour déterminer si le droit invoqué est positif, il faut se demander si les appelants prétendent que le gouvernement devrait légiférer ou prendre d'autres mesures pour appuyer ou permettre une activité expressive. Pour que nous soyons en présence d'un droit négatif, il faudrait que les appelants cherchent à ne pas être assujettis à des dispositions législatives ou à des mesures gouvernementales supprimant une activité expressive qu'ils seraient autrement libres d'exercer sans appui ou habilitation de la part du gouvernement.

Interprétés hors contexte, les mots « mesures pour appuyer ou permettre » pourraient dans bien des cas transformer une affaire de liberté d'expression en une revendication de droit positif. L'expression dans un endroit ou un espace public suppose nécessairement quelque appui ou habilitation de la part du gouvernement. L'existence de rues, de parcs et d'autres lieux publics tient souvent à une loi ou à une mesure gouvernementale. S'il suffisait que l'État appuie ou permette l'activité expressive pour que soit justifié l'examen sous l'angle de la revendication d'un droit positif, on pourrait soutenir que la demande d'accès à un parc public par des manifestants devrait être considérée en fonction du cadre d'analyse de l'arrêt Baier, car pour accéder à la demande, l'État devrait permettre l'expression par la mise à disposition du moyen requis (le lieu). Ce serait mal interpréter l'arrêt Baier.

[35] Interprété globalement, l'arrêt Baier indique clairement que le fait d'appuyer ou de permettre l'activité expressive doit être relié à une demande faite à l'État de donner accès à un mode d'expression en particulier. En effet, dans cet arrêt, la Cour distingue entre imposer à l'État l'obligation de mettre une tribune donnée à la disposition de citoyens et protéger la liberté d'expression sous-jacente de ceux qui ont la faculté de se prévaloir d'une tribune (par. 42). L'interprétation de la notion de revendication d'un droit positif que préconisent les commissions de transport est donc trop large et la Cour l'a en fait rejetée dans Baier. Les intimées themselves — by means of an existing platform they are entitled to use — without undue state interference with the content of their expression. They are not requesting that the government support or enable their expressive activity by providing them with a particular means of expression from which they are excluded.

[36] I find that the transit authorities have not shown that the respondents' claim falls under the Baier analysis. I must now determine whether the expression should be denied s. 2(b) protection on the basis of location. This inquiry is conducted pursuant to the analytical framework developed in City of Montréal.

3.2.1 Application of City of Montréal

[37] In order to determine whether the transit authorities' advertising policies infringe s. 2(b) of the Charter, three questions must be asked: First, do the respondents' proposed advertisements have expressive content that brings them within the prima facie protection of s. 2(b)? Second, if so, does the method or location of this expression remove that protection? Third, if the expression is protected by s. 2(b), do the transit authorities' policies deny that protection? (City of Montréal, at para. 56) If the policies are found to have infringed s. 2(b) of the Charter, the analysis then shifts to determining whether the infringement is justified under s. 1 of the Charter.

[38] The answer to the first question is not in issue. The proposed advertisements unquestionably have expressive content. The answer to the third question is also uncontroversial, although the question is not, as the trial judge suggested, whether all political speech is prohibited, but whether either the purpose or the effect of the government measures is to place a limit on expression. In the instant case, the very purpose of the impugned policies is to restrict the content of expression in the advertising space on the sides of buses. The wording of articles 2 and 7 clearly limits the content of advertisements. Article 9 is even more precise in excluding political speech. As the majority of the Court réclament la liberté de s'exprimer — à une tribune existante qu'elles ont le droit d'utiliser — sans que l'État ne limite indûment la teneur de leur expression. Elles ne demandent pas à l'État d'appuyer ou de permettre leur activité expressive par la mise à leur disposition d'un mode d'expression en particulier auquel l'accès leur serait refusé.

[36] J'arrive à la conclusion que les commissions de transport n'ont pas établi que la réclamation des intimées tombe sous le coup de l'arrêt Baier et du cadre d'analyse qui y est établi. Il me faut maintenant déterminer si la protection de l'al. 2*b*) doit être refusée en raison du lieu. J'applique à cette fin le test de l'arrêt Ville de Montréal.

3.2.1 Application de l'arrêt Ville de Montréal

[37] Pour déterminer si les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport portent atteinte au droit garanti à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte, il faut se poser trois questions. Premièrement, le contenu expressif des publicités projetées par les intimées justifie-t-il leur protection prima facie par l'al. 2*b*)? Deuxièmement, dans l'affirmative, le mode ou le lieu d'expression ont-ils pour effet d'écarter cette protection? Troisièmement, si l'activité expressive est protégée par l'al. 2*b*), les politiques publicitaires en cause sont-elles attentatoires? (Ville de Montréal, par. 56) Si on conclut qu'il y a atteinte au droit garanti à l'al. 2*b*), il faut passer à la question de savoir si elle est justifiée au sens de l'article premier de la Charte.

[38] La réponse à la première question n'est pas contestée. Les publicités projetées ont assurément un contenu expressif. La réponse à la troisième question rallie également les parties. Or, contrairement à ce que laisse entendre le juge de première instance, la question n'est pas de savoir si tout discours politique est interdit mais bien si, par leur objet ou leur effet, les mesures gouvernementales limitent l'expression. En l'espèce, l'objet même des politiques publicitaires contestées est de limiter le contenu de l'expression dans l'espace publicitaire sur les côtés des autobus. Les articles 2 et 7 restreignent expressément le contenu de la publicité. L'article 9 le fait encore plus précisément en of Appeal stated, the transit authorities "sought to prohibit political advertising precisely because it was political" (para. 133).

[39] Regarding the second question, the analysis is somewhat more elaborate. In City of Montréal, the majority of the Court set out the following test for determining whether expression in a government location is protected by s. 2(b) of the Charter (at para. 74):

> The basic question with respect to expression on government-owned property is whether the place is a public place where one would expect constitutional protection for free expression on the basis that expression in that place does not conflict with the purposes which s. 2(b) is intended to serve, namely (1) democratic discourse, (2) truth finding and (3) self-fulfillment. To answer this question, the following factors should be considered:
>
> (a) the historical or actual function of the place; and
>
> (b) whether other aspects of the place suggest that expression within it would undermine the values underlying free expression.

[40] In the case at bar, the trial judge and the Court of Appeal came to opposite conclusions with respect to the first factor. The trial judge found that there was no history of political advertising on the sides of buses (trial judgment, at para. 87). For him, this finding was pivotal. However, content is not relevant to the determination of the function of a place.

[41] The fact that the historical function of a place included public expression or that its current function includes such expression is a good indication that expression in that place is constitutionally protected. Thus, a podium erected in a park for public use would necessarily be regarded as having a function that does not conflict with the purposes s. 2(b) is intended to serve; in fact, the very purpose of this public place would be to enhance the values underlying s. 2(b). However, the use of écartant le discours politique. Comme le disent les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel, les commissions de transport [TRADUCTION] « voulaient interdire la publicité politique précisément parce qu'elle était de nature politique » (par. 133).

[39] Pour ce qui est de la deuxième question, l'analyse est quelque peu plus élaborée. Dans l'arrêt Ville de Montréal, les juges majoritaires de la Cour appliquent le test suivant pour déterminer si l'expression dans un lieu ou un espace à caractère gouvernemental est protégée à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte (par. 74) :

> La question fondamentale quant à l'expression sur une propriété appartenant à l'État consiste à déterminer s'il s'agit d'un endroit public où l'on s'attendrait à ce que la liberté d'expression bénéficie d'une protection constitutionnelle parce que l'expression, dans ce lieu, ne va pas à l'encontre des objectifs que l'al. 2*b*) est censé favoriser, soit : (1) le débat démocratique; (2) la recherche de la vérité; et (3) l'épanouissement personnel. Pour trancher cette question, il faut examiner les facteurs suivants :
>
> a) la fonction historique ou réelle de l'endroit;
>
> b) les autres caractéristiques du lieu qui laissent croire que le fait de s'y exprimer minerait les valeurs sous-jacentes à la liberté d'expression.

[40] Pour ce qui est du premier facteur, le juge de première instance et la Cour d'appel arrivent à des conclusions opposées. Le juge de première instance conclut qu'il n'y a jamais eu de publicité politique sur les côtés des autobus (jugement de première instance, par. 87) et il accorde une importance déterminante à ce fait. Or, le contenu n'est pas pertinent pour la détermination de la fonction d'un lieu.

[41] Le fait que l'expression publique y a été permise ou qu'elle l'est actuellement est un bon indice de sa protection constitutionnelle. Ainsi, dans un parc, l'estrade destinée à l'usage des citoyens aura nécessairement une fonction qui ne va pas à l'encontre des objectifs que l'al. 2*b*) est censé promouvoir. Dans ce cas, la raison d'être même du lieu public serait en fait de promouvoir les valeurs sous-jacentes à cet alinéa. Toutefois, il est très rare que l'on conteste l'utilisation d'un bien public à des public property for expression will very rarely be questioned on the basis of such facts. The circumstances will usually be more complex. The airport, utility poles and streets at issue in Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada, Ramsden and City of Montréal are examples of places whose primary function is not expression.

[42] The question is whether the historical or actual function or other aspects of the space are incompatible with expression or suggest that expression within it would undermine the values underlying free expression. One way to answer this question is to look at past or present practice. This can help identify any incidental function that may have developed in relation to certain government property. Such was the case in the locations at issue in Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada, Ramsden and City of Montréal, where the Court found the expressive activities in question to be protected by s. 2(b). While it is true that buses have not been used as spaces for this type of expressive activity for as long as city streets, utility poles and town squares, there is some history of their being so used, and they are in fact being used for it at present. As a result, not only is there some history of use of this property as a space for public expression, but there is actual use — both of which indicate that the expressive activity in question neither impedes the primary function of the bus as a vehicle for public transportation nor, more importantly, undermines the values underlying freedom of expression.

[43] The second factor from City of Montréal is whether other aspects of the place suggest that expression within it would undermine the values underlying the constitutional protection. TransLink submits that its buses should be characterized as private publicly owned property, to which one cannot reasonably expect access. This position is untenable. The very fact that the general public has access to the advertising space on buses is an indication that members of the public would expect constitutional protection of their expression in that government-owned space. Moreover, an important aspect of a bus is that it is by nature a public, not fins d'expression dans un tel contexte factuel. Les situations en litige sont généralement plus complexes. Par exemple, dans les arrêts Comité pour la République du Canada, Ramsden et Ville de Montréal, l'aéroport, le poteau électrique et la voie publique étaient un lieu ou un espace dont la fonction première n'était pas l'expression.

[42] La question est de savoir si la fonction historique ou réelle ou quelque autre caractéristique de l'espace ou du lieu est incompatible avec l'expression ou permet de conclure que l'expression dans cet espace ou dans ce lieu minerait les valeurs qui sous-tendent la liberté d'expression. L'une des avenues possibles pour trancher est celle de considérer la pratique antérieure ou actuelle. On peut ainsi découvrir toute fonction accessoire ayant pu voir le jour relativement à un bien public donné, comme cela a été le cas dans les affaires Comité pour la République du Canada, Ramsden et Ville de Montréal, où la Cour a reconnu l'application de la protection prévue à l'al. 2*b*). Il est vrai que l'autobus ne sert pas d'espace pour ce type d'activité expressive depuis aussi longtemps que la voie publique, le poteau électrique et la place publique, mais cette fonction existait et existe toujours. Par conséquent, il y a non seulement une certaine utilisation historique du bien en cause comme lieu d'expression publique, mais aussi une utilisation réelle à cette fin, deux facteurs permettant de conclure que l'activité expressive considérée ne nuit pas à la fonction première de l'autobus — le transport en commun — et, ce qui importe encore plus, qu'elle ne mine pas les valeurs qui sous-tendent la liberté d'expression.

[43] Le second facteur énoncé dans l'arrêt Ville de Montréal est celui de savoir si d'autres caractéristiques du lieu donnent à penser que le fait de s'y exprimer minerait les valeurs sous-jacentes à la protection constitutionnelle. TransLink fait valoir que ses autobus devraient être considérés comme des biens privés appartenant aux pouvoirs publics et auxquels nul ne peut raisonnablement s'attendre à avoir accès. L'argument ne tient pas. Le fait même que le grand public a accès à l'espace publicitaire des autobus permet de conclure que les citoyens s'attendent à la protection constitutionnelle de leur expression dans cet espace appartenant à l'État. De a private, space. Unlike the activities which occur in certain government buildings or offices, those which occur on a public bus do not require privacy and limited access. The bus is operated on city streets and forms an integral part of the public transportation system. The general public using the streets, including people who could become bus passengers, are therefore exposed to a message placed on the side of a bus in the same way as to a message on a utility pole or in any public space in the city. Like a city street, a city bus is a public place where individuals can openly interact with each other and their surroundings. Thus, rather than undermining the purposes of s. 2(b), expression on the sides of buses could enhance them by furthering democratic discourse, and perhaps even truth finding and self-fulfillment.

[44] The test crafted in City of Montréal was intended to be flexible enough to allow courts to take into consideration factors that might become relevant to the use of old or new places for public expression (at para. 77):

> Changes in society and technology may affect the spaces where expression should be protected having regard to the values that underlie the guarantee. The proposed test reflects this, by permitting factors other than historical or actual function to be considered where relevant.

Changes in society or technology, or even changes in policy, may affect both the primary and incidental functions of government property. Where the government allows its property to be used for certain expressive activities, it does not commit itself to that use indefinitely. However, if a change in the function of a public place affects fundamental Charter rights, any constitutional requirements which attach to the new function must be met.

[45] In sum, this is not a case in which the Court must decide whether to protect access to a space plus, une caractéristique importante de l'autobus est qu'il constitue par nature un espace public, et non privé. Les activités qui s'y déroulent n'exigent pas confidentialité et limitation d'accès comme celles menées dans certains édifices ou bureaux gouvernementaux. L'autobus circule sur la voie publique et fait partie intégrante du réseau de transport en commun. Les usagers de la voie publique en général, y compris les passagers éventuels, sont donc exposés au message affiché sur le côté d'un autobus tout comme ils le sont au message affiché sur un poteau électrique ou dans un espace public urbain. De plus, dans une ville, l'autobus comme la voie publique constituent des lieux publics où les gens peuvent interagir ouvertement entre eux et avec l'environnement. Loin de miner les objectifs de l'al. 2*b*), l'expression sur les côtés des autobus favorise le débat démocratique, la recherche de la vérité et l'épanouissement personnel.

[44] Le test appliqué dans l'arrêt Ville de Montréal se voulait suffisamment souple pour permettre la prise en considération de facteurs susceptibles de devenir pertinents pour l'utilisation d'espaces existants ou nouveaux aux fins d'expression publique (par. 77) :

> Les changements sociaux et technologiques peuvent avoir une incidence sur les endroits où l'expression mérite d'être protégée eu égard aux valeurs qui sous-tendent cette garantie. Le critère proposé tient compte de cette éventualité en permettant que d'autres facteurs que celui de la fonction historique ou réelle soient pris en considération au besoin.

L'évolution sociale ou technique, voire les changements d'ordre politique, peuvent modifier les fonctions première et accessoire d'un bien public. Le gouvernement qui permet l'utilisation de ses biens pour l'exercice de certaines activités expressives n'est pas tenu de le faire indéfiniment. Cependant, lorsque la modification apportée à la fonction d'un espace ou d'un endroit public a une incidence sur un droit fondamental garanti par la Charte, toute exigence constitutionnelle se rattachant à la fonction nouvelle doit être respectée.

[45] En résumé, la Cour n'est pas appelée en l'espèce à déterminer si l'accès à un espace public where the government entity has never before recognized a right to such access. Rather, the question is whether the side of a bus, as a public place where expressive activity is already occurring, is a location where constitutional protection for free expression would be expected.

[46] I do not see any aspect of the location that suggests that expression within it would undermine the values underlying free expression. On the contrary, the space allows for expression by a broad range of speakers to a large public audience and expression there could actually further the values underlying s. 2(b) of the Charter. I therefore conclude that the side of a bus is a location where expressive activity is protected by s. 2(b) of the Charter.

[47] Consequently, I conclude that since the transit authorities' policies limit the respondents' right to freedom of expression under s. 2(b), the government must justify that limit under s. 1 of the Charter.

3.3 Is the Limit Justified Under Section 1 of the Charter?

[48] In order to justify the infringement of the respondents' freedom of expression under s. 1 of the Charter, the transit authorities must show that their policies are "reasonable limits prescribed by law" that can be "demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society". I will first address the question whether the limits imposed by the impugned policies are "prescribed by law".

[49] Although the trial judge had found that the transit authorities' advertising policies did not infringe the respondents' freedom of expression, he nevertheless went on to consider s. 1 of the Charter. He concluded, inter alia, that the impugned policies were not "law" for the purposes of s. 1 and that the infringement of s. 2(b) was therefore not a limit "prescribed by law". He reached this conclusion on the basis that the policies "were not made or administered in the exercise of a 'governmental' doit être protégé là où l'entité gouvernementale n'a jamais reconnu un tel droit. Elle doit plutôt déterminer si, en tant qu'espace public, le côté d'un autobus, où s'exerce déjà l'activité expressive, constitue un lieu où l'on s'attend à ce que la liberté d'expression bénéficie de la protection constitutionnelle.

[46] Je ne vois dans ce lieu aucune caractéristique laissant croire que l'expression y minerait les valeurs sous-jacentes à la liberté d'expression. Au contraire, il permet à un grand nombre d'annonceurs de s'adresser à un large auditoire et promeut ainsi en fait les valeurs qui sous-tendent l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. J'arrive donc à la conclusion que l'activité expressive sur le côté d'un autobus bénéficie de la protection prévue à cet alinéa.

[47] En conséquence, comme les politiques des commissions de transport limitent la liberté d'expression des intimées garantie à l'al. 2*b*), je conclus que le gouvernement doit justifier cette limitation au regard de l'article premier de la Charte.

3.3 La limitation est-elle justifiée au regard de l'article premier de la Charte?

[48] Pour justifier l'atteinte à la liberté d'expression des intimées au regard de l'article premier de la Charte, les commissions de transport doivent prouver que les restrictions que prévoient leurs politiques sont apportées « par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui [sont] raisonnables et dont la justification [peut] se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique ». J'examine d'abord la question de savoir si les politiques en cause constituent des « règles de droit ».

[49] Le juge de première instance estime que les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport ne portent pas atteinte à la liberté d'expression des intimées, mais il examine tout de même l'article premier de la Charte. Il conclut notamment que les politiques ne constituent pas des « règles de droit » au sens de l'article premier, de sorte que le droit garanti à l'al. 2*b*) n'est pas restreint « par une règle de droit ». Il arrive à cette conclusion parce que, selon lui, les politiques [TRADUCTION]

power or in the performance of a 'governmental' duty, and [that] the government had no involvement in the making or implementation of those policies" (trial judgment, at para. 140). Prowse J.A., writing for the majority of the Court of Appeal, declined to embark on her own analysis of the "prescribed by law" issue because the transit authorities had made no submissions on the matter. She neither accepted nor rejected the trial judge's conclusion on this issue. In this Court, the transit authorities made no submissions on the "prescribed by law" issue, while the respondents agreed with the trial judge's findings.

« n'ont été ni adoptées ni appliquées dans l'exercice d'un pouvoir "gouvernemental" ou dans l'exécution d'une obligation "gouvernementale" et que le gouvernement n'a participé d'aucune façon à leur formulation ou à leur mise en œuvre » (jugement de première instance, par. 140). Au nom des juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel, la juge Prowse refuse de se livrer à sa propre analyse concernant la restriction « par une règle de droit » au motif que les commissions de transport n'ont pas présenté d'arguments à ce sujet. Elle ne se range pas à l'avis du juge de première instance sur ce point ni ne s'en dissocie. Devant notre Cour, les commissions de transport n'ont pas abordé la question de la restriction « par une règle de droit », alors que les intimées ont repris les conclusions du juge de première instance.

3.3.1 Case Law on the "Prescribed by Law" Requirement

[50] In its decisions on the "prescribed by law" requirement in s. 1, the Court has distinguished between challenges to government acts and challenges to "laws" (Slaight Communications Inc. v. Davidson, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1038; Eldridge, at para. 20). This case raises the latter type of claim: the policies are being challenged, not the decision made by the transit authorities pursuant to the policies. In assessing whether the impugned policies satisfy the "prescribed by law" requirement, it must first be determined whether the policies come within the meaning of the word "law" in s. 1 of the Charter. To do this, it must be asked whether the government entity was authorized to enact the impugned policies and whether the policies are binding rules of general application. If so, the policies can be "law" for the purposes of s. 1. At the second stage of the enquiry, to find that the limit is "prescribed" by law, it must be determined whether the policies are sufficiently precise and accessible. Professor Peter W. Hogg describes the rationale behind the "prescribed by law" requirement in Constitutional Law of Canada (5th ed. 2007), vol. 2, at p. 122:

> The requirement that any limit on rights be prescribed by law reflects two values that are basic to

3.3.1 Jurisprudence relative à la restriction « par une règle de droit »

[50] La jurisprudence de notre Cour relative à la restriction « par une règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier établit une distinction entre la contestation de l'acte d'une entité gouvernementale et celle d'une règle de droit (Slaight Communications Inc. c. Davidson, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 1038; Eldridge, par. 20). Dans la présente affaire, le second type de contestation est en cause : ce sont les politiques qui sont attaquées, non la décision prise sur leur fondement. Déterminer si la restriction découle d'une règle de droit exige d'abord que l'on établisse si la politique qui l'apporte constitue une « règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier de la Charte. Il faut alors examiner si l'entité gouvernementale était autorisée à adopter la politique contestée et si cette dernière constitue une règle obligatoire d'application générale. Dans l'affirmative, la politique peut constituer une « règle de droit » aux fins de l'article premier. En second lieu, il faut déterminer si la politique est suffisamment précise et accessible pour que l'on puisse conclure qu'il s'agit d'une « règle de droit ». Dans Constitutional Law of Canada (5e éd. 2007), vol. 2, le professeur Peter W. Hogg précise la raison d'être d'un tel examen (p. 122) :

> [TRADUCTION] L'exigence qu'un droit soit restreint par une règle de droit reflète deux valeurs

constitutionalism or the rule of law. First, in order to preclude arbitrary and discriminatory action by government officials, all official action in derogation of rights must be authorized by law. Secondly, citizens must have a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited so that they can act accordingly. Both these values are satisfied by a law that fulfils two requirements: (1) the law must be adequately accessible to the public, and (2) the law must be formulated with sufficient precision to enable people to regulate their conduct by it, and to provide guidance to those who apply the law.

[51] In R. v. Therens, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 613, the Court emphasized that the "prescribed by law" requirement safeguards the public against arbitrary state limits on Charter rights. Le Dain J. set out the Court's initial interpretation of the expression "prescribed by law" in s. 1 of the Charter (at p. 645):

The requirement that the limit be prescribed by law is chiefly concerned with the distinction between a limit imposed by law and one that is arbitrary. The limit will be prescribed by law within the meaning of s. 1 if it is expressly provided for by statute or regulation, or results by necessary implication from the terms of a statute or regulation or from its operating requirements.

[52] Thus, the Court does not require that the limit be prescribed by a "law" in the narrow sense of the term; it may be prescribed by a regulation or by the common law. Moreover, it is sufficient that the limit simply result by necessary implication from either the terms or the operating requirements of the "law". (See also Irwin Toy; B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214; R. v. Swain, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 933; and R. v. Orbanski, 2005 SCC 37, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 3.)

[53] The Court has also implicitly recognized other forms of limits that were not originally identified in Therens as being prescribed by law, including limits contained in municipal by-laws (Ramsden and City of Montréal), provisions of a collective agreement involving a government entity (Lavigne) and rules of a regulatory body (Black v. Law Society of Alberta, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 591). Such limits satisfy the "prescribed by law" requirement fondamentales du constitutionnalisme ou de la primauté du droit. Premièrement, pour faire obstacle aux mesures arbitraires ou discriminatoires des représentants de l'État, toute mesure attentatoire à un droit doit être autorisée par une règle de droit. Deuxièmement, le citoyen doit être raisonnablement en mesure de savoir ce qui est interdit afin d'agir en conséquence. Une règle de droit respecte ces deux valeurs lorsqu'elle remplit deux conditions : (1) elle est suffisamment accessible au citoyen et (2) elle est formulée avec suffisamment de précision pour que le citoyen puisse se comporter en conséquence et elle offre des repères à celui qui l'applique.

[51] Dans l'arrêt R. c. Therens, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 613, la Cour souligne que l'exigence de la restriction d'un droit constitutionnel « par une règle de droit » protège le citoyen contre l'arbitraire de l'État. Le juge Le Dain y interprète pour la première fois la notion de restriction « par une règle de droit » pour les besoins de l'article premier de la Charte (p. 645) :

L'exigence que la restriction soit prescrite par une règle de droit vise surtout à faire la distinction entre une restriction imposée par la loi et une restriction arbitraire. Une restriction est prescrite par une règle de droit au sens de l'art. 1 si elle est prévue expressément par une loi ou un règlement, ou si elle découle nécessairement des termes d'une loi ou d'un règlement, ou de ses conditions d'application.

[52] La Cour n'exige donc pas que le droit en cause soit restreint par une loi au sens strict du terme; il peut l'être également par un règlement ou par la common law. En outre, il suffit que la restriction découle nécessairement du libellé de la « loi » ou de ses conditions d'application. (Voir également les arrêts Irwin Toy; B.C.G.E.U. c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1988] 2 R.C.S. 214; R. c. Swain, [1991] 1 R.C.S. 933; et R. c. Orbanski, 2005 CSC 37, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 3.)

[53] La Cour reconnaît aussi implicitement d'autres formes de restriction par une règle de droit qui n'ont pas été mentionnées au départ dans l'arrêt Therens, notamment celles issues d'un règlement municipal (Ramsden et Ville de Montréal), d'une convention collective liant une entité gouvernementale (Lavigne) et des règles d'un organisme de réglementation (Black c. Law Society of Alberta, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 591). Ces textes constituent des because, much like those resulting from regulations and other delegated legislation, their adoption is authorized by statute, they are binding rules of general application, and they are sufficiently accessible and precise to those to whom they apply. In these regards, they satisfy the concerns that underlie the "prescribed by law" requirement insofar as they preclude arbitrary state action and provide individuals and government entities with sufficient information on how they should conduct themselves.

[54] The Court has likewise taken a liberal approach to the precision requirement. The majority in Irwin Toy explained this as follows (at p. 983):

> Absolute precision in the law exists rarely, if at all. The question is whether the legislature has provided an intelligible standard according to which the judiciary must do its work. The task of interpreting how that standard applies in particular instances might always be characterized as having a discretionary element, because the standard can never specify all the instances in which it applies. On the other hand, where there is no intelligible standard and where the legislature has given a plenary discretion to do whatever seems best in a wide set of circumstances, there is no "limit prescribed by law".

The Court emphasized in Osborne v. Canada (Treasury Board), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 69, at pp. 94-97, that the standard is not an onerous one. Unless the impugned law "is so obscure as to be incapable of interpretation with any degree of precision using the ordinary tools", it will be deemed to have met the "prescribed by law" requirement (p. 94).

[55] These cases show that the Court has chosen to take a flexible approach to the "prescribed by law" requirement as regards both the form (e.g., statute, regulation, municipal by-law, rule of a regulatory body or collective agreement provision) and articulation of a limit on a Charter right (i.e., a standard intelligible to the public and to those who apply the law). In the end, the Court has emphasized, as in Therens, the need to distinguish between limits which arise by law and limits which result from arbitrary state action; those resulting from arbitrary « règles de droit » parce que, à l'instar des règlements et autres mesures législatives subordonnées, leur adoption est autorisée par une loi, ils sont obligatoires et d'application générale et ils sont suffisamment accessibles et précis pour ceux qui y sont assujettis. À cet égard, ils répondent aux préoccupations justifiant l'exigence de la restriction « par une règle de droit » dans la mesure où il s'agit de faire obstacle à l'arbitraire de l'État et d'offrir aux citoyens et aux entités gouvernementales suffisamment d'information sur la conduite à adopter.

[54] Dans l'arrêt Irwin Toy, la Cour interprète l'obligation de précision de manière libérale. Les juges majoritaires s'expliquent comme suit (p. 983) :

> En droit, la précision absolue est rare, voire inexistante. La question est de savoir si le législateur a formulé une norme intelligible sur laquelle le pouvoir judiciaire doit se fonder pour exécuter ses fonctions. L'interprétation de la manière d'appliquer une norme dans des cas particuliers comporte toujours un élément discrétionnaire parce que la norme ne peut jamais préciser tous les cas d'application. Par contre, s'il n'existe aucune norme intelligible et si le législateur a conféré le pouvoir discrétionnaire absolu de faire ce qui semble être le mieux dans une grande variété de cas, il n'y a pas de restriction prescrite « par une règle de droit ».

Dans l'arrêt Osborne c. Canada (Conseil du Trésor), [1991] 2 R.C.S. 69, p. 94-97, la Cour souligne que la norme n'est pas stricte. À moins qu'elle ne « soit [. . .] si obscur[e] que les méthodes ordinaires ne permettent pas de lui donner une interprétation le moindrement exacte », la loi contestée est réputée constituer « une règle de droit » (p. 94).

[55] Comme en font foi les arrêts susmentionnés, la Cour opte pour une interprétation souple de la « règle de droit » susceptible de restreindre un droit garanti par la Charte, et ce, tant sur le plan de la forme (loi, règlement, notamment municipal, règle d'un organisme de réglementation ou convention collective) que sur celui de la formulation (c'est-à-dire, une norme intelligible pour le public et celui qui l'applique). En fin de compte, la Cour insiste, comme dans l'arrêt Therens, sur la nécessité de distinguer entre la restriction issue de la loi et celle qui state action continue to fail the "prescribed by law" requirement.

[56] This inclusive approach is based on a recognition that a narrow interpretation would lead to excessive rigidity in a parliamentary and legislative system that relies heavily on framework legislation and delegations of broad discretionary powers. McLachlin J. (as she then was) commented on this as follows in Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada (at p. 245):

> From a practical point of view, it would be wrong to limit the application of s. 1 to enacted laws or regulations. That would require the Crown to pass detailed regulations to deal with every contingency as a pre-condition of justifying its conduct under s. 1. In my view, such a technical approach does not accord with the spirit of the Charter and would make it unduly difficult to justify limits on rights and freedoms which may be reasonable and, indeed, necessary.

See also Little Sisters Book and Art Emporium v. Canada (Minister of Justice), 2000 SCC 69, [2000] 2 S.C.R. 1120, at para. 137.

[57] Bearing in mind the broad interpretation given the "prescribed by law" requirement and the principles underlying the Court's approach, I must now consider whether limits resulting from policies of a government entity satisfy the "prescribed by law" requirement.

3.3.2 Government Policies and the "Prescribed by Law" Requirement

[58] Government policies come in many varieties. Oftentimes, even though they emanate from a government entity rather than from Parliament or a legislature, they are similar, in both form and substance, to statutes, regulations and other delegated legislation. Indeed, as a binding rule adopted pursuant to a government entity's statutory powers, a policy may have a legal effect similar to that of a municipal by-law or a law society's rules, both of which fall within the meaning of "law" for the purposes of s. 1. Other government policies découle d'une mesure arbitraire de l'État, cette dernière ne satisfaisant toujours pas à l'exigence d'une restriction « par une règle de droit ».

[56] Cette approche généreuse est privilégiée parce qu'une interprétation étroite imposerait une trop grande rigidité à un système parlementaire et législatif qui s'en remet considérablement à des lois-cadres et à la délégation de larges pouvoirs discrétionnaires. Dans l'arrêt Comité pour la République du Canada, la juge McLachlin (maintenant Juge en chef) dit d'ailleurs à ce sujet (p. 245) :

> D'un point de vue pratique, il serait mal venu de limiter l'application de l'article premier aux lois et aux règlements adoptés par le législateur. L'État serait alors tenu d'adopter des règlements détaillés portant sur toutes les éventualités imaginables, avant de pouvoir justifier sa conduite en vertu de l'article premier. À mon avis, une approche aussi technique n'est pas conforme à l'esprit de la Charte et rendrait indûment difficile la justification des restrictions apportées aux droits et libertés qui peuvent être raisonnables et, de fait, nécessaires.

Voir également l'arrêt Little Sisters Book and Art Emporium c. Canada (Ministre de la Justice), 2000 CSC 69, [2000] 2 R.C.S. 1120, par. 137.

[57] Au vu de l'interprétation libérale de la Cour et des principes invoqués à l'appui, il faut maintenant déterminer si la restriction résultant d'une politique d'une entité gouvernementale satisfait à l'exigence de la restriction « par une règle de droit ».

3.3.2 Application aux politiques gouvernementales de l'exigence de la restriction « par une règle de droit »

[58] Les politiques gouvernementales ont des profils très variés. Même si elles sont adoptées par des entités gouvernementales plutôt que par le Parlement ou une assemblée législative, elles s'apparentent souvent, sur la forme et le fond, à des lois, des règlements et d'autres mesures législatives subordonnées. À titre de règle obligatoire adoptée en vertu d'un pouvoir légal conféré à une entité gouvernementale, une politique peut avoir un effet juridique semblable à celui d'un règlement municipal ou d'une règle d'un barreau provincial, qui are informal or strictly internal, and amount in substance merely to guidelines or interpretive aids as opposed to legal rules. The question that arises is this: Does a given policy or rule emanating from a government entity satisfy the "prescribed by law" requirement? It can be seen from the case law that a distinction must be drawn between rules that are legislative in nature and rules that are administrative in nature.

[59] In Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada, the Court was divided on the issue of whether the internal directives or policies applied by the airport managers in administering the regulatory scheme at issue in that case were "law". In addition to provincial legislation regulating the matter, the airport administration had "an enduring and intransigent policy prohibiting all forms of solicitation and advertising" (p. 185). The trial judge found that an airport manager had been acting in accordance with this established policy when he prohibited the claimants from disseminating political messages at the airport. Lamer C.J., writing for himself and Sopinka J., expressed the opinion that because of their informal and internal nature, including the fact that they were not known to the public, the internal directives or policies could not possibly qualify as "law" prescribing the government action (p. 164).

[60] McLachlin J. (La Forest J. concurring) was of the view that the internal directives or policies were "law" because they were made pursuant to the Crown's common law right to manage its property (at p. 244):

> . . . I would incline to the view that the act of the airport officials in preventing [the claimants] from handing out leaflets and soliciting members constitutes a limit prescribed by law because the officials were acting pursuant to the Crown's legal rights as owner of the premises.

constituent tous deux des « règles de droit » aux fins de l'article premier. Il peut cependant arriver qu'une politique revête un caractère informel ou purement interne et qu'elle ne constitue essentiellement qu'une ligne directrice ou un guide d'interprétation, et non une règle juridique. La question qui se pose alors est la suivante : quelle politique ou règle d'une entité gouvernementale satisfait à l'exigence de la restriction « par une règle de droit »? Il appert de la jurisprudence qu'il faut distinguer entre une règle de nature législative et une règle de nature administrative.

[59] Dans l'arrêt Comité pour la République du Canada, les juges de la Cour ne se sont pas entendus sur la question de savoir si la directive ou politique interne appliquée par le directeur d'aéroport dans l'administration du règlement en cause dans cette affaire constituait une règle de droit. Outre la disposition provinciale pertinente, la direction de l'aéroport appliquait « une politique intransigeante interdisant toute forme de sollicitation et de publicité » (p. 185). Le juge de première instance a conclu que le directeur de l'aéroport avait agi conformément à cette politique établie lorsqu'il avait interdit aux intimés de diffuser leurs messages politiques dans l'aérogare. S'exprimant également au nom du juge Sopinka, le juge en chef Lamer a estimé que la directive ou politique interne ne pouvait être considérée comme une « règle de droit » fondant la mesure gouvernementale à cause de son caractère informel et interne, y compris le fait qu'elle n'était pas connue du public (p. 164).

[60] La juge McLachlin (avec l'appui du juge La Forest) a été d'avis que la directive ou politique interne constituait une « règle de droit » puisqu'elle avait été adoptée en application du droit que la common law confère à l'État d'administrer ses biens (p. 244) :

> [J]e serais encline à croire que le geste des fonctionnaires de l'aéroport qui [. . .] ont empêch[é] [les intimés] de distribuer des dépliants et de solliciter des adhésions constitue une limite prescrite par une règle de droit parce que les fonctionnaires agissaient conformément aux droits dont jouit l'État en vertu de la loi, en sa qualité de propriétaire des lieux.

[61] The decision ultimately turned on the constitutional validity of the regulations, and the question whether internal directives or policies can be considered to be "law" within the meaning of s. 1 was left without a definitive answer.

[62] The issue was again addressed in Little Sisters, a case concerning the use of internal guidelines by custom officials in administering the Customs Act. The guidelines which were in the form of a memorandum, interpreted standards set out in the legislation. Binnie J., writing for the majority, stated (at para. 85):

> . . . the Memorandum . . . was nothing more than an internal administrative aid to Customs inspectors. It was not law. It could never have been relied upon by Customs in court to defend a challenged prohibition. . . . It is the statutory decision . . . not the manual, that constituted the denial [of the claimants' freedom of expression]. It is simply not feasible for the courts to review for Charter compliance the vast array of manuals and guides prepared by the public service for the internal guidance of officials. The courts are concerned with the legality of the decisions, not the quality of the guidebooks, although of course the fate of the two are not unrelated.

[63] What Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada and Little Sisters demonstrate is a concern about the administrative nature of the policies and guidelines of the government entities in question. Administrative rules relate to the implementation of laws contained in a statutory scheme and are created for the purpose of administrative efficiency. The key question is thus whether the policies are focussed on "indoor" management. In such a case, they are meant for internal use and are often informal in nature; express statutory authority is not required to make them. Such rules or policies act as interpretive aids in the application of a statute or regulation. They cannot in and of themselves be viewed as "law" that prescribes a limit on a Charter right. An interpretive guideline or policy is not intended to establish individuals' rights and obligations or to create entitlements. Moreover, such documents are usually accessible only within

[61] La décision de la Cour a finalement reposé sur la constitutionnalité du règlement, et la question de savoir si une directive ou politique interne peut être considérée comme « une règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier n'a pas été tranchée de manière définitive.

[62] La question s'est de nouveau posée dans l'affaire Little Sisters. Le litige portait sur des directives internes appliquées par les fonctionnaires des douanes dans le cadre de l'administration de la Loi sur les douanes. Sous forme de mémorandum, ces directives interprétaient les normes établies par la loi. Au nom des juges majoritaires, le juge Binnie affirme (par. 85) :

> . . . le Mémorandum [. . .] n'était rien de plus qu'un outil administratif interne à l'intention des inspecteurs des douanes. Il n'avait pas force de loi. Il n'aurait jamais pu être invoqué en cour par les Douanes pour défendre une prohibition contestée [. . .] C'est [. . .] la décision législative, et non le guide, qui a constitué la privation [de liberté d'expression pour les demandeurs]. Il est tout simplement impossible aux tribunaux de contrôler la conformité à la Charte de la multitude de guides et manuels internes préparés par la fonction publique pour assister les fonctionnaires dans leur travail. Les tribunaux s'attachent à la légalité des décisions et non à la qualité des guides, bien que le sort de l'un ne soit évidemment pas indépendant du sort de l'autre.

[63] Ce que démontrent les arrêts Comité pour la République du Canada et Little Sisters est une préoccupation concernant le caractère administratif des politiques et directives des entités gouvernementales en cause. La règle de nature administrative touche à l'application de lois formant un régime législatif; sa raison d'être est l'efficacité administrative. La question déterminante est donc celle de savoir si la politique s'attache à la régie interne. Dans un tel cas, elle est destinée à une application interne et elle est souvent de nature informelle; son adoption ne requiert pas l'autorisation expresse du législateur. Une telle règle ou politique sert à l'interprétation des dispositions d'une loi ou d'un règlement. Elle ne saurait être assimilée elle-même à une règle de droit qui restreint un droit constitutionnel. Ni un guide d'interprétation ni une politique n'ont pour objet d'établir les droits et les obligations d'une personne non plus que de créer des the government entity and are therefore unhelpful to members of the public who are entitled to know what limits there are on their Charter rights. No matter how broadly the word "law" is defined for the purposes of s. 1, a policy that is administrative in nature does not fall within the definition, because it is not intended to be a legal basis for government action.

[64] Where a policy is not administrative in nature, it may be "law" provided that it meets certain requirements. In order to be legislative in nature, the policy must establish a norm or standard of general application that has been enacted by a government entity pursuant to a rule-making authority. A rule-making authority will exist if Parliament or a provincial legislature has delegated power to the government entity for the specific purpose of enacting binding rules of general application which establish the rights and obligations of the individuals to whom they apply (D. C. Holland and J. P. McGowan, Delegated Legislation in Canada (1989), at p. 103). For the purposes of s. 1 of the Charter, these rules need not take the form of statutory instruments. So long as the enabling legislation allows the entity to adopt binding rules, and so long as the rules establish rights and obligations of general rather than specific application and are sufficiently accessible and precise, they will qualify as "law" which prescribes a limit on a Charter right.

[65] Thus, where a government policy is authorized by statute and sets out a general norm or standard that is meant to be binding and is sufficiently accessible and precise, the policy is legislative in nature and constitutes a limit that is "prescribed by law".

[66] The question which now remains is whether the transit authorities' advertising policies meet the "prescribed by law" requirement under s. 1 of the Charter.

droits. En outre, ils ne sont habituellement accessibles qu'au sein de l'entité gouvernementale et sont donc sans utilité pour informer le citoyen qui doit être en mesure de connaître toute restriction apportée à ses droits constitutionnels. La politique de nature administrative, même entendue au sens le plus large, n'est pas une « règle de droit » pour les besoins de l'article premier, car sa raison d'être n'est pas d'offrir un fondement juridique à l'action gouvernementale.

[64] La politique qui n'est pas administrative par nature et qui satisfait à certaines exigences peut constituer une « règle de droit ». Pour qu'elle soit de nature législative, la politique doit établir une norme d'application générale adoptée par une entité gouvernementale en vertu de son pouvoir de réglementation. Un tel pouvoir existe lorsque le législateur fédéral ou provincial a délégué un pouvoir à l'entité gouvernementale aux fins précisément d'adopter des règles obligatoires d'application générale établissant les droits et les obligations des personnes qui y sont assujetties (D. C. Holland et J. P. McGowan, Delegated Legislation in Canada (1989), p. 103). Point n'est besoin, pour l'application de l'article premier de la Charte, que ces règles revêtent la forme de textes réglementaires. Dans la mesure où leurs lois habilitantes permettent aux entités d'adopter des règles obligatoires, où leurs politiques établissent des droits et des obligations d'application générale plutôt que particulière et où elles sont suffisamment accessibles et précises, alors ces politiques sont réputées constituer des « règles de droit » susceptibles de restreindre un droit garanti par la Charte.

[65] Ainsi, lorsqu'une politique gouvernementale est autorisée par la loi, qu'elle établit une norme générale se voulant obligatoire et qu'elle est suffisamment accessible et précise, il s'agit d'une règle de nature législative qui constitue une « règle de droit ».

[66] La question à trancher dès lors est de savoir si les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport constituent « une règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier de la Charte.

3.3.3 Application of the Principles to the Transit Authorities' Policies

[67] A review of the enabling legislation suggests that the transit authorities' policies were adopted pursuant to statutory powers conferred on BC Transit and TransLink.

[68] Section 3(1)(c) of the British Columbia Transit Act authorizes BC Transit's board of directors, with the Minister's approval, "to pursue commercial opportunities and undertake or enter into commercial ventures in respect of those systems and the authority's assets and resources". According to s. 4(4)(e) of the Act, the board of directors > must supervise the management of the affairs of the [transit] authority and may . . . by resolution . . . establish rules for the conduct of their affairs . . . .

[69] A similar authority is conferred on TransLink's board under s. 2(4) of the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Act:

> 2(4) The authority may carry on business, and, without limiting this, may enter into contracts or other arrangements, adopt bylaws, pass resolutions, issue or execute any other record or sue or be sued under a name prescribed by regulation of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and any contract, bylaw, resolution or other arrangement or record entered into, adopted, passed, issued or executed, as the case may be, and any suit brought, by the authority under the prescribed name is as valid and binding as it would be were it entered into, adopted, passed, issued, executed or brought by the authority under its own name.

[70] The enabling statutes thus confer broad discretionary powers on each entity's board of directors to adopt rules regulating the conduct of its affairs, including the generation of revenue for the public transportation system through advertising sales. Further, according to documents filed in the record, the policies were "reviewed and adopted" by the boards of both entities (Appellants' Joint Record, at pp. 179 and 326). The policies

3.3.3 Application des principes aux politiques des commissions de transport

[67] Il appert des lois habilitantes que les politiques des commissions de transport ont été adoptées en vertu des pouvoirs légaux conférés à BC Transit et à TransLink.

[68] L'alinéa 3(1)c) de la British Columbia Transit Act autorise le conseil d'administration de BC Transit [TRADUCTION] « à saisir des occasions d'affaires et à participer à des entreprises commerciales à l'égard de ces réseaux, ainsi que des biens et des ressources de la commission », sous réserve de l'approbation du ministre. L'alinéa 4(4)e) de la Loi dispose que le conseil d'administration > [TRADUCTION] surveille l'administration de la commission [de transport] et peut [. . .] par voie de résolution [. . .] établir des règles relatives à l'exercice de ses activités . . .

[69] Le conseil d'administration de TransLink est investi d'un pouvoir semblable au par. 2(4) de la Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority Act :

> [TRADUCTION]
>
> 2(4) La commission peut exploiter une entreprise et, notamment, conclure des contrats ou d'autres arrangements, prendre des règlements, adopter des résolutions, établir d'autres documents ou ester en justice sous un nom prescrit par règlement du lieutenant-gouverneur en conseil, auquel cas la mesure est valable et lie la commission comme si elle l'avait prise sous son propre nom.

[70] Ainsi, les lois habilitantes confèrent au conseil d'administration de chacune des entités un pouvoir discrétionnaire étendu d'adopter des règles régissant l'exercice de ses activités, notamment la production de revenus pour le réseau de transport en commun grâce à la vente de publicité. En outre, suivant les documents versés au dossier, les politiques ont été [TRADUCTION] « adoptées après examen » par le conseil d'administration de chacune des deux therefore appear to have been adopted in a formal manner.

[71] Where a legislature has empowered a government entity to make rules, it seems only logical, absent evidence to the contrary, that it also intended those rules to be binding. In this case, TransLink is empowered to "establish rules" and to "enter into contracts", "adopt bylaws" and "pass resolutions". Bylaws and contracts are intended to bind. In the context of the enabling provisions, it follows that resolutions have the same binding effect as the other enumerated instruments.

[72] The policies are not administrative in nature, as they are not meant for internal use as an interpretive aid for "rules" laid down in the legislative scheme. Rather, the policies are themselves rules that establish the rights of the individuals to whom they apply. Moreover, the policies can be said to be general in scope, since they establish standards which are applicable to all who want to take advantage of the advertising service rather than to a specific case. They therefore fall within the meaning of the word "law" for the purposes of s. 1 and will satisfy the "prescribed by law" requirement provided that they are sufficiently accessible and precise.

[73] In my view, the transit authorities' advertising policies are both accessible and precise. They are made available to members of the general public who wish to advertise on the transit authorities' buses, and they clearly outline the types of advertisements that will or will not be accepted. Thus, the limits on expression are accessible and are worded precisely enough to enable potential advertisers to understand what is prohibited. The limits resulting from the policies are therefore legislative in nature and are "limits prescribed by law" within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter.

entités (dossier conjoint des appelantes, p. 179 et 326), de sorte qu'elles semblent avoir été adoptées de manière formelle.

[71] Il paraît logique que le législateur qui autorise l'adoption de règles par une entité gouvernementale veuille également, sauf indications contraires, que ces règles soient obligatoires. En l'espèce, TransLink peut [TRADUCTION] « établir des règles » et « conclure des contrats », « prendre des règlements » et « adopter des résolutions ». Règlements et contrats ont force obligatoire. Dans le contexte des dispositions habilitantes, on peut inférer que les résolutions ont la même force obligatoire que les autres instruments qui y sont énumérés.

[72] Les politiques ne sont pas de nature administrative puisqu'elles ne sont pas destinées à une application interne comme guide d'interprétation de « règles » établies par le régime législatif. Elles constituent elles-mêmes des règles établissant les droits des personnes qui y sont assujetties. De plus, on peut leur attribuer une portée générale en ce qu'elles fixent des normes qui s'appliquent à toute personne désireuse de se prévaloir du service publicitaire, et non dans certains cas particuliers. Elles sont donc assimilables à des « règles de droit » au sens de l'article premier et satisfont à l'exigence de la restriction « par une règle de droit » lorsqu'elles sont suffisamment accessibles et précises.

[73] À mon avis, les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport sont à la fois accessibles et précises. Elles peuvent être consultées par tout membre du grand public désireux de se servir des autobus des commissions de transport comme support publicitaire, et elles énoncent clairement quels genres de publicité sont acceptés ou non. Ainsi, les restrictions apportées à l'expression sont accessibles et formulées avec suffisamment de précision pour permettre aux annonceurs éventuels de comprendre ce qui est écarté. Par conséquent, les politiques publicitaires sont de nature législative et des droits y sont restreints « par une règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier de la Charte.

3.3.4 Are the Limits Justified in a Free and Democratic Society?

[74] The next step in the analysis is to determine whether the infringement is justified in a free and democratic society. The principles were set out in R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103. For ease of reference, I will now reproduce the text of the impugned policies once again:

POLICY:

. . .

2. Advertisements, to be accepted, shall be limited to those which communicate information concerning goods, services, public service announcements and public events.

. . .

Standards and Limitations

. . .

7. No advertisement will be accepted which is likely, in the light of prevailing community standards, to cause offence to any person or group of persons or create controversy;

. . .

9. No advertisement will be accepted which advocates or opposes any ideology or political philosophy, point of view, policy or action, or which conveys information about a political meeting, gathering or event, a political party or the candidacy of any person for a political position or public office;

[75] The trial judge accepted, albeit with some hesitation, the transit authorities' submission that their policies had a sufficiently pressing and substantial objective of providing "a safe, welcoming public transit system" (para. 110). However, he went on to conclude that the policies were not rationally connected to the purported objective of ensuring safety, as it was doubtful that "the kind or extent of the controversy that might be provoked by such

3.3.4 Justification des restrictions dans une société libre et démocratique

[74] L'étape suivante consiste à déterminer si l'atteinte est justifiée dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique au regard des principes énoncés dans l'arrêt R. c. Oakes, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 103. Pour faciliter leur consultation, je reproduis de nouveau le libellé des politiques attaquées :

[TRADUCTION]

POLITIQUE :

. . .

2. Seule est acceptée la publicité qui communique de l'information sur des biens, des services, des messages d'intérêt public et des événements publics.

. . .

Conditions et restrictions

. . .

7. Est exclue toute publicité susceptible, au regard des normes sociales reconnues, d'offenser une personne ou un groupe de personnes ou de susciter la controverse.

. . .

9. Est exclue toute publicité qui promeut ou conteste une idéologie ou une philosophie politique, un point de vue, une politique ou une mesure, ou qui renseigne sur une assemblée, un rassemblement ou un événement politique, un parti politique ou la candidature d'une personne à une fonction politique ou à une charge publique.

[75] Le juge de première instance retient, quoique avec une certaine hésitation, la thèse des commissions de transport selon laquelle les politiques répondent à l'objectif suffisamment urgent et réel d'offrir [TRADUCTION] « un réseau de transport en commun sûr et accueillant » (par. 110). Cependant, il conclut ensuite que les politiques des commissions de transport n'ont pas de lien rationnel avec le prétendu objectif de sûreté, puisqu'il est peu advertisements could create a safety risk" (para. 114). He also found that the total ban on political and other advocacy advertising did not constitute a minimal impairment of freedom of expression and that the alleged benefits of the advertising restrictions did not outweigh their detrimental effects (paras. 122 and 131). The Court of Appeal did not address this issue.

[76] I accept that the policies were adopted for the purpose of providing "a safe, welcoming public transit system" and that this is a sufficiently important objective to warrant placing a limit on freedom of expression. However, like the trial judge, I am not convinced that the limits on political content imposed by articles 2, 7 and 9 are rationally connected to the objective. I have some difficulty seeing how an advertisement on the side of a bus that constitutes political speech might create a safety risk or an unwelcoming environment for transit users. It is not the political nature of an advertisement that creates a dangerous or hostile environment. Rather, it is only if the advertisement is offensive in that, for example, its content is discriminatory or it advocates violence or terrorism — regardless of whether it is commercial or political in nature — that the objective of providing a safe and welcoming transit system will be undermined.

[77] Had I found a rational connection between the objective and the limits imposed by articles 2, 7 and 9, I would nevertheless have concluded that the means chosen to implement the objective was neither reasonable nor proportionate to the respondents' interest in disseminating their messages pursuant to their right under s. 2(b) of the Charter to freedom of expression. The policies allow for commercial speech but prohibit all political advertising. In particular, article 2 of the policies limits the types of advertisements that will be accepted to "those which communicate information concerning goods, services, public service announcements and public events", thereby excluding advertisements which communicate political messages. Article 7, on the other hand, refers probable que [TRADUCTION] « la nature ou l'ampleur de la controverse susceptible d'être suscitée par les publicités présente un risque pour la sûreté » (par. 114). Il ajoute que l'exclusion totale de la publicité politique ou par ailleurs partisane ne porte pas atteinte le moins possible à la liberté d'expression et que les avantages allégués de la restriction de la publicité ne l'emportent pas sur ses effets préjudiciables (par. 122 et 131). La Cour d'appel ne se prononce pas sur ce point.

[76] Je reconnais que les politiques ont été adoptées dans le but d'offrir « un réseau de transport en commun sûr et accueillant » et qu'il s'agit d'un objectif suffisamment important pour justifier la restriction de la liberté d'expression. Toutefois, à l'instar du juge de première instance, je ne suis pas convaincue que l'exclusion de tout contenu politique aux articles 2, 7 et 9 ait un lien rationnel avec l'objectif. J'ai du mal à concevoir que la présence d'un message politique sur le côté d'un autobus puisse rendre le transport en commun moins sûr ou moins accueillant pour les usagers. Le caractère politique d'une publicité ne saurait créer un environnement dangereux ou hostile. Ce serait plutôt le caractère offensant du message — lorsque, par exemple, son contenu est discriminatoire ou incite à la violence ou au terrorisme, peu importe qu'il s'agisse d'une publicité commerciale ou politique — qui irait à l'encontre de l'objectif d'offrir un réseau de transport en commun sûr et accueillant.

[77] Si j'avais vu un lien rationnel entre l'objectif et les restrictions prévues aux articles 2, 7 et 9, je serais néanmoins arrivée à la conclusion que le moyen choisi pour réaliser l'objectif n'est ni raisonnable ni proportionné au droit des intimées d'exercer leur liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte en diffusant leurs messages. La publicité commerciale est autorisée, mais pas la publicité politique. Plus particulièrement, l'article 2 de chacune des politiques prévoit que seule est acceptée la publicité [TRADUCTION] « qui communique de l'information sur des biens, des services, des messages d'intérêt public et des événements publics », écartant de ce fait celle qui transmet un message politique. L'article 7 renvoie pour sa part aux normes sociales reconnues pour déterminer si une publicité to prevailing community standards as a measuring stick for whether an advertisement is likely "to cause offence to any person or group of persons or create controversy". While a community standard of tolerance may constitute a reasonable limit on offensive advertisements, excluding advertisements which "create controversy" is unnecessarily broad. Citizens, including bus riders, are expected to put up with some controversy in a free and democratic society. Finally, article 9 represents the most overt restriction on political advertisements, as it bans all forms of political content regardless of whether the message actually contributes to an unsafe or unwelcoming transit environment. In sum, the policies amount to a blanket exclusion of a highly valued form of expression in a public location that serves as an important place for public discourse. They therefore do not constitute a minimal impairment of freedom of expression.

[78] The fact that the limits are overbroad in the instant case does not mean that the government cannot limit speech in bus advertisements. It is clear from this Court's s. 1 jurisprudence on freedom of expression that location matters, as does the audience. Thus, a limit which is not justified in one place may be justified in another. And the likelihood of children being present matters, as does the audience's ability to choose whether to be in the place. In Canada (Attorney General) v. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 SCC 30, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 610, at paras. 93-94, one of the provisions at issue limited tobacco advertising that was appealing to young people or was published in places frequented or publications read by young people. This provision was held to be justified on the basis of the need to protect youths because of their vulnerability. In the criminal law context, this Court has held that the concept of indecency in the Criminal Code depends in part on location in that conduct that is indecent in one place may not be indecent in another more private place: R. v. Labaye, 2005 SCC 80, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 728, at paras. 42-43; R. v. Tremblay, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 932, at pp. 960-61.

[79] Thus, limits on advertising are contextual. Although we are not required to review the proposed est susceptible [TRADUCTION] « d'offenser une personne ou un groupe de personnes ou de susciter la controverse ». La norme socialement reconnue de la tolérance peut constituer un rempart raisonnable contre la publicité offensante, mais l'exclusion de toute publicité pouvant « susciter la controverse » a une portée trop grande. Dans une société démocratique, on s'attend des citoyens, y compris des usagers du transport en commun, qu'ils tolèrent un certain degré de controverse. Enfin, l'article 9 est celui qui écarte le plus explicitement la publicité politique. Il prohibe toute forme de contenu politique, que celui-ci compromette ou non la sûreté du transport en commun ou son caractère accueillant. En somme, une forme d'expression à laquelle est attaché un grand prix est exclue totalement d'un espace public qui constitue un important lieu d'expression publique. Les politiques ne portent donc pas atteinte le moins possible à la liberté d'expression.

[78] La constatation du caractère excessif de la restriction en l'espèce ne signifie pas que le gouvernement ne peut pas limiter l'expression dans l'espace publicitaire d'un autobus. Il ressort de la jurisprudence de la Cour relative à l'article premier et à la liberté d'expression que le lieu importe, tout comme l'auditoire. La limite qui n'est pas justifiée à un endroit peut donc l'être dans un autre. La présence probable d'enfants ou le caractère volontaire ou non de la présence des gens comptent également. Dans l'affaire Canada (Procureur général) c. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 CSC 30, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 610, l'une des dispositions en cause limitait la publicité du tabac destinée aux jeunes ou celle faite dans les lieux qu'ils fréquentaient ou dans les publications qu'ils lisaient. La Cour a conclu que la disposition était justifiée par la nécessité de protéger les jeunes en raison de leur vulnérabilité (par. 93-94). Dans le contexte pénal, elle a considéré que l'indécence au sens du Code criminel tenait en partie au lieu, c'est-à-dire que certains actes sont indécents à certains endroits, mais pas à d'autres, plus privés : R. c. Labaye, 2005 CSC 80, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 728, par. 42-43; R. c. Tremblay, [1993] 2 R.C.S. 932, p. 960-961.

[79] La justification de limites apportées à la publicité tient donc au contexte. Nous ne sommes standards, the Canadian Code of Advertising Standards, which is referred to in the transit authorities' advertising policies, could be used as a guide to establish reasonable limits, including limits on discriminatory content or on ads which incite or condone violence or other unlawful behaviour. Given that the transit authorities did not raise s. 1, however, the above comment is intended merely to provide guidance on what may be justified, but the determination of what is justified will depend on the facts in the particular case.

[80] In sum, advertising on buses has become a widespread and effective means for conveying messages to the general public. In exercising their control over such advertising, the transit authorities have failed to minimize the impairment of political speech, which is at the core of s. 2(b) protection. I conclude that, to the extent that articles 2, 7 and 9 prohibit political advertising on the sides of buses, they place an unjustifiable limit on the respondents' right under s. 2(b) of the Charter to freedom of expression.

4. Remedy

[81] In light of the conclusion that the impugned policies violate the respondents' rights under s. 2(b) of the Charter, an appropriate remedy must be granted. The majority of the Court of Appeal declared that articles 7 and 9 of the transit authorities' advertising policies were of "no force and effect". Prowse J.A. granted the declarations sought by the respondents either on the basis of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982 if the policies are "law" within the meaning of that section, or on the basis of s. 24(1) of the Charter if they are not, as she was satisfied that the language of s. 24(1) is broad enough to encompass the remedy sought by the respondents. In this Court, BC Transit has not addressed the issue of remedy. As for TransLink, it briefly states, on the basis that the policies are not "law" for the purposes of s. 52(1) and that the respondents did not seek a declaration under pas appelés à examiner les normes qu'il propose, mais le Code canadien des normes en publicité, auquel renvoient les politiques des commissions de transport, pourrait servir de guide pour établir des limites raisonnables, y compris en ce qui concerne le caractère discriminatoire d'une annonce publicitaire ou encore, la violence ou d'autres actes illégaux qui y sont encouragés ou tolérés. Cependant, comme les commissions de transport n'ont pas invoqué l'article premier, le commentaire qui précède ne vise qu'à offrir des repères pour déterminer ce qui est susceptible d'être justifié, toute décision à cet égard dépendant des faits de l'espèce.

[80] En somme, on recourt désormais couramment à l'espace publicitaire des autobus pour communiquer efficacement de l'information au grand public. Dans l'exercice de leur pouvoir sur l'utilisation de cet espace, les commissions de transport n'ont pas respecté le critère de l'atteinte minimale à la liberté d'expression politique, laquelle est au cœur de la protection prévue à l'al. 2*b*). J'arrive à la conclusion que dans la mesure où ils interdisent la publicité politique sur les côtés des autobus, les articles 2, 7 et 9 des politiques restreignent de manière injustifiée la liberté d'expression des intimées garantie à l'al. 2*b*).

4. Réparation

[81] Après avoir conclu que les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport violent le droit des intimées garanti à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte, il faut accorder la réparation qui s'impose. Les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel ont déclaré « inopérants » les articles 7 et 9 de ces politiques. La juge Prowse a rendu le jugement déclaratoire sollicité par les intimées sur le fondement soit du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, dans la mesure où chacune des politiques en cause constitue une « règle de droit » au sens de cet article, soit du par. 24(1) de la Charte dans le cas contraire, car elle était convaincue que le libellé de ce dernier paragraphe était assez général pour permettre l'octroi de la réparation demandée par les intimées. Devant notre Cour, BC Transit n'a pas abordé la question de la réparation. Pour sa part, TransLink indique brièvement qu'aucune réparation ne s'offre aux

s. 24(1) at trial, that no remedy is available to the respondents.

[82] McLachlin C.J., writing for a unanimous Court in R. v. Ferguson, 2008 SCC 6, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 96, stated that "[a] court which has found a violation of a Charter right has a duty to provide an effective remedy" (para. 34). The question is whether the declaration ought to be based on s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982 or on s. 24(1) of the Charter.

4.1 Choice Between Section 24(1) of the Charter and Section 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982

[83] In Ferguson, McLachlin C.J. explained that remedies for Charter violations are governed by s. 24(1) of the Charter and s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, and that each of them serves different remedial purposes:

> Section 52(1) provides a remedy for laws that violate Charter rights either in purpose or in effect. Section 24(1), by contrast, provides a remedy for government acts that violate Charter rights. It provides a personal remedy against unconstitutional government action and so, unlike s. 52(1), can be invoked only by a party alleging a violation of that party's own constitutional rights: Big M; R. v. Edwards, [1996] 1 S.C.R. 128. Thus this Court has repeatedly affirmed that the validity of laws is determined by s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, while the validity of government action falls to be determined under s. 24 of the Charter: Schachter; R. v. 974649 Ontario Inc., [2001] 3 S.C.R. 575, 2001 SCC 81. [Emphasis in original; para. 61.]

[84] The respondents are challenging the constitutional validity of the impugned advertising policies. They do not seek a declaration that the transit authorities' decision to refuse to post their advertisements is of no force or effect. In other words, they are not challenging the validity of "government action" taken in administering a valid legislative intimées parce que les politiques publicitaires ne sont pas des « règles de droit » au sens du par. 52(1) et, qu'au procès, les intimées n'ont pas sollicité de jugement déclaratoire en application du par. 24(1).

[82] Dans l'arrêt R. c. Ferguson, 2008 CSC 6, [2008] 1 R.C.S. 96, la juge en chef McLachlin, s'exprimant au nom de tous les juges de la Cour, affirme que « [l]e tribunal qui conclut à la violation d'un droit garanti par la Charte a l'obligation d'accorder une réparation efficace » (par. 34). Reste à savoir si le jugement déclaratoire doit s'appuyer sur le par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 ou sur le par. 24(1) de la Charte.

4.1 Le choix entre le par. 24(1) de la Charte et le par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982

[83] Dans l'arrêt Ferguson, la juge en chef McLachlin explique en outre que les réparations pouvant être accordées pour la violation d'un droit constitutionnel sont régies par les par. 24(1) de la Charte et 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, et que chacune de ces dispositions a un objectif réparateur différent :

> Le paragraphe 52(1) offre une réparation lorsque des dispositions législatives violent des droits garantis par la Charte, que ce soit par leur objet ou par leur effet, tandis que le par. 24(1) offre un recours pour les actes gouvernementaux qui violent des droits garantis par la Charte. Il permet un recours personnel contre les actes gouvernementaux inconstitutionnels et, contrairement au par. 52(1), seule peut s'en prévaloir la partie qui allègue une atteinte à ses propres droits constitutionnels : Big M; R. c. Edwards, [1996] 1 R.C.S. 128. Notre Cour a répété à maintes reprises que la validité des lois relève de l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, tandis que la validité des actes du gouvernement relève de l'art. 24 de la Charte : Schachter; R. c. 974649 Ontario Inc., [2001] 3 R.C.S. 575, 2001 CSC 81. [En italique dans l'original; par. 61.]

[84] Les intimées contestent la constitutionnalité des politiques publicitaires. Elles ne sollicitent pas un jugement déclarant inopérant le refus des commissions de transport de diffuser leurs publicités. En d'autres mots, elles ne contestent pas la constitutionnalité d'« actes gouvernementaux » accomplis dans l'administration d'un régime législatif scheme. Rather, the respondents are challenging the validity of the policies upon which the refusal was based, and therefore seek a declaration that the impugned policies themselves are of "no force or effect". On the face of the approach proposed by McLachlin C.J. in Ferguson, the question is whether the policies are "law" for the purposes of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982. If they are, the remedy will lie in s. 52(1), not s. 24(1).

[85] Section 52(1) reads:

The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

[86] Section 52(1) guarantees the supremacy of the Constitution of Canada. In order to ensure that supremacy, this Court has consistently espoused a broad interpretation of the concept of "law" in this context. In Dolphin Delivery, the Court held that s. 52(1) applies to the common law. In Douglas/Kwantlen Faculty Assn., the majority held that an arbitrator had jurisdiction under s. 52(1) to remedy a Charter violation resulting from a provision of a collective agreement.

[87] The question, therefore, is whether binding policies of general application adopted by a government entity can be characterized as "law" for the purposes of s. 52(1). While the broad wording of s. 24(1) would appear to permit a declaration with an effect similar to that of one made under s. 52(1), it is more appropriate to deal with rules made by government entities under s. 52(1). There are two reasons for this. First, as this Court emphasized in Ferguson, it is important to deal with invalid "laws" under s. 52(1) and thereby ensure that inconsistent provisions are "not left on the books" (Ferguson, at paras. 65-66):

valide. Elles s'en prennent plutôt aux politiques qui fondent le refus et demandent donc qu'un jugement les déclare « inopérantes ». Selon l'approche proposée par la juge en chef McLachlin dans l'arrêt Ferguson, il faut se demander si chacune des politiques est une « règle de droit » pour les besoins du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982. Dans l'affirmative, la réparation reposera sur cette disposition, et non sur le par. 24(1).

[85] Le paragraphe 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 est rédigé comme suit :

La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

[86] Le paragraphe 52(1) garantit la suprématie de la Constitution du Canada, et afin d'assurer cette suprématie, la Cour a toujours interprété largement le terme « règle de droit » qui y est employé. Dans l'arrêt Dolphin Delivery, la Cour a conclu que le libellé du par. 52(1) englobait la common law. Dans l'arrêt Douglas/Kwantlen Faculty Assn., les juges majoritaires ont statué que le par. 52(1) conférait à l'arbitre le pouvoir d'accorder réparation pour la violation d'un droit constitutionnel par une convention collective.

[87] Il faut donc déterminer si la politique obligatoire d'application générale adoptée par une entité gouvernementale peut être qualifiée de « règle de droit » aux fins du par. 52(1). Bien que le libellé général du par. 24(1) semble également permettre le prononcé d'un jugement déclaratoire dont l'effet est semblable à celui fondé sur le par. 52(1), il convient davantage de statuer sur les règles adoptées par une entité gouvernementale en fonction du par. 52(1), et ce, pour deux raisons. Premièrement, comme le souligne la Cour dans l'arrêt Ferguson, il est important de statuer sur une « règle de droit » invalide en application du par. 52(1) et de faire ainsi en sorte qu'une disposition incompatible ne demeure pas « en vigueur » (par. 65-66) :

The presence of s. 52(1) with its mandatory wording suggests an intention of the framers of the Charter that unconstitutional laws are deprived of effect to the extent of their inconsistency, not left on the books subject to discretionary case-by-case remedies . . . .

As pointed out in Seaboyer, if the unconstitutional effects of laws are remediable on a case-by-case basis under s. 24(1), in theory all Charter violations could be addressed in this manner, leaving no role for s. 52(1). . . . [T]he risk is that the role intended for s. 52(1) would be undermined and that laws that should be struck down — over-inclusive laws that pose a real risk of unconstitutional treatment of Canadians — would remain on the books, contrary to the intention of the framers of the Charter.

[88] Second, because the public law requirements for jurisdiction and standing under s. 52(1) are less strict, the possibility of someone seeking a declaration of constitutional invalidity of a law is stronger in terms both of the number of potential claimants and of the number of possible fora. A binding rule of general application is not an individualized form of government action like an adjudicator's decision or a decision by a government agency concerning a particular individual or a particular set of circumstances. Rules of general application can have wide-ranging effects, which means that the broader remedy is more appropriate than an individual remedy under s. 24(1).

[89] Ensuring the largest numbers of potential claimants and beneficiaries of a constitutional challenge is in keeping with the spirit of the supremacy of the Charter. I conclude, therefore, that the appropriate remedy for an invalid rule of general application is one under s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, not s. 24(1) of the Charter.

La présence du par. 52(1) et de son libellé obligatoire permet de croire que les rédacteurs de la Charte voulaient que les dispositions législatives inconstitutionnelles soient inopérantes dans la mesure de leur incompatibilité, et non qu'elles restent en vigueur sous réserve de l'octroi d'une réparation discrétionnaire accordée au cas par cas . . .

Comme la Cour l'a souligné dans Seaboyer, s'il est possible, en vertu du par. 24(1), de corriger au cas par cas les effets inconstitutionnels des dispositions législatives, on pourrait, en théorie, remédier ainsi à toutes les violations de la Charte, et le par. 52(1) n'aurait plus alors aucune raison d'être [. . .] [I]l y a risque que le rôle que devait jouer le par. 52(1) se trouve affaibli et que des dispositions législatives qui devraient être invalidées — parce que leur portée excessive crée un véritable risque que des Canadiens reçoivent un traitement inconstitutionnel — demeurent en vigueur, contrairement à ce que voulaient les rédacteurs de la Charte.

[88] Deuxièmement, au par. 52(1), les exigences moins strictes du droit public en ce qui concerne la compétence et la qualité pour agir accroissent la possibilité de faire invalider une règle de droit inconstitutionnelle eu égard au nombre de juridictions susceptibles d'être saisies et au nombre de personnes susceptibles d'intenter le recours. Une règle obligatoire d'application générale n'est pas un acte gouvernemental individualisé, comme la décision d'un arbitre ou d'un organisme gouvernemental visant une personne ou une situation en particulier. Une règle d'application générale peut avoir des répercussions à bien des égards, de sorte qu'une réparation de portée générale convient mieux qu'une réparation individuelle fondée sur le par. 24(1).

[89] L'élargissement du bassin des personnes susceptibles d'intenter un recours sur le fondement de la Constitution et des personnes susceptibles d'en bénéficier est conforme à l'esprit qui sous-tend la suprématie de la Charte. Par conséquent, je conclus que la réparation appropriée dans le cas d'une règle d'application générale invalide est celle qui prend appui sur le par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, et non sur le par. 24(1) de la Charte.

4.2 Application of the Principles to the Transit Authorities' Policies

[90] The transit authorities' policies clearly come within the meaning of "law" for the purposes of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982. They were adopted by government entities pursuant to a rule-making power. On the facts of the case, the transit authorities used their delegated rule-making power to adopt policies which unjustifiably limited the respondents' freedom of expression. Those policies are binding rules of general application that establish the rights of members of the public who seek to advertise on the transit authorities' buses. In my view, the transit authorities' advertising policies are "law" within the meaning of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982 and can therefore be declared of no force or effect to the extent of their inconsistency.

5. Conclusion

[91] I would dismiss the appeal with costs on the basis that the respondents' right under s. 2(b) of the Charter to freedom of expression was violated by articles 2, 7 and 9 of the transit authorities' advertising policies. Accordingly, the Court of Appeal's order is varied by the addition of a declaration that article 2 is also inconsistent with the protection of freedom of expression guaranteed under the Charter and of no force and effect. I would answer the constitutional questions as follows:

1. Does the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms apply, pursuant to section 32 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to clause 2 and the Standards and Limitations numbered 7 and 9 of the transit authorities' advertising policies?

Answer: Yes.

2. If so, do clause 2 and the Standards and Limitations numbered 7 and 9 of the transit authorities' advertising policies infringe section 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Answer: Yes.

4.2 L'application des principes aux politiques des commissions de transport

[90] Chacune des politiques des commissions de transport constitue clairement une « règle de droit » au sens du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982. Elle a été adoptée par une entité gouvernementale en vertu de son pouvoir de réglementation. En l'espèce, les commissions de transport ont exercé leur pouvoir de réglementation délégué pour adopter des politiques qui restreignent de façon injustifiée la liberté d'expression des intimées. Leurs politiques sont des règles obligatoires d'application générale qui établissent les droits des citoyens d'utiliser l'espace publicitaire des autobus. À mon avis, les politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport s'entendent de « règles de droit » au sens du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 et peuvent par conséquent être déclarées inopérantes dans la mesure de leur incompatibilité.

5. Conclusion

[91] Je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi avec dépens au motif que le droit à la liberté d'expression des intimées garanti à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte a été violé par les articles 2, 7 et 9 des politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport. L'ordonnance de la Cour d'appel est donc modifiée de façon qu'il y soit déclaré que l'article 2 est également incompatible avec la protection de la liberté d'expression prévue par la Charte et inopérant. Il y a lieu de répondre aux questions constitutionnelles de la manière suivante :

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés s'applique-t-elle, suivant son article 32, à l'article 2 et aux conditions et restrictions n^{os} 7 et 9 des politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport?

Réponse : Oui.

2. Dans l'affirmative, l'article 2 et les conditions et restrictions n^{os} 7 et 9 des politiques publicitaires des commissions de transport contreviennent-elles à l'alinéa 2*b*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

Réponse : Oui.

3. If so, is the infringement a reasonable limit prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society under s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Answer: No.

The following are the reasons delivered by

FISH J. —

I

[92] In order to raise revenues, the appellants sold advertising space on the outside of the buses they control. Pursuant to their separate but virtually identical advertising policies, they rejected the respondents' proposed advertisements on the ground that they conveyed "political" messages.

[93] I agree with Justice Deschamps that the appellants (the "Transit Authorities") are both "government entities" and therefore subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I agree as well that their advertising policies infringed the respondents' freedom of expression and thereby contravened s. 2(b) of the Charter. And finally, on the record before us, I agree that this infringement cannot be justified under s. 1 of the Charter.

[94] With respect, however, I have followed a different and more direct route in concluding that the appellants' advertising policies contravene s. 2(b) of the Charter.

[95] My point of departure is this: In virtue of s. 2(b), freedom of expression enjoys broad but not unbounded constitutional protection in Canada. It is a freedom that extends to any activity that conveys or attempts to convey a meaning: Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927, at p. 969. But the Charter cannot have been intended to protect all expression, so broadly defined, at all times in every "space" or "place" under governmental control. Freedom of expression under

3. Dans l'affirmative, la contravention constitue-t-elle une restriction raisonnable apportée par une règle de droit et dont la justification peut se démontrer dans une société libre et démocratique par application de l'article premier de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

Réponse : Non.

Version française des motifs rendus par

LE JUGE FISH —

I

[92] Pour produire des recettes, les appelantes exploitaient l'espace publicitaire sur la partie extérieure de leurs autobus. Invoquant leurs politiques distinctes (mais pratiquement identiques) en la matière, elles ont refusé les annonces des intimées au motif que des messages « politiques » y étaient transmis.

[93] Je conviens avec la juge Deschamps que les appelantes (les « commissions de transport ») sont toutes deux des « entités gouvernementales » et qu'elles sont donc assujetties à la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Je conviens également que leurs politiques publicitaires ont porté atteinte à la liberté d'expression des intimées et ainsi contrevenu à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Enfin, au vu du dossier, j'estime aussi que l'atteinte ne peut être justifiée au regard de l'article premier.

[94] Avec égards, cependant, ma démarche est différente et se veut plus directe pour arriver à la conclusion que les politiques publicitaires des appelantes violent le droit garanti à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte.

[95] Mon point de départ est le suivant. Au Canada, l'al. 2*b*) confère à la liberté d'expression une protection constitutionnelle étendue mais non illimitée. Cette liberté vaut pour toute activité par laquelle on transmet ou tente de transmettre une signification (Irwin Toy Ltd. c. Québec (Procureur général), [1989] 1 R.C.S. 927, p. 969). Or, le législateur ne peut avoir voulu que la Charte protège toujours l'expression, aussi largement définie, dans tout « endroit » ou « espace » relevant de l'État.

s. 2(b) has therefore been made subject to limitation in two respects.

[96] The first can be conceptually characterized as "internal": Some forms of expression may be validly curtailed by government because they are inherently inconsistent with the object and purpose of s. 2(b) of the Charter. They are for that reason left unsheltered by its constitutional umbrella.

[97] This internal limit on freedom of expression consists in narrowly construed exceptions to the general rule of broad protection enshrined in s. 2(b). Two recognized exceptions, or exclusions, are relied on by the Transit Authorities. One concerns expressive activity that would impose a significant burden on the government entity concerned; the other, expressive activity that is manifestly incompatible with the space or place where it is sought to be exercised. I shall later deal more fully with these exclusions; for the moment, it will suffice to say that neither applies in this case.

[98] Second, freedom of expression is subject to an "external" limitation as well: Even if an expressive activity falls within the protected zone of s. 2(b) of the Charter, it may be validly curtailed in virtue of s. 1 pursuant "to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society". In this regard, I agree with Justice Deschamps that the appellants' impugned advertising policies do not pass constitutional muster. They may be properly characterized as a limit "prescribed by law" within the meaning of s. 1. As mentioned earlier, however, they are not demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society like our own.

[99] In short, the appellants' impugned advertising policies prevented the respondents from exercising the freedom of expression guaranteed to them by s. 2(b) of the Charter. This rejection of the respondents' proposed advertisements, moreover, La liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) fait donc l'objet de deux limitations.

[96] La première peut être qualifiée d'« interne » sur le plan conceptuel. L'État peut limiter à bon droit certaines formes d'expression parce qu'elles sont intrinsèquement incompatibles avec l'objet et la raison d'être de l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Telle est la raison pour laquelle elles sont exclues du giron constitutionnel.

[97] Cette limitation interne de la liberté d'expression s'entend d'exceptions interprétées strictement à la règle générale de la protection étendue que consacre l'al. 2*b*). Les commissions de transport invoquent deux exceptions (ou exclusions) reconnues. L'une vise l'activité expressive qui impose une obligation substantielle à l'entité gouvernementale en cause, et l'autre l'activité expressive qui est manifestement incompatible avec l'espace ou le lieu dans lequel elle est projetée. Je reviendrai plus en détail sur ces exceptions, mais pour le moment, il suffit de dire qu'aucune ne s'applique en l'espèce.

[98] En second lieu, la liberté d'expression fait également l'objet d'une limitation « externe ». Ainsi, même lorsqu'elle bénéficie de la protection prévue à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte, l'activité expressive peut, suivant l'article premier, être légitimement restreinte « par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique ». Sur ce point, je conviens avec la juge Deschamps que les politiques publicitaires contestées ne résistent pas au contrôle constitutionnel. On peut à juste titre considérer qu'elles apportent une restriction établie « par une règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier. Toutefois, je le rappelle, la justification de cette restriction ne saurait se démontrer dans une société libre et démocratique comme la nôtre.

[99] En somme, les politiques publicitaires des appelantes ont empêché les intimées d'exercer la liberté d'expression que leur garantissait l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Qui plus est, le refus opposé aux intimées n'a pas été qu'une conséquence des politiques was not merely an effect of the restrictive advertising policies; rather, it was their very purpose.

[100] It is essentially on this basis that I would dismiss the appellants' appeal. And though it is apparent from what I have already said, I feel bound to state explicitly, from the outset, that I respectfully disagree with the analytical framework adopted by Justice Deschamps in circumscribing freedom of expression under s. 2(b) of the Charter.

[101] More particularly, I am unable to share my colleague's application in this case of the Court's decisions in Baier v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 31, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 673, and Montréal (City) v. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 SCC 62, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 141 ("City of Montréal"). In my view, Baier rests on its own factual foundation and was not intended to break fresh constitutional ground. Again with respect, I find that my colleague's application of City of Montréal adds undue complexity to the constitutional analysis required under s. 2(b) of the Charter. It unnecessarily introduces as well real risks of "overinclusion" and "underinclusion", which are both best avoided.

II

[102] I turn now to consider the two internal limits on free speech invoked by the Transit Authorities: First, they argue that acceptance of the respondents' advertisements would subject them to a significant burden; second, they submit, in effect, that the proposed advertisements are manifestly incompatible with the space where the respondents wish them to appear — the sides of buses used for public transportation. As mentioned earlier, I am satisfied that neither exception applies in this case.

[103] The first exception concerns freedom of expression that cannot be respected without imposing on the government a significant burden of assistance, in the form of expenditure of public funds, or the initiation of a complex legislative, regulatory, or administrative scheme or undertaking. This publicitaires restrictives, mais bien la réalisation de leur objet même.

[100] C'est essentiellement sur ce fondement que je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi des appelantes. Mais avant de poursuivre, bien que cela ressorte des propos qui précèdent, j'estime nécessaire d'exprimer formellement mon désaccord avec le cadre d'analyse utilisé par la juge Deschamps pour circonscrire la liberté d'expression que garantit l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte.

[101] Plus particulièrement, je ne puis souscrire à l'application qu'elle fait en l'espèce des arrêts Baier c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 31, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 673, et Montréal (Ville) c. 2952-1366 Québec Inc., 2005 CSC 62, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 141 (« Ville de Montréal »). À mon sens, le premier tient aux faits particuliers en cause et la Cour n'entendait pas y établir de nouveaux principes constitutionnels. Toujours avec égards, je trouve que l'application de l'arrêt Ville de Montréal par ma collègue complique indûment l'analyse constitutionnelle que commande l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Elle crée inutilement un risque véritable de portée « trop large » ou « trop limitative », deux éventualités qu'il faut s'efforcer d'éviter.

II

[102] J'examine maintenant les deux limitations internes de la liberté d'expression invoquées par les commissions de transport. Premièrement, les appelantes font valoir que l'acceptation des annonces publicitaires des intimées leur aurait imposé une obligation substantielle. Deuxièmement, elles prétendent en effet que les publicités proposées sont manifestement incompatibles avec l'espace dans lequel les intimées veulent les insérer, à savoir les côtés de véhicules de transport en commun. Je le répète, je suis convaincu que ni l'une ni l'autre des exceptions ne s'appliquent dans la présente affaire.

[103] La première exception s'applique lorsque la liberté d'expression ne peut être respectée sans imposer à l'État une obligation d'aide substantielle, qu'il s'agisse de dépenser des fonds publics ou de mettre en branle un régime ou un projet complexe d'ordre législatif, réglementaire ou administratif.

internal limitation on constitutionally protected freedom of expression was recognized and applied by the Court in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295, at p. 336; Haig v. Canada, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 995, at p. 1035; Native Women's Assn. of Canada v. Canada, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 627; Delisle v. Canada (Deputy Attorney General), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 989, at paras. 25-26; and Baier.

[104] The "significant burden" exception is itself subject, however, to an exception that has no application here, but should nonetheless be noted for the sake of completeness: A significant burden can be imposed on government where the claimant meets the exacting criteria set out in Dunmore v. Ontario (Attorney General), 2001 SCC 94, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 1016, and particularly well summarized by Rothstein J. in Baier, at para. 27.

[105] The significant burden exception is firmly rooted in Canada's constitutional terrain. Under our system of government, the judiciary cannot be seen to direct the legislative branch to expend scarce public resources in order to satisfy Charter claims in a particular manner. Clearly, government expenditures and initiatives may be undertaken to advance Charter rights and freedoms in innumerable ways, but given finite resources, it is generally considered to be a matter for the legislature and not the judiciary to determine which social priorities are to receive government assistance. The Dunmore exception to this general principle is limited, and essentially arises only where a fundamental right cannot otherwise be exercised.

[106] The significant burden exception responds as well to another important concern. Judges are ill-equipped to supervise the implementation of court orders that require complex and ongoing responses on the part of state actors. Any attempt to do so may well trench on the autonomy of the executive and legislative branches of government.

Cette limitation interne apportée au droit constitutionnel à la liberté d'expression a été reconnue et appliquée par la Cour dans les arrêts suivants : R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 R.C.S. 295, p. 336; Haig c. Canada, [1993] 2 R.C.S. 995, p. 1035; Assoc. des femmes autochtones du Canada c. Canada, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 627; Delisle c. Canada (Sous-procureur général), [1999] 2 R.C.S. 989, par. 25-26; Baier.

[104] Or, l'exception de l'« obligation substantielle » fait elle-même l'objet d'une exception qui ne s'applique pas en l'espèce, mais qui mérite néanmoins d'être signalée par souci d'exhaustivité. Une obligation substantielle peut être imposée à l'État lorsque l'intéressé satisfait aux critères stricts de l'arrêt Dunmore c. Ontario (Procureur général), 2001 CSC 94, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 1016, que le juge Rothstein résume particulièrement bien dans l'arrêt Baier, au par. 27.

[105] L'exception de l'obligation substantielle est fermement enracinée dans le paysage constitutionnel canadien. Dans notre système de gouvernement, le pouvoir judiciaire ne peut enjoindre au pouvoir législatif de dépenser des fonds publics restreints pour donner suite d'une certaine manière à des demandes fondées sur la Charte. Certes, dépenses et mesures gouvernementales peuvent être entreprises d'innombrables façons pour promouvoir les droits et libertés constitutionnels, mais vu la limitation des ressources disponibles, on considère généralement qu'il appartient au législateur, et non aux tribunaux, de déterminer les priorités sociales justifiant l'appui de l'État. L'exception à ce principe général prévue dans l'arrêt Dunmore a une portée limitée et ne s'applique essentiellement que lorsqu'un droit fondamental ne peut être exercé sans un tel appui.

[106] L'exception de l'obligation substantielle tient également compte d'une autre préoccupation importante. Les tribunaux ne sont pas dotés des moyens nécessaires pour surveiller la mise en œuvre d'ordonnances judiciaires exigeant des mesures complexes et continues de la part d'acteurs gouvernementaux. Toute mesure prise néanmoins en ce sens pourrait bien entamer l'autonomie des pouvoirs exécutif et législatif du gouvernement.

[107] Justice Deschamps finds (at para. 30) that Baier established "the criteria for identifying the limited circumstances in which s. 2(b) requires the government to extend an underinclusive means of, or 'platform' for, expression to a particular group or individual". According to my colleague (at para. 32), the same concern is not present in this case, because here the policies in question exclude a particular kind of expressive content, not a particular group of individuals. Since the concern in this case is content discrimination, not group underinclusion, Baier does not apply.

[108] With respect, as mentioned earlier, I would hesitate to ascribe to Baier a constitutional significance unsupported by its particular factual foundation. Baier affords no principled basis for permitting group discrimination in the freedom of expression analysis. And Baier provides no authority for the proposition that transit authorities (or other government actors) can refuse to accept all advertisements from a particular group but cannot refuse to publish some of the group's advertisements because of their political content. On any view of the matter, a purposive reading of s. 2(b) of the Charter hardly favours the exclusion of a particular group over the suppression of a particular message.

[109] Indeed, except artificially, it seems difficult to divorce content discrimination from group discrimination, since many groups are bound together by the content of their shared convictions or concerns — that is, by the "message" they aspire to communicate. To still the messenger is to suppress the message.

[110] Accordingly, unlike my colleague, I do not believe that Baier required the Transit Authorities "to at least demonstrate that the respondents themselves were excluded from the particular means of expression" in issue here (reasons of Justice Deschamps, at para. 32 (emphasis added)). Nor do [107] La juge Deschamps conclut au par. 30 de ses motifs que l'arrêt Baier établit « les critères permettant de déterminer les quelques circonstances dans lesquelles l'al. 2*b*) exige du gouvernement qu'il mette à la disposition d'une personne ou d'un groupe de personnes un mode d'expression ou une "tribune" dont l'accès est trop restreint ». Selon elle, le même souci n'est pas présent en l'espèce, car les politiques en cause excluent un type particulier de contenu expressif, et non un groupe de personnes (par. 32). Étant donné que la présente affaire porte sur la discrimination relative au contenu, et non sur l'exclusion d'un groupe, l'arrêt Baier ne s'applique pas.

[108] Avec égards, je le répète, j'hésite à attribuer à cet arrêt une importance constitutionnelle indépendante des faits particuliers qui le sous-tendent. La décision n'offre aucun fondement rationnel justifiant la discrimination à l'endroit d'un groupe de personnes dans le cadre de l'examen relatif à la liberté d'expression. Et on ne saurait l'invoquer à l'appui de la prétention selon laquelle les commissions de transport (ou d'autres acteurs gouvernementaux) peuvent refuser toutes les publicités d'un groupe en particulier, mais ne peuvent refuser certaines d'entre elles en raison de leur teneur politique. Peu importe le point de vue adopté, l'interprétation téléologique de l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte ne privilégie pas vraiment l'exclusion d'un groupe en particulier par rapport à la suppression d'un message donné.

[109] Il paraît en effet difficile, sauf de manière artificielle, de dissocier la discrimination relative à la teneur de celle visant un groupe, car de nombreux groupes sont liés entre eux par la teneur de leurs convictions ou de leurs préoccupations communes, c'est-à-dire par le « message » qu'ils aspirent à communiquer. Faire taire le messager c'est supprimer le message.

[110] Contrairement à ma collègue, je ne crois donc pas que, suivant l'arrêt Baier, les commissions de transport devaient « au moins prouver que les intimées n'avaient pas elles-mêmes accès au mode d'expression en cause » dans la présente affaire (motifs de la juge Deschamps, par. 32 (je souligne)).

I find a "positive rights analysis" helpful in this regard.

[111] Again with respect, I see no principled basis for restricting freedom of expression under the Charter according to whether the claim concerns a "means", a "platform" or a "statutory scheme". All three are equally subject to Charter scrutiny. Nor would I distinguish, in the present context, between "platforms", "forums", "spaces" and "places". Unless otherwise indicated, or the context otherwise requires, no one term is meant to exclude the others.

[112] Moreover, not every claim can be comfortably shoehorned into one preconceived slot or another: As this case demonstrates, it is not always apparent whether a particular claim seeks access to a "public space", to a government-created "platform", or to a "statutory scheme". Nor is it easy to draw explicit and conclusive distinctions between the "means", "form", or "content" of a disputed expressive activity: see Lamer J. in Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123, at pp. 1181-82.

[113] I think it preferable to ask instead whether the respondents' claim would impose on the Transit Authorities a significant burden of assistance, as earlier defined, or otherwise involves expression that is excluded by a recognized exception from the protected zone of s. 2(b) of the Charter.

[114] The "significant burden" criterion provides a pragmatic and functional standard that responds well to constitutional concerns regarding the scope of freedom of expression in s. 2(b) of the Charter. And it is firmly rooted in prior decisions of the Court.

[115] Here, the Transit Authorities complain of four "active steps" that the respondents' claim would compel them to take: The rewriting of their Je n'estime pas non plus que l'analyse sous l'angle de la « revendication d'un droit positif » soit utile à cet égard.

[111] Par ailleurs, je ne vois pas de fondement rationnel au fait de moduler la protection constitutionnelle accordée à la liberté d'expression selon que la revendication vise un « mode » d'expression, une « tribune » ou un « régime législatif ». Tous trois sont assujettis aux exigences de la Charte. Dans le présent contexte, je ne fais pas non plus de distinction entre « tribune », « espace » et « lieu ». Sauf indication contraire ou lorsque le contexte commande qu'il en aille autrement, aucun de ces éléments n'est censé exclure les autres.

[112] De plus, toute demande ne s'insère pas aisément dans une catégorie préétablie. La présente affaire montre bien qu'il n'est pas toujours patent qu'une demande donnée vise l'accès à un « espace public », à une « tribune » créée par l'État ou à un « régime législatif ». Il n'est pas non plus facile de faire des distinctions explicites et décisives entre le « mode », la « forme » et la « teneur » de l'activité expressive en cause : se reporter aux motifs du juge Lamer dans Renvoi relatif à l'art. 193 et à l'al. 195.1(1)c) du Code criminel (Man.), [1990] 1 R.C.S. 1123, p. 1181-1182.

[113] Je suis d'avis qu'il faut plutôt déterminer si acquiescer à la demande des intimées imposerait aux commissions de transport une obligation d'aide substantielle — au sens établi précédemment — ou si la demande met par ailleurs en cause une expression faisant jouer une exception reconnue à l'application de l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte.

[114] Le critère de l'« obligation substantielle » constitue une norme pragmatique et fonctionnelle qui tient dûment compte des préoccupations constitutionnelles liées à l'étendue de la liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Qui plus est, il est solidement ancré dans la jurisprudence de notre Cour.

[115] En l'espèce, les commissions de transport s'élèvent contre quatre « mesures concrètes » qu'il leur faudrait prendre pour donner suite à la advertising policy; the negotiation of new advertising contracts; the production and installation of the advertisements; and the provision of space and maintenance. I am satisfied that these four "active steps", individually or cumulatively considered, do not impose on the Transit Authorities a significant burden within the meaning of that phrase in the context of a s. 2(b) claim under the Charter.

[116] This is a case where the appellants have denied the respondents access to a commercial advertising programme already in place. Little change is needed to remove the infringing restrictions complained of by the respondents. In any event, contrary to the appellants' submission, a claim under the Charter can hardly be defeated on the ground that the infringing law or policy would have to be modified in order to end the infringement.

[117] The three other "active steps" invoked by the Transit Authorities are all entirely routine tasks which they already perform (or delegate to a third-party media company) on a regular basis in the normal course of their advertising programmes. They require no meaningful expenditure of funds — on the contrary, removing the impugned restriction would increase the appellants' advertising revenues. They require no new operating initiatives of significance. And they involve no administrative reorganization, restructuring or expansion that can reasonably be characterized as "burdensome".

[118] I would therefore reject the appellants' submission that the respondents' claim would impose a significant burden on them and is therefore unprotected by the freedom of expression guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter.

III

[119] The appellants rely as well on a second exception to the freedom of expression guaranteed demande des intimées : la révision de leur politique publicitaire, la négociation de nouveaux contrats de publicité, la production et la mise en place des publicités et l'offre d'espace et d'entretien. Je suis convaincu que, considérées individuellement ou ensemble, ces quatre « mesures concrètes » n'imposent pas aux commissions de transport une obligation substantielle au sens indiqué précédemment pour les besoins de l'application de l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte.

[116] En l'espèce, les appelantes ont refusé aux intimées l'accès à un programme de publicité commerciale déjà existant. La suppression des restrictions attentatoires contestées par les intimées requiert peu de modifications. Quoi qu'il en soit, contrairement à ce que prétendent les appelantes, une demande fondée sur la Charte ne saurait être rejetée au motif que la loi ou la politique contestée devrait être modifiée pour ne plus être attentatoire.

[117] Les trois autres « mesures concrètes » invoquées par les commissions de transport correspondent toutes à des tâches tout à fait banales qu'elles accomplissent déjà (ou qu'elles délèguent à une entreprise spécialisée) périodiquement dans le cours normal de leurs activités publicitaires. Elles n'exigent pas de dépenses importantes — au contraire, la suppression de la restriction ferait s'accroître les recettes publicitaires des appelantes. Elles ne nécessitent pas de changements importants sur le plan de l'exploitation. Et elles n'impliquent pas de réorganisation administrative, de restructuration ou d'expansion pouvant raisonnablement être qualifiée de « contraignante ».

[118] Je suis donc d'avis de rejeter la prétention des appelantes selon laquelle faire droit à la demande des intimées leur imposerait une obligation substantielle, de sorte que l'expression en cause ne bénéficierait pas de la protection prévue à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte.

III

[119] Les appelantes invoquent en outre une seconde exception à la liberté d'expression garantie

by s. 2(b) of the Charter. Essentially, they submit that the rejected advertisements are manifestly incompatible, on account of their "political" messages, with the function or purpose of the appellants' programme permitting advertisements on the sides of their buses.

[120] One of the advertising policies adopted by both appellants states:

> 2. Advertisements, to be accepted, shall be limited to those which communicate information concerning goods, services, public service announcements and public events.

[121] The addition of political messages to these broad and diverse categories of permitted advertisements cannot reasonably be thought to undermine the function or purpose of the sides of buses made publicly accessible by the Transit Authorities for paid advertising. Advertisements conveying a political message are not incompatible — let alone manifestly incompatible — with a commercial and public service advertising facility of that sort. Having chosen to make the sides of buses available for expression on such a wide variety of matters, the Transit Authorities cannot, without infringing s. 2(b) of the Charter, arbitrarily exclude a particular kind or category of expression that is otherwise permitted by law.

[122] Moreover, the purpose or function of the "space", "place" or "platform" where freedom of expression has been restricted is for the courts to ascertain, and not for government entities to unilaterally and finally determine. Depending on the circumstances, the relevant purpose or function will be established by reference to its current or ordinary use, to historical and traditional practice, to reasonable public expectations, to clear government intent, and to other like considerations. In this case, the acknowledged purpose of the scheme for advertising on the sides of buses is to raise revenue. And the function of the buses themselves is safe, clean, and orderly transportation. But in neither respect à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Elles font essentiellement valoir qu'en raison de leurs messages « politiques », les publicités qu'elles ont refusées étaient manifestement incompatibles avec la fonction ou la raison d'être de leur programme autorisant la réclame sur les côtés des autobus.

[120] Voici l'une des dispositions des politiques publicitaires des appelantes :

[TRADUCTION]

> 2. Seule est acceptée la publicité qui communique de l'information sur des biens, des services, des messages d'intérêt public et des événements publics.

[121] On ne saurait raisonnablement voir dans l'adjonction du message politique à ces catégories générales et variées de publicité autorisée une mise à mal de la fonction ou de la raison d'être des côtés d'autobus que les commissions de transport mettent généralement à la disposition des annonceurs payants. La publicité renfermant un message politique n'est pas incompatible — et encore moins manifestement incompatible — avec un service publicitaire à vocation commerciale et publique de ce genre. Après avoir permis que leurs véhicules servent de supports à l'expression sur une grande variété de sujets, les commissions de transport ne peuvent, sans violer la garantie prévue à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte, écarter arbitrairement une sorte ou une catégorie particulière d'expression par ailleurs légale.

[122] En outre, il appartient aux tribunaux de déterminer la raison d'être ou la fonction de l'« espace », du « lieu » ou de la « tribune » où la liberté d'expression fait l'objet d'une limitation; ce n'est pas aux entités gouvernementales de le faire unilatéralement et définitivement. Selon les circonstances, la raison d'être ou la fonction sera établie au regard de différentes considérations, dont l'utilisation actuelle ou habituelle, la pratique antérieure et traditionnelle, les attentes raisonnables du public et l'intention claire du gouvernement. En l'occurrence, la raison d'être reconnue de la publicité sur les côtés des autobus est la production de recettes. Et la fonction de l'autobus lui-même est le is there an obvious incompatibility with political advertisements.

[123] On the contrary, permitting political advertising would serve the very purpose for which the sides of buses were made generally and publicly accessible for a price — to raise revenue. And there is no inherent conflict between political advertisements on the sides of buses and orderly transportation. If there is some other objective in limiting political advertisements that is not related to these functions and purposes of the transit system and the advertising scheme, it should fall to be considered at the s. 1 justification stage of a challenge under s. 2(b) of the Charter.

[124] Unlike Justice Deschamps (at paras. 37-47), I do not believe that all expressive activity attracts s. 2(b) protection in every government-controlled place or forum where one would expect "free expression" to be protected. In my respectful view, freedom of expression under s. 2(b) of the Charter cannot be characterized as an "all or nothing" proposition. The constitutional inquiry on a s. 2(b) challenge should instead focus on whether the particular expressive activity that has been restricted by a governmental entity enjoys protection in the space, place or forum concerned.

[125] This will preclude overinclusion in some cases and underinclusion in others. Expressive activity that is in form or content manifestly incompatible with the purpose or function of the space in question would otherwise be "piggy-backed" into the protected zone by expressive activity that is not manifestly incompatible. Conversely, a meritorious claim of infringement would be doomed by the exclusion of any expressive activity that lies outside the protected zone.

[126] For Justice Deschamps (at para. 40), "content is not relevant to the determination of the function of a place". My colleague's view may be transport sûr, efficace et sans heurts. Aucun de ces éléments n'est manifestement incompatible avec la publicité à caractère politique.

[123] Au contraire, permettre la publicité politique serait dans le droit fil de la raison même pour laquelle les côtés des autobus sont généralement mis à la disposition du public moyennant finances, à savoir la production de recettes. Il n'y a pas non plus de conflit intrinsèque entre la publicité politique sur les côtés des autobus et le transport sans heurts. Tout autre objectif de l'exclusion de la publicité politique qui est étranger à ces fonctions et raisons d'être du système de transport et du service publicitaire doit être considéré à l'étape de la justification au regard de l'article premier pour les besoins d'une contestation fondée sur l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte.

[124] Contrairement à la juge Deschamps (par. 37-47), je ne crois pas que toute activité expressive bénéficie de la protection constitutionnelle en tout lieu ou à toute tribune relevant de l'État où l'on s'attendrait à la protection de la « liberté d'expression ». Avec égards, on ne peut considérer l'application de la garantie prévue à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte dans une optique de « tout ou rien ». L'analyse constitutionnelle fondée sur cet alinéa doit plutôt s'attacher à la question de savoir si l'activité expressive particulière que l'entité gouvernementale a restreinte jouit d'une protection dans l'espace, le lieu ou la tribune en cause.

[125] Pareille démarche permet d'éviter que la portée accordée soit trop grande dans certains cas et trop restreinte dans d'autres. Sinon, l'activité expressive dont la forme ou la teneur est manifestement incompatible avec la raison d'être ou la fonction de l'espace en question réintégrerait le champ de la garantie grâce à l'activité expressive non manifestement incompatible. À l'inverse, une allégation de violation fondée serait vouée à l'échec par l'exclusion de toute activité expressive non comprise dans le champ de la garantie.

[126] Pour la juge Deschamps, « le contenu n'est pas pertinent pour la détermination de la fonction d'un lieu » (par. 40). On peut penser que son point thought to rest on Irwin Toy, where the Court stated (at p. 969):

> We cannot . . . exclude human activity from the scope of guaranteed free expression on the basis of the content or meaning being conveyed. Indeed, if the activity conveys or attempts to convey a meaning, it has expressive content and prima facie falls within the scope of the guarantee.

[127] The issue in Irwin Toy, however, was whether the expressive content in question (commercial advertising directed at children) could be restricted generally, in any location.

[128] Here, on the other hand, the question is whether the expression is required to be permitted in a particular space. And that question is best answered by determining whether the infringed expressive activity (advertisements with a political message) is manifestly incompatible with the purpose and function of the space in question (the sides of buses open to commercial and public service advertising generally). If it is, s. 2(b) protection will be denied, exactly as it would be under the test favoured by Justice Deschamps, but without any need to resort to a complex variation of the test adopted in another context in City of Montréal.

[129] The manifestly incompatible test is, moreover, entirely consistent with the Court's conclusions in prior public space expression cases, notably Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada v. Canada, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 139, Ramsden v. Peterborough (City), [1993] 2 S.C.R. 1084, and City of Montréal.

[130] I think it important to emphasize that expressive activity will fall outside the protected zone of s. 2(b) only if it is manifestly incompatible with the purpose or function of the space in question. Where the alleged incompatibility is not manifest, the infringed expressive activity falls within the freedom of expression guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter. It would remain open to the government, of course, to establish that the infringement de vue prend appui sur l'arrêt Irwin Toy, dans lequel notre Cour dit ce qui suit (p. 969) :

> Nous ne pouvons [. . .] écarter une activité humaine du champ de la garantie de la liberté d'expression en se basant sur le contenu ou la signification. En effet, si l'activité transmet ou tente de transmettre une signification, elle a un contenu expressif et relève à première vue du champ de la garantie.

[127] Or, dans cette affaire, la question était de savoir si le contenu expressif en cause (la publicité commerciale destinée aux enfants) pouvait être restreint généralement, n'importe où.

[128] En l'espèce, par contre, il faut déterminer si l'expression doit être autorisée dans un espace en particulier. La meilleure démarche pour le faire consiste à se demander si l'activité expressive à laquelle il est porté atteinte (la publicité comportant un message politique) est manifestement incompatible avec la raison d'être et la fonction de l'espace qui, sur le côté d'un autobus, est réservé à la publicité de nature commerciale ou publique en général. Dans l'affirmative, la protection prévue à l'al. 2*b*) sera refusée, précisément comme elle l'est en application du critère privilégié par la juge Deschamps, sans qu'il y ait besoin de recourir à une variante complexe du test retenu dans un autre contexte dans l'arrêt Ville de Montréal.

[129] De plus, le critère axé sur le caractère manifestement incompatible est en parfaite adéquation avec les conclusions tirées par la Cour dans d'autres affaires relatives à l'expression dans un endroit ou un espace publics, particulièrement dans les arrêts Comité pour la République du Canada c. Canada, [1991] 1 R.C.S. 139, Ramsden c. Peterborough (Ville), [1993] 2 R.C.S. 1084, et Ville de Montréal.

[130] Il me paraît important d'insister sur le fait que la protection de l'al. 2*b*) ne sera refusée à l'activité expressive que lorsque celle-ci sera manifestement incompatible avec la raison d'être ou la fonction de l'espace en cause. Lorsque l'incompatibilité alléguée n'est pas manifeste, l'activité expressive visée par l'atteinte bénéficie de la liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Il demeure évidemment loisible à l'État de démontrer que is constitutionally permissible, under s. 1 of the Charter, as a limitation that is imposed by law and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society such as ours.

[131] But where the alleged incompatibility is manifest, the matter should be disposed of at the s. 2(b) stage of the analysis. Governments should not bear the burden of strictly prescribing by law and justifying limits on those kinds of expression that are so obviously incompatible with the purpose or function of the space provided, as the Charter cannot possibly have been intended to invite litigation in such obvious cases.

[132] As Peter W. Hogg suggests, "If the courts give to the guaranteed rights a broad interpretation that extends beyond their purpose, it is inevitable that the court will relax the standard of justification under s. 1 in order to uphold legislation limiting the extended right" (Constitutional Law of Canada (5th ed. 2007), at p. 116).

[133] By extending to manifestly incompatible expressive activity the freedom of expression guaranteed under s. 2(b) of the Charter, we would in this way lower the justification threshold under s. 1. And unnecessarily obliging the government to resort to s. 1 would unduly proliferate statutory and regulatory restrictions on freedom of expression, invite hopeless claims of infringement, and lengthen and complicate trials.

[134] Finally, I do not wish to be taken to suggest that the significant burden and the manifest incompatibility exceptions invoked by the appellants are the only expressive activities that fall outside the protected zone of s. 2(b) of the Charter. At least two other exceptions need to be noted.

[135] I have already alluded (at para. 121) to one: Expressive activity restricted by a government actor on the basis that it is prohibited under a statute that is not constitutionally challenged. Thus, for l'atteinte est constitutionnelle au regard de l'article premier de la Charte, s'agissant d'une restriction par une règle de droit et dont la justification peut se démontrer dans une société libre et démocratique comme la nôtre.

[131] Mais lorsque l'incompatibilité alléguée est manifeste, il convient de trancher à l'étape de l'analyse fondée sur l'al. 2*b*). L'État ne devrait pas être strictement tenu d'apporter une restriction dans une règle de droit et de la justifier lorsqu'elle vise un type d'expression qui est si clairement incompatible avec la raison d'être ou la fonction de l'espace offert, car le législateur ne saurait avoir voulu que la Charte soit invoquée dans un cas aussi patent.

[132] Comme le laisse entendre Peter W. Hogg, [TRADUCTION] « s'ils reconnaissent à un droit garanti une portée qui va au-delà de sa raison d'être, les tribunaux assoupliront inévitablement la norme de justification au regard de l'article premier afin de valider la loi qui restreint le droit en question » (Constitutional Law of Canada (5e éd. 2007), p. 116).

[133] Accorder à l'activité expressive manifestement incompatible la protection que l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte prévoit à l'égard de la liberté d'expression abaisserait le degré de justification requis pour les besoins de l'article premier. Et obliger ainsi le gouvernement à invoquer inutilement l'article premier multiplierait indûment les mesures législatives et réglementaires restreignant la liberté d'expression, susciterait de vaines allégations d'atteinte et accroîtrait la durée et la complexité des procès.

[134] Enfin, je ne voudrais pas que l'on conclut de mes propos que les exceptions de l'obligation substantielle et de l'incompatibilité manifeste invoquées par les appelantes correspondent aux seules activités expressives ne bénéficiant pas de la protection de l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte. Au moins deux autres exceptions méritent d'être signalées.

[135] J'ai déjà fait allusion à l'une d'elles au par. 121 : l'activité expressive qu'un acteur gouvernemental restreint au motif qu'elle est interdite par une loi dont la constitutionnalité n'est pas contestée.

example, the appellants could properly refuse to carry on the sides of their buses an advertisement seeking donations to a designated terrorist organization, in violation of s. 83.02 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46.

[136] Likewise, expression may be excluded from the scope of s. 2(b) protection solely because its form is unprotected, as in the case of expression by means of violence: see Irwin Toy, at p. 970; R. v. Keegstra, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 697, at pp. 733 and 829; and Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 1, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3, at para. 105. Beyond the example of violence, the majority in Irwin Toy did not delineate precisely what other forms of expression will be unprotected under this rubric. And it would be inappropriate to attempt to do so here, since this exception is not at issue in this case.

[137] I would also leave for another day the relevance, on a s. 2(b) challenge, of the American distinction between limitations on "subject matter" and limitations on "viewpoint": see, for example, R. A. V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377 (1992). Our concern here is with a restriction on all political messages, and I have dealt with the issues in that light.

IV

[138] For all of these reasons, I agree with Justice Deschamps that the appellants' impugned advertising policies infringed the respondents' freedom of expression and thereby contravened s. 2(b) of the Charter.

[139] And I agree as well that the appellants' advertising policies constitute a limitation prescribed by "law" within the meaning of s. 1; that the appellants have not demonstrated that the infringing provisions of their advertising policies are demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society such as ours; and that the respondents are therefore entitled, pursuant to s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, to a declaration that Ainsi, par exemple, les appelantes pourraient à juste titre refuser d'afficher sur les côtés de leurs autobus une annonce sollicitant des dons à une organisation terroriste reconnue comme telle, contrairement à l'art. 83.02 du Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46.

[136] De même, une expression peut être exclue de la portée de l'al. 2*b*) uniquement parce qu'elle revêt une forme non protégée, notamment lorsqu'il y a recours à la violence : voir les arrêts Irwin Toy, p. 970; R. c. Keegstra, [1990] 3 R.C.S. 697, p. 733 et 829; et Suresh c. Canada (Ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration), 2002 CSC 1, [2002] 1 R.C.S. 3, par. 105. Hormis l'expression violente, dans l'arrêt Irwin Toy, les juges majoritaires ne donnent pas d'exemples d'expression non protégée à cause de sa forme. Il serait inopportun de le faire dans la présente espèce puisque cette exception n'est pas invoquée.

[137] Le pourvoi ne se prête pas non plus à l'examen de la pertinence, dans le cadre d'une contestation prenant appui sur l'al. 2*b*), de la distinction américaine entre la restriction visant le « sujet » et celle visant le « point de vue » : voir, p. ex., R. A. V. c. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377 (1992). La restriction considérée dans la présente affaire vise tout message politique, et je me suis prononcé sur les questions en litige en conséquence.

IV

[138] Pour tous ces motifs, je conviens avec la juge Deschamps que par leurs politiques publicitaires, les appelantes ont porté atteinte à la liberté d'expression des intimées et contrevenu de ce fait à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte.

[139] J'estime également que les politiques publicitaires constituent une restriction « par une règle de droit » au sens de l'article premier, que les appelantes n'ont pas établi que les dispositions attentatoires de leurs politiques pouvaient se justifier dans une société libre et démocratique comme la nôtre et que les intimées ont donc droit, en vertu du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, à un jugement déclarant inopérantes les politiques the appellants' advertising policies, to the extent of their inconsistency with s. 2(b), are of no force or effect.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority: David F. Sutherland & Associates, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the appellant the British Columbia Transit: Farris, Vaughan, Wills & Murphy, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondents: Underhill, Faulkner, Boies Parker Law Corporation, Vancouver.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of New Brunswick: Attorney General of New Brunswick, Fredericton.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia: Ministry of the Attorney General of British Columbia, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the intervener the Adbusters Media Foundation: Bull, Housser & Tupper, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the intervener the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association: Lawson Lundell, Vancouver.

publicitaires des appelantes dans la mesure où elles sont incompatibles avec l'al. 2*b*).

Pourvoi rejeté avec dépens.

Procureurs de l'appelante Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority : David F. Sutherland & Associates, Vancouver.

Procureurs de l'appelante British Columbia Transit : Farris, Vaughan, Wills & Murphy, Vancouver.

Procureurs des intimées : Underhill, Faulkner, Boies Parker Law Corporation, Vancouver.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick : Procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick, Fredericton.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique : Ministère du Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, Vancouver.

Procureurs de l'intervenante Adbusters Media Foundation : Bull, Housser & Tupper, Vancouver.

Procureurs de l'intervenante l'Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique : Lawson Lundell, Vancouver.

Her Majesty The Queen Appellant;

and

David Edwin Oakes Respondent.

File No.: 17550.

1985: March 12; 1986: February 28.

Present: Dickson C.J. and Estey, McIntyre, Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson and Le Dain JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Presumption of innocence (s. 11(d)) — Reverse onus clause — Accused presumed to be trafficker on finding of possession of illicit drug — Onus on accused to rebut presumption — Whether or not reverse onus in violation of s. 11(d) of the Charter — Whether or not reverse onus a reasonable limit to s. 11(d) and justified in a free and democratic society — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 11(d) — Narcotic Control Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. N-1, ss. 3(1), (2), 4(1), (2), (3), 8.

Criminal law — Presumption of innocence — Reverse onus — Accused presumed to be trafficker on finding of possession of illicit drug — Onus on accused to rebut presumption — Whether or not constitutional guarantee of presumption of innocence (s. 11(d) of the Charter) violated.

Respondent was charged with unlawful possession of a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, contrary to s. 4(2) of the Narcotic Control Act, but was convicted only of unlawful possession. After the trial judge made a finding that it was beyond a reasonable doubt that respondent was in possession of a narcotic, respondent brought a motion challenging the constitutional validity of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. That section provides that if the Court finds the accused in possession of a narcotic, the accused is presumed to be in possession for the purpose of trafficking and that, absent the accused's establishing the contrary, he must be convicted of trafficking. The Ontario Court of Appeal, on an appeal brought by the Crown, found that this provision constituted a "reverse onus" clause and held it to be unconstitutional because it violated the presumption of innocence now entrenched in s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Crown appealed and a constitutional question was stated as to whether

Sa Majesté La Reine Appelante;

et

David Edwin Oakes Intimé.

N° du greffe: 17550.

1985: 12 mars; 1986: 28 février.

Présents: Le juge en chef Dickson et les juges Estey, McIntyre, Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson et Le Dain.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ONTARIO

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Présomption d'innocence (al. 11d)) — Disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve — L'accusé est présumé être un trafiquant dès lors qu'il est constaté qu'il était en possession d'une drogue illicite — Il incombe à l'accusé de réfuter cette présomption — L'inversion de la charge de la preuve est-elle contraire à l'al. 11d) de la Charte? — L'inversion de la charge de la preuve apporte-t-elle à l'al. 11d) une limite qui soit raisonnable et justifiée dans une société libre et démocratique? — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 11d) — Loi sur les stupéfiants, S.R.C. 1970, chap. N-1, art. 3(1), (2), 4(1), (2), (3), 8.

Droit criminel — Présomption d'innocence — Inversion de la charge de la preuve — L'accusé est présumé être un trafiquant dès lors qu'il est constaté qu'il était en possession d'une drogue illicite — Il incombe à l'accusé de réfuter cette présomption — Y a-t-il eu violation du droit constitutionnel d'être présumé innocent (al. 11d) de la Charte)?

L'intimé a été accusé d'avoir eu illégalement en sa possession un stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, contrairement au par. 4(2) de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Toutefois, il a été reconnu coupable seulement de possession. Après que le juge du procès eut conclu que, hors de tout doute raisonnable, l'intimé était en possession d'un stupéfiant, ce dernier a présenté une requête en contestation de la constitutionnalité de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Cet article prévoit que si la cour constate que l'accusé était en possession d'un stupéfiant, il est présumé l'avoir été pour en faire le trafic et qu'à moins qu'il ne prouve le contraire, il doit être déclaré coupable de trafic. Le ministère public a interjeté appel devant la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario qui a conclu qu'il s'agissait d'une disposition portant «inversion de la charge de la preuve» qui est inconstitutionnelle pour le motif qu'elle viole la présomption d'innocence maintenant enchâssée dans l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Le ministère public a formé un

s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violated s. 11(d) of the Charter and was therefore of no force and effect. Inherent in this question, given a finding that s. 11(d) of the Charter had been violated, was the issue of whether or not s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act was a reasonable limit prescribed by law and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society for the purpose of s. 1 of the Charter.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed and the constitutional question answered in the affirmative.

Per Dickson C.J. and Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson and Le Dain JJ.: Pursuant to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, the accused, upon a finding beyond a reasonable doubt of possession of a narcotic, has the legal burden of proving on a balance of probabilities that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking. On proof of possession, a mandatory presumption arises against the accused that he intended to traffic and the accused will be found guilty unless he can rebut this presumption on a balance of probabilities.

The presumption of innocence lies at the very heart of the criminal law and is protected expressly by s. 11(d) of the Charter and inferentially by the s. 7 right to life, liberty and security of the person. This presumption has enjoyed longstanding recognition at common law and has gained widespread acceptance as evidenced from its inclusion in major international human rights documents. In light of these sources, the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty requires, at a minimum, that: (1) an individual be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt; (2) the State must bear the burden of proof; and (3) criminal prosecutions must be carried out in accordance with lawful procedures and fairness.

A provision which requires an accused to disprove on a balance of probabilities the existence of a presumed fact, which is an important element of the offence in question, violates the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d). The fact that the standard required on rebuttal is only a balance of probabilities does not render a reverse onus clause constitutional.

Section 8 of the Narcotic Control Act infringes the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter by pourvoi dans le cadre duquel on a formulé la question constitutionnelle de savoir si l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants est contraire à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte et, par conséquent, inopérant. À supposer que l'on conclue qu'il y a eu violation de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, cette question constitutionnelle soulève alors la question de savoir si l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants constitue une limite raisonnable imposée par une règle de droit et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique, au sens de l'article premier de la Charte.

Arrêt: Le pourvoi est rejeté et la question constitutionnelle reçoit une réponse affirmative.

Le juge en chef Dickson et les juges Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson et Le Dain: Aux termes de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, dès qu'on conclut hors de tout doute raisonnable que l'accusé était en possession d'un stupéfiant, celui-ci a la charge ultime de prouver selon la prépondérance des probabilités qu'il n'était pas en possession de ce stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic. Une fois prouvée, la possession fait naître à l'encontre de l'accusé la présomption impérative qu'il avait l'intention de se livrer au trafic et il sera reconnu coupable, à moins qu'il ne puisse, par une preuve selon la prépondérance des probabilités, réfuter cette présomption.

La présomption d'innocence est au cœur même du droit criminel; elle est garantie expressément par l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte et implicitement par l'art. 7 qui garantit le droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de la personne. Cette présomption a depuis fort longtemps droit de cité en common law et son acceptation générale ressort de son inclusion dans les plus importants documents internationaux relatifs aux droits de la personne. Compte tenu de ces documents, le droit d'être présumé innocent tant qu'on n'est pas déclaré coupable exige à tout le moins (1) que la culpabilité soit établie hors de tout doute raisonnable, (2) que ce soit à l'État qu'incombe la charge de la preuve et (3) que les poursuites criminelles se déroulent d'une manière conforme aux procédures légales et à l'équité.

Une disposition qui oblige un accusé à démontrer selon la prépondérance des probabilités l'inexistence d'un fait présumé qui constitue un élément important de l'infraction en question, porte atteinte à la présomption d'innocence de l'al. 11*d*). Ce n'est pas parce que la norme requise pour réfuter la présomption est la preuve selon la prépondérance des probabilités qu'une disposition portant inversion de la preuve est constitutionnelle.

L'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants porte atteinte à la présomption d'innocence de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte requiring the accused to prove he is not guilty of trafficking once the basic fact of possession is proven.

The rational connection test — the potential for a rational connection between the basic fact and the presumed fact to justify a reverse onus provision — does not apply to the interpretation of s. 11(d). A basic fact may rationally tend to prove a presumed fact, but still not prove its existence beyond a reasonable doubt, which is an important aspect of the presumption of innocence. The appropriate stage for invoking the rational connection test is under s. 1 of the Charter.

Section 1 of the Charter has two functions: First, it guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in the provisions which follow it; and second, it states explicitly the exclusive justificatory criteria (outside of s. 33 of the Constitutional Act, 1982) against which limitations on those rights and freedoms may be measured.

The onus of proving that a limitation on any Charter right is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society rests upon the party seeking to uphold the limitation. Limits on constitutionally guaranteed rights are clearly exceptions to the general guarantee. The presumption is that Charter rights are guaranteed unless the party invoking s. 1 can bring itself within the exceptional criteria justifying their being limited.

The standard of proof under s. 1 is a preponderance of probabilities. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt would be unduly onerous on the party seeking to limit the right because concepts such as "reasonableness", "justifiability", and "free and democratic society" are not amenable to such a standard. Nevertheless, the preponderance of probability test must be applied rigorously.

Two central criteria must be satisfied to establish that a limit is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. First, the objective to be served by the measures limiting a Charter right must be sufficiently important to warrant overriding a constitutionally protected right or freedom. The standard must be high to ensure that trivial objectives or those discordant with the principles of a free and democratic society do not gain protection. At a minimum, an objective must relate to societal concerns which are pressing and substantial in a free and democratic society before it can be en obligeant l'accusé à prouver qu'il n'est pas coupable de trafic, une fois la possession établie.

Le critère du lien rationnel—le fait qu'une disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve puisse se justifier par l'existence d'un lien rationnel entre le fait établi et le fait présumé—ne s'applique pas à l'interprétation de l'al. 11*d*). Un fait établi peut rationnellement tendre à prouver un fait présumé sans pour autant en prouver l'existence hors de tout doute raisonnable, un aspect important de la présomption d'innocence. C'est dans le contexte de l'article premier de la Charte qu'il convient d'invoquer le critère du lien rationnel.

L'article premier de la Charte remplit deux fonctions: premièrement, il garantit les droits et libertés énoncés dans les dispositions qui le suivent; et, deuxièmement, il établit explicitement les seuls critères justificatifs (à part ceux de l'art. 33 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982) auxquels doivent satisfaire les restrictions apportées à ces droits et libertés.

La charge de prouver qu'une restriction à un droit garanti par la Charte est raisonnable et que sa justification peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique incombe à la partie qui demande le maintien de cette restriction. Les restrictions apportées à des droits garantis par la Constitution constituent nettement des exceptions à la garantie générale dont ceux-ci font l'objet. On présume que les droits énoncés dans la Charte sont garantis, à moins que la partie qui invoque l'article premier ne puisse satisfaire aux critères exceptionnels qui justifient leur restriction.

La norme de preuve applicable aux fins de l'article premier est la preuve selon la prépondérance des probabilités. La preuve hors de tout doute raisonnable imposerait une charge trop lourde à la partie qui cherche à apporter une restriction à un droit, puisque des concepts comme «le caractère raisonnable», «le caractère justifiable» et «une société libre et démocratique» ne se prêtent pas à l'application d'une telle norme. Néanmoins, le critère de la prépondérance des probabilités doit être appliqué rigoureusement.

Pour établir qu'une restriction est raisonnable et que sa justification peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique, il faut satisfaire à deux critères fondamentaux. En premier lieu, l'objectif que doivent servir les mesures qui apportent une restriction à un droit garanti par la Charte, doit être suffisamment important pour justifier la suppression d'un droit ou d'une liberté garantis par la Constitution. La norme doit être sévère afin que les objectifs peu importants ou contraires aux principes d'une société libre et démocratique ne bénéficient pas d'une protection. Il faut à tout le characterized as sufficiently important. Second, the party invoking s. 1 must show the means to be reasonable and demonstrably justified. This involves a form of proportionality test involving three important components. To begin, the measures must be fair and not arbitrary, carefully designed to achieve the objective in question and rationally connected to that objective. In addition, the means should impair the right in question as little as possible. Lastly, there must be a proportionality between the effects of the limiting measure and the objective — the more severe the deleterious effects of a measure, the more important the objective must be.

Parliament's concern that drug trafficking be decreased was substantial and pressing. Its objective of protecting society from the grave ills of drug trafficking was self-evident, for the purposes of s. 1, and could potentially in certain cases warrant the overriding of a constitutionally protected right. There was, however, no rational connection between the basic fact of possession and the presumed fact of possession for the purpose of trafficking. The possession of a small or negligible quantity of narcotics would not support the inference of trafficking.

Per Estey and McIntyre JJ.: Concurred in the reasons of Dickson C.J. with respect to the relationship between s. 11(d) and s. 1 of the Charter but the reasons of Martin J.A. in the court below were adopted for the disposition of all other issues.

Cases Cited

R. v. Shelley, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 196; R. v. Carroll (1983), 147 D.L.R. (3d) 92; R. v. Cook (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 419; R. v. Stanger (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 337; R. v. Appleby, [1972] S.C.R. 303; Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1935] A.C. 462, considered; Ong Ah Chuan v. Public Prosecutor, [1981] A.C. 648, distinguished; R. v. Babcock and Auld, [1967] 2 C.C.C. 235; R. v. O'Day (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 227; R. v. Landry, [1983] C.A. 408, 7 C.C.C. (3d) 555; R. v. Therrien (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 31; R. v. Fraser (1982), 138 D.L.R. (3d) 488; R. v. Kupczyniski, Ontario County Court, unreported, June 23, 1982; R. v. Sharpe (1961), 131 C.C.C. 75; R. v. Silk, [1970] 3 C.C.C. (2d) 1; R. v. Erdman (1971), 24 C.R.N.S. 216; Public Prosecutor v. Yuvaraj, [1970] 2 W.L.R. 226; R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295; Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486; Manchuk v.

moins qu'un objectif se rapporte à des préoccupations sociales, urgentes et réelles dans une société libre et démocratique, pour qu'on puisse le qualifier de suffisamment important. En deuxième lieu, la partie qui invoque l'article premier doit démontrer que les moyens choisis sont raisonnables et que leur justification peut se démontrer. Cela nécessite l'application d'une sorte de critère de proportionnalité qui comporte trois éléments importants. D'abord, les mesures doivent être équitables et non arbitraires, être soigneusement conçues pour atteindre l'objectif en question et avoir un lien rationnel avec cet objectif. De plus, le moyen choisi doit être de nature à porter le moins possible atteinte au droit en question. Enfin, il doit y avoir proportionnalité entre les effets de la mesure restrictive et l'objectif poursuivi — plus les effets préjudiciables d'une mesure sont graves, plus l'objectif doit être important.

Le souci du législateur de réduire le trafic des stupéfiants est réel et urgent. Son objectif, qui est de protéger la société contre les fléaux liés au trafic des stupéfiants est évident en soi aux fins de l'article premier, et peut justifier dans certains cas l'atteinte à un droit garanti par la Constitution. Il n'existe toutefois pas de lien rationnel entre le fait établi de la possession et le fait présumé de possession à des fins de trafic. La possession d'une quantité infime ou négligeable de stupéfiants ne justifie pas une conclusion de trafic.

Les juges Estey et McIntyre: Les motifs du juge en chef Dickson sont adoptés en ce qui concerne le lien entre l'al. 11*d*) et l'article premier de la Charte. Cependant, il y a adoption des motifs du juge Martin de la Cour d'appel pour ce qui est de statuer sur toutes les autres questions.

Jurisprudence

Arrêts examinés: R. c. Shelley, [1981] 2 R.C.S. 196; R. v. Carroll (1983), 147 D.L.R. (3d) 92; R. v. Cook (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 419; R. v. Stanger (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 337; R. c. Appleby, [1972] R.C.S. 303; Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1935] A.C. 462; distinction faite d'avec l'arrêt: Ong Ah Chuan v. Public Prosecutor, [1981] A.C. 648; arrêts mentionnés: R. v. Babcock and Auld, [1967] 2 C.C.C. 235; R. v. O'Day (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 227; R. c. Landry, [1983] C.A. 408, 7 C.C.C. (3d) 555; R. v. Therrien (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 31; R. v. Fraser (1982), 138 D.L.R. (3d) 488; R. v. Kupczyniski, Cour de comté de l'Ontario, décision inédite en date du 23 juin 1982; R. v. Sharpe (1961), 131 C.C.C. 75; R. v. Silk, [1970] 3 C.C.C. (2d) 1; R. v. Erdman (1971), 24 C.R.N.S. 216; Public Prosecutor v. Yuvaraj, [1970] 2 W.L.R. 226; R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 R.C.S. 295; Renvoi: Motor

The King, [1938] S.C.R. 341; R. v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299; Dubois v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 350; Singh v. Minister of Employment and Immigration, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 177; R. v. Therens, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 613; R. v. Stock (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 319; Re Anson and The Queen (1983), 146 D.L.R. (3d) 661; R. v. Holmes (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 250; R. v. Whyte (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 277; R. v. Lee's Poultry Ltd. (1985), 17 C.C.C. 539; R. v. T. (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 125; R. v. Kowalczuk (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 25; R. v. Schwartz (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 34; Re Boyle and The Queen (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 713; Tot v. United States, 319 U.S. 463 (1943); Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6 (1969); County Court of Ulster County, New York v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140 (1979); In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970); Pfunders Case (Austria v. Italy) (1963), 6 Yearbook E.C.H.R. 740; X against the United Kingdom, Appl'n No. 5124/71, Collection of Decisions, E.C.H.R., 135; Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; Law Society of Upper Canada v. Skapinker, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 357; Bater v. Bater, [1950] 2 All E.R. 458; Hanes v. Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Co., [1963] S.C.R. 154; Smith v. Smith, [1952] 2 S.C.R. 312, referred to.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Canadian Bill of Rights, R.S.C. 1970, App. III, s. 2(f).
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 11(d).
Constitution Act, 1982, s. 33.
Constitution of the United States of America, 5th and 14th Amendments.
Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34, s. 224A(1)(a) (now s. 237(1)(a)).
Food and Drugs Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. F-27, s. 35 (formerly s. 33 en. by 1960-61 (Can.), c. 37, s. 1).
International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966, art. 14(2).
Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, 1971 (U.K.), c. 38.
Misuse of Drugs Act 1975, 1975 (N.Z.), No. 116.
Narcotic Control Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. N-1, ss. 3(1), (2), 4(1), (2), (3), 8.
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 201.
Protocol for Limiting and Regulating the Cultivation of the Poppy Plant, the Production of, International and Wholesale Trade in, and Use of Opium.
Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961.
Universal Declaration of Human Rights, art. 11(1).

Authors Cited

Canada. Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs. Final Report of the Commission of Vehicle Act de la C.-B., [1985] 2 R.C.S. 486; Manchuk v. The King, [1938] R.C.S. 341; R. c. Ville de Sault Ste-Marie, [1978] 2 R.C.S. 1299; Dubois c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 350; Singh c. Ministre de l'Emploi et de l'Immigration, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 177; R. c. Therens, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 613; R. v. Stock (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 319; Re Anson and The Queen (1983), 146 D.L.R. (3d) 661; R. v. Holmes (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 250; R. v. Whyte (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 277; R. v. Lee's Poultry Ltd. (1985), 17 C.C.C. 539; R. v. T. (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 125; R. v. Kowalczuk (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 25; R. v. Schwartz (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 34; Re Boyle and The Queen (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 713; Tot v. United States, 319 U.S. 463 (1943); Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6 (1969); County Court of Ulster County, New York v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140 (1979); In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970); Affaire Pfunders (Autriche c. Italie) (1963), 6 Annuaire C.E.D.H. 741; X contre le Royaume-Uni, demande nº 5124/71, Recueil des décisions, C.E.D.H. 135; Hunter c. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 R.C.S. 145; Law Society of Upper Canada c. Skapinker, [1984] 1 R.C.S. 357; Bater v. Bater, [1950] 2 All E.R. 458; Hanes v. Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Co., [1963] R.C.S. 154; Smith v. Smith, [1952] 2 R.C.S. 312.

Lois et règlements cités

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 11*d*).
Code criminel, S.R.C. 1970, chap. C-34, art. 224A(1)a) (actuel art. 237(1)a)).
Constitution of the United States of America, 5th and 14th Amendments.
Convention unique sur les stupéfiants de 1961.
Déclaration canadienne des droits, S.R.C. 1970, app. III, art. 2*f*).
Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, art. 11(1).
Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, art. 33.
Loi des aliments et drogues, S.R.C. 1970, chap. F-27, art. 35 (anciennement art. 33 promulgué par 1960-61 (Can.), chap. 37, art. 1).
Loi sur l'opium et les drogues narcotiques, S.R.C. 1952, chap. 201.
Loi sur les stupéfiants, S.R.C. 1970, chap. N-1, art. 3(1), (2), 4(1), (2), (3), 8.
Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, 1971 (U.K.), chap. 38.
Misuse of Drugs Act 1975, 1975 (N.Z.), nº 116.
Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques, 1966, art. 14(2).
Protocole visant à limiter et à réglementer la culture du pavot, ainsi que la production, le commerce international, le commerce de gros et l'emploi de l'opium.

Doctrine citée

Canada. Commission d'enquête sur l'usage des drogues à des fins non médicales. Rapport final, Commission

Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs, Ottawa, Information Canada, 1973.
Canada. Report of the Special Committee on Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, Appendix to Debates of the Senate, 1955 Session.
Cross, Sir Rupert. Evidence, 5th ed., London, Butterworths, 1979.
Cross, Sir Rupert. "The Golden Thread of the English Criminal Law: The Burden of Proof," delivered in the Rede Lectures, University of Toronto, Toronto, 1976.
Jacobs, Francis. The European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1975.
MacKay, A. Wayne and T. A. Cromwell. "Oakes: A Bold Initiative Impeded by Old Ghosts" (1983), 32 C.R. (3d) 221, 221-235.
Sopinka, John and Sidney N. Lederman. The Law of Evidence in Civil Cases, Toronto, Butterworths, 1974.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (1983), 145 D.L.R. (3d) 123, 2 C.C.C. (3d) 339, dismissing an appeal of the Crown from a judgment of Walker Prov. Ct. J. convicting the accused of simple possession on a charge of possessing narcotics for the purposes of trafficking contrary to s. 4(2) of the Narcotic Control Act. Appeal dismissed.

Julius Isaac, Q.C., Michael R. Dambrot and Donna C. McGillis, for the appellant.

Geoffrey A. Beasley, for the respondent.

The judgment of Dickson C.J. and Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson and Le Dain JJ. was delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE—This appeal concerns the constitutionality of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. N-1. The section provides, in brief, that if the Court finds the accused in possession of a narcotic, he is presumed to be in possession for the purpose of trafficking. Unless the accused can establish the contrary, he must be convicted of trafficking. The Ontario Court of Appeal held that this provision constitutes a "reverse onus" clause and is unconstitutional because it violates one of the core values of our criminal justice system, the presumption of innocence, now entrenched in s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Crown has appealed.

d'enquête sur l'usage des drogues à des fins non médicales, Ottawa, Information Canada, 1973.
Canada. Rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'enquêter sur le trafic des stupéfiants, appendice aux Débats du Sénat du Canada, session 1955.
Cross, Sir Rupert. Evidence, 5th ed., London, Butterworths, 1979.
Cross, Sir Rupert. «The Golden Thread of the English Criminal Law: The Burden of Proof,» delivered in the Rede Lectures, University of Toronto, Toronto, 1976.
Jacobs, Francis. The European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1975.
MacKay, A. Wayne and T. A. Cromwell. «Oakes: A Bold Initiative Impeded by Old Ghosts» (1983), 32 C.R. (3d) 221, 221-235.
Sopinka, John and Sidney N. Lederman. The Law of Evidence in Civil Cases, Toronto, Butterworths, 1974.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario (1983), 145 D.L.R. (3d) 123, 2 C.C.C. (3d) 339, qui a rejeté un appel formé par le ministère public contre une décision dans laquelle le juge Walker de la Cour provinciale a reconnu l'accusé coupable de simple possession alors qu'il était inculpé de possession de stupéfiants pour en faire le trafic, contrairement au par. 4(2) de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Pourvoi rejeté.

Julius Isaac, c.r., Michael R. Dambrot et Donna C. McGillis, pour l'appelante.

Geoffrey A. Beasley, pour l'intimé.

Version française du jugement du juge en chef Dickson et des juges Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson et Le Dain rendu par LE JUGE EN CHEF—Ce pourvoi porte sur la constitutionnalité de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, S.R.C. 1970, chap. N-1. L'article 8 prévoit en bref que, si la cour constate que l'accusé était en possession d'un stupéfiant, il est présumé l'avoir été pour en faire le trafic. À moins que l'accusé ne puisse établir le contraire, il doit être déclaré coupable de trafic. La Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a conclu que cet article constitue une disposition portant «inversion de la charge de la preuve», qui est en conséquence inconstitutionnelle pour le motif qu'elle viole l'un des principes fondamentaux de notre système de justice criminelle, savoir la présomption d'innocence qui est maintenant enchâssée dans l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Le ministère public a formé un pourvoi.

I

Statutory and Constitutional Provisions

Before reviewing the factual context, I will set out the relevant legislative and constitutional provisions:

Narcotic Control Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. N-1.

3. (1) Except as authorized by this Act or the regulations, no person shall have a narcotic in his possession.

(2) Every person who violates subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable

(a) upon summary conviction for a first offence, to a fine of one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for six months or to both fine and imprisonment, and for a subsequent offence, to a fine of two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year or to both fine and imprisonment; or (b) upon conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for seven years.

4. (1) No person shall traffic in a narcotic or any substance represented or held out by him to be a narcotic.

(2) No person shall have in his possession a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking.

(3) Every person who violates subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.

. . .

8. In any prosecution for a violation of subsection 4(2), if the accused does not plead guilty, the trial shall proceed as if it were a prosecution for an offence under section 3, and after the close of the case for the prosecution and after the accused has had an opportunity to make full answer and defence, the court shall make a finding as to whether or not the accused was in possession of the narcotic contrary to section 3; if the court finds that the accused was not in possession of the narcotic contrary to section 3, he shall be acquitted but if the court finds that the accused was in possession of the narcotic contrary to section 3, he shall be given an opportunity of establishing that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, and thereafter the prosecutor shall be given an opportunity of adducing evidence to establish that the accused was in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking; if the accused establishes that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be acquitted of the offence as charged but he shall be

I

Les dispositions législatives et constitutionnelles

Avant de passer à l'examen des faits, reproduisons les dispositions législatives et constitutionnelles pertinentes:

Loi sur les stupéfiants, S.R.C. 1970, chap. N-1.

3. (1) Sauf ainsi que l'autorisent la présente loi ou les règlements, nul ne peut avoir un stupéfiant en sa possession.

(2) Quiconque enfreint le paragraphe (1) est coupable d'une infraction et passible,

a) sur déclaration sommaire de culpabilité, pour une première infraction, d'une amende de mille dollars ou d'un emprisonnement de six mois ou à la fois de l'amende et de l'emprisonnement, et pour infraction subséquente, d'une amende de deux mille dollars ou d'un emprisonnement d'un an ou à la fois de l'amende et de l'emprisonnement; ou

b) sur déclaration de culpabilité sur acte d'accusation, d'un emprisonnement de sept ans.

4. (1) Nul ne peut faire le trafic d'un stupéfiant ou d'une substance quelconque qu'il prétend être ou estime être un stupéfiant.

(2) Nul ne peut avoir en sa possession un stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic.

(3) Quiconque enfreint le paragraphe (1) ou (2) est coupable d'un acte criminel et encourt l'emprisonnement à perpétuité.

. . .

8. Dans toutes poursuites pour une violation du paragraphe 4(2), si l'accusé n'avoue pas sa culpabilité, le procès doit s'instruire comme s'il s'agissait d'une poursuite pour une infraction prévue par l'article 3, et après que le poursuivant a terminé son exposé et qu'il a été fourni à l'accusé une occasion de présenter une réplique et une défense complètes, la cour doit statuer sur la question de savoir si l'accusé était ou non en possession du stupéfiant contrairement aux dispositions de l'article 3; si la cour constate que l'accusé n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant contrairement aux dispositions de l'article 3; elle doit l'acquitter, mais si elle constate qu'il était en possession du stupéfiant contrairement aux dispositions de l'article 3, il doit être fourni à l'accusé une occasion de démontrer qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, et, par la suite, il doit être fourni au poursuivant une occasion d'établir la preuve que l'accusé était en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic; si celui-ci démontre qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, il convicted of an offence under section 3 and sentenced accordingly; and if the accused fails to establish that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be convicted of the offence as charged and sentenced accordingly.

(Emphasis added.)

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

. . . .

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

II

Facts

The respondent, David Edwin Oakes, was charged with unlawful possession of a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, contrary to s. 4(2) of the Narcotic Control Act. He elected trial by magistrate without a jury. At trial, the Crown adduced evidence to establish that Mr. Oakes was found in possession of eight one gram vials of cannabis resin in the form of hashish oil. Upon a further search conducted at the police station, $619.45 was located. Mr. Oakes told the police that he had bought ten vials of hashish oil for $150 for his own use, and that the $619.45 was from a workers' compensation cheque. He elected not to call evidence as to possession of the narcotic. Pursuant to the procedural provisions of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, the trial judge proceeded to make a finding that it was beyond a reasonable doubt that Mr. Oakes was in possession of the narcotic.

doit être acquitté de l'infraction dont fait mention l'acte d'accusation, mais il doit être déclaré coupable d'une infraction aux termes de l'article 3 et condamné en conséquence; et si l'accusé ne démontre pas qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, il doit être déclaré coupable de l'infraction dont fait mention l'acte d'accusation et condamné en conséquence.

(C'est moi qui souligne.)

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés

11. Tout inculpé a le droit:

. . . .

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

II

Les faits

L'intimé, David Edwin Oakes, a été accusé d'avoir eu illégalement en sa possession un stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, contrairement au par. 4(2) de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Il a choisi de subir son procès devant un magistrat siégeant sans jury. Au cours du procès, la poursuite a produit des éléments de preuve en vue d'établir que M. Oakes avait été trouvé en possession de huit fioles d'une capacité d'un gramme contenant de la résine de cannabis sous forme d'huile de haschisch. Une fouille effectuée au poste de police a permis de découvrir la somme de 619,45 $. Monsieur Oakes a dit à la police qu'il avait acheté au prix de 150 $ dix fioles d'huile de haschisch pour son propre usage et que les 619,45 $ provenaient d'un chèque d'indemnisation pour un accident de travail. Il a choisi de ne pas présenter de preuve relativement à la possession d'un stupéfiant. Conformément aux dispositions en matière de procédure de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, le juge du procès a conclu que, hors de tout doute raisonnable, M. Oakes était en possession du stupéfiant.

Following this finding, Mr. Oakes brought a motion to challenge the constitutional validity of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, which he maintained imposes a burden on an accused to prove that he or she was not in possession for the purpose of trafficking. He argued that s. 8 violates the presumption of innocence contained in s. 11(d) of the Charter.

III

Judgments

(a) Ontario Provincial Court (R. v. Oakes (1982), 38 O.R. (2d) 598)

At trial, Walker Prov. Ct. J. borrowed the words of Laskin C.J. in R. v. Shelley, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 196, at p. 202, and found there was no rational or necessary connection between the fact proved, i.e., possession of the drug, and the conclusion asked to be drawn, namely, possession for the purpose of trafficking. Walker Prov. Ct. J. held that, to the extent that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act requires this presumption and the resultant conviction, it is inoperative as a violation of the presumption of innocence contained in s. 11(d) of the Charter.

Walker Prov. Ct. J. added that the reverse onus in s. 8 would not be invalid if the Crown had adduced evidence of possession as well as evidence from which it could be inferred beyond a reasonable doubt that the possession was for the purpose of trafficking. If this were done, there would be a sufficient rational connection between the fact of possession and the presumed fact of trafficking.

(b) Ontario Court of Appeal (R. v. Oakes (1983), 145 D.L.R. (3d) 123)

Martin J.A., writing for a unanimous court, dismissed the appeal and held the reverse onus provision in s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act unconstitutional.

Martin J.A. stated that, as a general rule, a reverse onus clause which places a burden on the À la suite de cette conclusion, M. Oakes a présenté une requête en contestation de la constitutionnalité de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, qui, selon lui, impose à un accusé l'obligation de prouver qu'il n'était pas en possession d'un stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic et constitue de ce fait une violation de la présomption d'innocence énoncée à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte.

III

Les jugements

a) Cour provinciale de l'Ontario (R. v. Oakes (1982), 38 O.R. (2d) 598) Au procès, le juge Walker de la Cour provinciale a emprunté les termes utilisés par le juge en chef Laskin dans l'arrêt R. c. Shelley, [1981] 2 R.C.S. 196, à la p. 202, et a conclu qu'il n'y avait aucun lien rationnel ou nécessaire entre le fait prouvé, c.-à-d. la possession du stupéfiant, et la conclusion qu'on lui demandait de tirer, savoir qu'il s'agissait d'une possession à des fins de trafic. Le juge Walker a conclu que, dans la mesure où l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants requiert cette présomption et la déclaration de culpabilité qui en résulte, il va à l'encontre de la présomption d'innocence énoncée à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte et est en conséquence inopérant.

Le juge Walker a ajouté que l'inversion de la charge de la preuve effectuée par l'art. 8 n'aurait pas été entachée d'invalidité si le ministère public avait produit une preuve de possession ainsi que des éléments de preuve permettant de conclure hors de tout doute raisonnable qu'il s'agissait d'une possession à des fins de trafic. Si cela était fait, il y aurait un lien rationnel suffisant entre le fait de la possession et le fait présumé, c.-à-d. le trafic.

b) Cour d'appel de l'Ontario (R. v. Oakes (1983), 145 D.L.R. (3d) 123)

La Cour d'appel, s'exprimant par l'intermédiaire du juge Martin, a rejeté à l'unanimité l'appel et déclaré inconstitutionnelle la disposition de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants portant inversion de la charge de la preuve.

Le juge Martin a affirmé qu'en règle générale une disposition qui inverse la charge de la preuve accused to disprove on a balance of probabilities an essential element of an offence contravenes the right to be presumed innocent. Nevertheless, he held that some reverse onus provisions may be constitutionally valid provided they constitute reasonable limitations on the right to be presumed innocent and are demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

To determine whether a particular reverse onus provision is legitimate, Martin J.A. outlined a two-pronged inquiry. First, it is necessary to pass a threshold test which he explained as follows, at p. 146:

> The threshold question in determining the legitimacy of a particular reverse onus provision is whether the reverse onus clause is justifiable in the sense that it is reasonable for Parliament to place the burden of proof on the accused in relation to an ingredient of the offence in question. In determining the threshold question consideration should be given to a number of factors, including such factors as: (a) the magnitude of the evil sought to be suppressed, which may be measured by the gravity of the harm resulting from the offence or by the frequency of the occurrence of the offence or by both criteria; (b) the difficulty of the prosecution making proof of the presumed fact, and (c) the relative ease with which the accused may prove or disprove the presumed fact. Manifestly, a reverse onus provision placing the burden of proof on the accused with respect to a fact which it is not rationally open to him to prove or disprove cannot be justified.

If the reverse onus provision meets these criteria, due regard having been given to Parliament's assessment of the need for the provision, a second test must then be satisfied. This second test was described by Martin J.A. as the "rational connection test". According to it, to be reasonable, the proven fact (e.g., possession) must rationally tend to prove the presumed fact (e.g., an intention to traffic). In other words, the proven fact must raise a probability that the presumed fact exists.

de manière à obliger l'accusé à prouver selon la prépondérance des probabilités l'inexistence d'un élément essentiel d'une infraction contrevient au droit d'être présumé innocent. Néanmoins, il a conclu que certaines dispositions portant inversion de la charge de la preuve peuvent être constitutionnelles pour peu qu'elles constituent des restrictions raisonnables au droit d'être présumé innocent et que la justification de ces restrictions puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Le juge Martin a énoncé une question à deux volets qu'il faut se poser pour déterminer si, dans un cas donné, une disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve est légitime. Ainsi, il faut d'abord satisfaire à un critère préliminaire que le juge Martin explique de la façon suivante à la p. 146:

> [TRADUCTION] Pour décider de la légitimité d'une disposition particulière portant inversion de la charge de la preuve, il faut d'abord et avant tout se demander si cette disposition est justifiable en ce sens qu'il est raisonnable que le législateur impose à l'accusé la charge de la preuve relativement à un élément de l'infraction en cause. Pour répondre à cette question préliminaire il faut prendre en considération un certain nombre de facteurs dont: a) l'ampleur du mal à réprimer, qui peut être mesurée par la gravité du préjudice résultant de l'infraction ou par la fréquence de la perpétration de l'infraction, ou par les deux critères, b) la difficulté que peut éprouver la poursuite à établir le fait présumé, et c) la facilité relative avec laquelle l'accusé pourra prouver l'existence ou l'inexistence du fait présumé. Manifestement, une disposition imposant à l'accusé la charge de la preuve à l'égard d'un fait dont, logiquement, il n'est pas à même de prouver l'existence ou l'inexistence n'est guère justifiable.

Si, après qu'on a dûment tenu compte de la détermination par le législateur de la nécessité d'une telle disposition, la disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve répond à ces critères, elle doit alors satisfaire à un autre. Il s'agit de ce que le juge Martin a décrit comme le [TRADUCTION] «critère du lien rationnel». Suivant ce critère, pour être raisonnable, le fait prouvé (par ex., la possession) doit logiquement tendre à établir le fait présumé (par ex., l'intention de faire le trafic). En d'autres termes, le fait prouvé doit soulever la probabilité de l'existence du fait présumé.

In considering s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, Martin J.A. focused primarily on the second test at p. 147:

> I have reached the conclusion that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is constitutionally invalid because of the lack of a rational connection between the proved fact (possession) and the presumed fact (an intention to traffic) .... Mere possession of a small quantity of a narcotic drug does not support an inference of possession for the purpose of trafficking or even tend to prove an intent to traffic. Moreover, upon proof of possession, s. 8 casts upon the accused the burden of disproving not some formal element of the offence but the burden of disproving the very essence of the offence.

Martin J.A. added that it is not for courts to attempt to rewrite s. 8 by applying it on a case by case basis. Furthermore, where a rational connection does exist between possession and the presumed intention to traffic, such as "where the possession of a narcotic drug is of such a nature as to be indicative of trafficking, the common sense of a jury can ordinarily be relied upon to arrive at a proper conclusion". There would not, therefore, be any need for a statutory presumption.

One final note should be made regarding Martin J.A.'s judgment. In assessing whether or not s. 8 was a reasonable limitation on the constitutional protection of the presumption of innocence, Martin J.A. combined the analysis of s. 11(d) with s. 1. He held that the requirements of s. 1, that a limitation be reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, provided the standard for interpreting the phrase "according to law" in s. 11(d).

IV

The Issues

The constitutional question in this appeal is stated as follows:

> Is s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act inconsistent with s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and thus of no force and effect?

Dans son analyse de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, le juge Martin s'est arrêté principalement au second critère à la p. 147:

> [TRADUCTION] J'en suis venu à la conclusion que l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants est inconstitutionnel en raison de l'absence d'un lien rationnel entre le fait prouvé (la possession) et le fait présumé (l'intention de faire le trafic) ... La simple possession d'une faible quantité d'un stupéfiant ne permet pas de conclure à la possession à des fins de trafic ou encore ne tend même pas à prouver une intention de se livrer au trafic. En outre, du moment que la possession est prouvée, l'art. 8 impose à l'accusé la charge de prouver l'inexistence non pas de quelque élément formel de l'infraction mais de l'essence même de celle-ci.

Le juge Martin ajoute qu'il n'appartient pas aux tribunaux d'essayer de reformuler l'art. 8 en l'appliquant cas par cas. De plus, lorsqu'il existe un lien rationnel entre la possession et l'intention présumée de faire le trafic, comme [TRADUCTION] «dans le cas où la possession d'un stupéfiant est de nature à constituer une indication du trafic de celui-ci, on peut ordinairement compter sur le bon sens du jury pour que celui-ci tire la bonne conclusion». Aucune présomption légale ne serait alors nécessaire.

Une dernière observation s'impose relativement aux motifs du juge Martin. Dans son étude de la question de savoir si l'art. 8 constitue une restriction raisonnable de la protection constitutionnelle accordée à la présomption d'innocence, le juge Martin a rapproché l'al. 11*d*) de l'article premier. Il a conclu que l'exigence de l'article premier qu'une restriction soit raisonnable et que sa justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique constitue la norme applicable à l'interprétation de l'expression «conformément à la loi» que l'on trouve à l'al. 11*d*).

IV

Les questions en litige

La question constitutionnelle formulée dans le présent pourvoi est la suivante:

> L'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants est-il incompatible avec l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et, par conséquent, inopérant?

Two specific questions are raised by this general question: (1) does s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violate s. 11(d) of the Charter; and, (2) if it does, is s. 8 a reasonable limit prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society for the purpose of s. 1 of the Charter? If the answer to (1) is affirmative and the answer to (2) negative, then the constitutional question must be answered in the affirmative.

V

Does s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act Violate s. 11(d) of the Charter?

(a) The Meaning of s. 8

Before examining the presumption of innocence contained in s. 11(d) of the Charter, it is necessary to clarify the meaning of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. The procedural steps contemplated by s. 8 were clearly outlined by Branca J.A. in R. v. Babcock and Auld, [1967] 2 C.C.C. 235 (B.C.C.A.), at p. 247:

(A) The accused is charged with possession of a forbidden drug for the purpose of trafficking.

(B) The trial of the accused on this charge then proceeds as if it was a prosecution against the accused on a simple charge of possession of the forbidden drug ....

(C) When the Crown has adduced its evidence on the basis that the charge was a prosecution for simple possession, the accused is then given the statutory right or opportunity of making a full answer and defence to the charge of simple possession ....

(D) When this has been done the Court must make a finding as to whether the accused was in possession of narcotics contrary to s. 3 of the new Act. (Unlawful possession of a forbidden narcotic drug).

(E) Assuming that the Court so finds, it is then that an onus is placed upon the accused in the sense that an opportunity must be given to the accused of establishing that he was not in possession of a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking.

(F) When the accused has been given this opportunity the prosecutor may then establish that the possession of the accused was for the purpose of trafficking ....

Cette question générale soulève deux questions précises: (1) l'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants contrevient-il à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte? et (2) dans l'affirmative, l'art. 8 constitue-t-il une limite raisonnable imposée par une règle de droit et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique, au sens de l'art. 1 de la Charte? Dans l'hypothèse d'une réponse affirmative à la première question et d'une réponse négative à la seconde, la question constitutionnelle doit alors recevoir une réponse affirmative.

V

L'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants contrevient-il à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte?

a) Le sens de l'art. 8 Avant d'examiner la présomption d'innocence énoncée à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, il est nécessaire de préciser le sens de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Dans l'arrêt R. v. Babcock and Auld, [1967] 2 C.C.C. 235 (C.A.C.-B.), à la p. 247, le juge Branca expose clairement les étapes de la procédure prévue par l'art. 8: [TRADUCTION] A) L'accusé est inculpé de possession d'un stupéfiant prohibé en vue d'en faire le trafic.

B) Le procès de l'accusé relativement à cette accusation est alors instruit comme s'il s'agissait d'une poursuite relativement à une simple accusation de possession du stupéfiant prohibé ...

C) Lorsque le ministère public a administré sa preuve comme s'il s'agissait d'une poursuite pour simple possession, la loi accorde à l'accusé le droit ou la possibilité de présenter une défense complète relativement à l'accusation de simple possession ...

D) Ceci fait, la cour doit statuer sur la question de savoir si l'accusé était en possession d'un stupéfiant contrairement à l'art. 3 de la nouvelle Loi. (Possession d'un stupéfiant prohibé).

E) Si la cour conclut à la possession, c'est alors à ce moment que la charge de la preuve est imposée à l'accusé en ce sens qu'on doit lui fournir l'occasion de démontrer qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic.

F) Quand l'accusé a eu cette possibilité, la poursuite peut alors tenter d'établir que l'accusé était en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic ...

(G) It is then that the Court must find whether or not the accused has discharged the onus placed upon him under and by the said section.

(H) If the Court so finds, the accused must be acquitted of the offence as charged, namely, possession for the purpose of trafficking, but in that event the accused must be convicted of the simple charge of unlawful possession of a forbidden narcotic . . . .

(I) If the accused does not so establish he must then be convicted of the full offence as charged.

Mr. Justice Branca then added at pp. 247-48:

It is quite clear to me that under s. 8 of the new Act the trial must be divided into two phases. In the first phase the sole issue to be determined is whether or not the accused is guilty of simple possession of a narcotic. This issue is to be determined upon evidence relevant only to the issue of possession. In the second phase the question to be resolved is whether or not the possession charged is for the purpose of trafficking.

Against the backdrop of these procedural steps, we must consider the nature of the statutory presumption contained in s. 8 and the type of burden it places on an accused. The relevant portions of s. 8 read:

8. . . . if the court finds that the accused was in possession of the narcotic . . . he shall be given an opportunity of establishing that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking . . . if the accused fails to establish that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be convicted of the offence as charged . . . .

In determining the meaning of these words, it is helpful to consider in a general sense the nature of presumptions. Presumptions can be classified into two general categories: presumptions without basic facts and presumptions with basic facts. A presumption without a basic fact is simply a conclusion which is to be drawn until the contrary is proved. A presumption with a basic fact entails a conclusion to be drawn upon proof of the basic fact (see Cross on Evidence, 5th ed., at pp. 122-23).

Basic fact presumptions can be further categorized into permissive and mandatory presumptions.

G) C'est alors que la cour doit décider si l'accusé s'est acquitté de l'obligation que lui impose ledit article.

H) Si la cour conclut par l'affirmative, l'accusé doit être acquitté de l'infraction imputée, savoir la possession en vue de faire le trafic, mais, dans ce cas-là, il doit être déclaré coupable de l'infraction de simple possession d'un stupéfiant prohibé . . .

I) Si l'accusé ne réussit pas à démontrer qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, il doit alors être reconnu coupable de l'infraction imputée.

Le juge Branca ajoute ensuite, aux pp. 247 et 248:

[TRADUCTION] Il est très clair dans mon esprit que l'art. 8 de la nouvelle Loi exige un procès en deux étapes. À la première étape, la seule question qu'il faut résoudre est de savoir si l'accusé est coupable de simple possession d'un stupéfiant. Cette question doit être tranchée en fonction des éléments de preuve qui se rapportent uniquement à la possession. À la seconde étape, la question à trancher est de savoir si la possession imputée était pour des fins de trafic.

Compte tenu de ces étapes de la procédure, nous devons étudier la nature de la présomption légale établie par l'art. 8 ainsi que le genre de charge qu'elle impose à un accusé. Voici les parties pertinentes de l'art. 8:

8. . . . si elle [la cour] constate qu'il était en possession du stupéfiant . . . il doit être fourni à l'accusé une occasion de démontrer qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic . . . si l'accusé ne démontre pas qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, il doit être déclaré coupable de l'infraction dont fait mention l'acte d'accusation . . .

Pour déterminer le sens de ces mots, il est utile de procéder à un examen général de la nature des présomptions. Les présomptions peuvent être rangées dans deux catégories générales: les présomptions non fondées sur des faits établis et les présomptions fondées sur des faits établis. Une présomption non fondée sur un fait établi est simplement une conclusion qui doit être tirée tant qu'on n'a pas prouvé le contraire. Une présomption fondée sur un fait établi consiste en une conclusion qui repose sur la preuve de ce fait (voir Cross on Evidence, 5th ed., aux pp. 122 et 123).

Quant aux présomptions fondées sur des faits établis, elles peuvent créer une faculté ou être

A permissive presumption leaves it optional as to whether the inference of the presumed fact is drawn following proof of the basic fact. A mandatory presumption requires that the inference be made.

Presumptions may also be either rebuttable or irrebuttable. If a presumption is rebuttable, there are three potential ways the presumed fact can be rebutted. First, the accused may be required merely to raise a reasonable doubt as to its existence. Secondly, the accused may have an evidentiary burden to adduce sufficient evidence to bring into question the truth of the presumed fact. Thirdly, the accused may have a legal or persuasive burden to prove on a balance of probabilities the non-existence of the presumed fact.

Finally, presumptions are often referred to as either presumptions of law or presumptions of fact. The latter entail "frequently recurring examples of circumstantial evidence" (Cross on Evidence, supra, at p. 124) while the former involve actual legal rules.

To return to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, it is my view that, upon a finding beyond a reasonable doubt of possession of a narcotic, the accused has the legal burden of proving on a balance of probabilities that he or she was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking. Once the basic fact of possession is proven, a mandatory presumption of law arises against the accused that he or she had the intention to traffic. Moreover, the accused will be found guilty of the offence of trafficking unless he or she can rebut this presumption on a balance of probabilities. This interpretation of s. 8 is supported by the courts in a number of jurisdictions: R. v. Carroll (1983), 147 D.L.R. (3d) 92 (P.E.I.S.C. in banco); R. v. Cook (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 419 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. O'Day (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 227 (N.B.C.A.); R. v. Landry (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 555 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Stanger (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 337 (Alta. C.A.)

In some decisions it has been held that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is constitutional because impératives. Dans le cas d'une présomption créant une faculté, dès lors qu'il y a un fait établi, on est libre d'en déduire ou ne pas en déduire le fait présumé. Si, par contre, il s'agit d'une présomption impérative, cette déduction est obligatoire.

Une présomption peut aussi être réfutable ou irréfutable. Si elle est réfutable, il y a trois moyens possibles de combattre le fait présumé. Premièrement, l'accusé pourra avoir simplement à susciter un doute raisonnable quant à l'existence de ce fait. Deuxièmement, il pourra avoir la charge de produire une preuve suffisante pour mettre en doute l'exactitude du fait présumé. Troisièmement, il pourra avoir à s'acquitter d'une charge ultime ou d'une charge de persuasion qui l'oblige à prouver selon la prépondérance des probabilités l'inexistence du fait présumé.

Enfin, les présomptions sont souvent décrites comme étant soit des présomptions de droit, soit des présomptions de fait. Ces dernières comportent des [TRADUCTION] «exemples fréquents de preuve indirecte» (Cross on Evidence, précité, à la p. 124), alors que les premières comportent des règles de droit expresses.

Revenons à l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Selon moi, dès qu'on conclut hors de tout doute raisonnable que l'accusé était en possession d'un stupéfiant, celui-ci a la charge ultime de prouver selon la prépondérance des probabilités qu'il n'était pas en possession de ce stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic. Une fois prouvée, la possession fait naître à l'encontre de l'accusé la présomption de droit impérative qu'il avait l'intention de se livrer au trafic. De plus, l'accusé sera reconnu coupable de l'infraction de trafic, à moins qu'il ne puisse, par une preuve selon la prépondérance des probabilités, réfuter cette présomption. Les cours de plusieurs ressorts ont appuyé cette interprétation de l'art. 8: R. v. Carroll (1983), 147 D.L.R. (3d) 92 (C.S.Î.-P.-É. in banco); R. v. Cook (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 419 (C.A.N.-É.); R. v. O'Day (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 227 (C.A.N.-B.); R. v. Landry, (1983) 7 C.C.C. (3d) 555 (C.A. Qué.); R. v. Stanger (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 337 (C.A. Alb.)

Dans certaines décisions, on a conclu à la constitutionnalité de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants

it places only an evidentiary burden rather than a legal burden on the accused. The ultimate legal burden to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt remains with the Crown and the presumption of innocence is not offended. (R. v. Therrien (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 31 (Ont. Co. Ct.); R. v. Fraser (1982), 138 D.L.R. (3d) 488 (Sask. Q.B.); R. v. Kupczyniski, (June 23, 1982, unreported, Ont. Co. Ct.))

This same approach was relied on in R. v. Sharpe (1961), 131 C.C.C. 75 (Ont. C.A.), a Canadian Bill of Rights decision on the presumption of innocence. In that case, a provision in the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 201, similar to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, was interpreted as shifting merely the secondary burden of adducing evidence onto the accused. The primary onus remained with the Crown. In R. v. Silk, [1970] 3 C.C.C. (2d) 1 (B.C.C.A.), the British Columbia Court of Appeal held that s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights had not been infringed because s. 33 of the Food and Drugs Act, (now R.S.C. 1970, c. F-27, s. 35) required only that an accused raise a reasonable doubt that the purpose of his or her possession was trafficking. This decision, however, was not followed in R. v. Appleby, [1972] S.C.R. 303, nor in R. v. Erdman (1971), 24 C.R.N.S. 216 (B.C.C.A.)

Those decisions which have held that only the secondary or evidentiary burden shifts are not persuasive with respect to the Narcotic Control Act. As Ritchie J. found in R. v. Appleby, supra, (though addressing a different statutory provision) the phrase "to establish" is the equivalent of "to prove". The legislature, by using the word "establish" in s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, intended to impose a legal burden on the accused. This is most apparent in the words "if the accused fails to establish that he was not in possession of the parce qu'il impose à l'accusé une simple charge de présentation plutôt qu'une charge ultime. Le ministère public a toujours la charge ultime de prouver la culpabilité hors de tout doute raisonnable et il n'y a aucune atteinte à la présomption d'innocence. (R. v. Therrien (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 31 (C. de comté Ont.); R. v. Fraser (1982), 138 D.L.R. (3d) 488 (B.R. Sask.); R. v. Kupczyniski (décision inédite en date du 23 juin 1982, C. de comté Ont.))

Ce même point de vue a été invoqué dans l'arrêt R. v. Sharpe (1961), 131 C.C.C. 75 (C.A. Ont.), où il était question de la présomption d'innocence, mais dans le contexte de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Suivant l'interprétation qu'on a donnée dans cette affaire à une disposition de la Loi sur l'opium et les drogues narcotiques, S.R.C. 1952, chap. 201, cette disposition, qui était semblable à l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, ne reportait sur l'accusé que la charge secondaire de produire des éléments de preuve. Quant à la charge principale, elle continuait d'incomber au ministère public. Dans l'arrêt R. v. Silk, [1970] 3 C.C.C. (2d) 1 (C.A.C.-B.), la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique a conclu qu'il n'y avait pas eu violation de l'al. 2*f*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits parce que l'art. 33 de la Loi des aliments et drogues (l'actuel S.R.C. 1970, chap. F-27, art. 35) exigeait simplement d'un accusé qu'il fasse naître un doute raisonnable sur la question de savoir s'il s'agissait d'une possession à des fins de trafic. Toutefois, cet arrêt n'a été suivi ni dans l'arrêt R. c. Appleby, [1972] R.C.S. 303, ni dans l'arrêt R. v. Erdman (1971), 24 C.R.N.S. 216 (C.A.C.-B.)

Les décisions établissant que seule la charge secondaire ou la charge de présentation est déplacée n'ont aucune force persuasive pour ce qui est de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Comme l'a conclu le juge Ritchie dans l'arrêt R. c. Appleby, précité, (quoique relativement à une disposition législative différente), le terme «établir» équivaut à «prouver». En employant le mot «démontrer» à l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, le législateur a voulu imposer à l'accusé une charge ultime. C'est ce qui ressort on ne peut plus clairement de la phrase narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be convicted of the offence as charged".

In the Appleby case, Ritchie J. also held that the accused is required to disprove the presumed fact according to the civil standard of proof, on a balance of probabilities. He rejected the criminal standard of beyond a reasonable doubt, relying, inter alia, upon the following passage from the House of Lords' decision in Public Prosecutor v. Yuvaraj, [1970] 2 W.L.R. 226, at p. 232:

> Generally speaking, no onus lies upon a defendant in criminal proceedings to prove or disprove any fact: it is sufficient for his acquittal if any of the facts which, if they existed, would constitute the offence with which he is charged are "not proved". But exceptionally, as in the present case, an enactment creating an offence expressly provides that if other facts are proved, a particular fact, the existence of which is a necessary factual ingredient of the offence, shall be presumed or deemed to exist "unless the contrary is proved". In such a case the consequence of finding that that particular fact is "disproved" will be an acquittal, whereas the absence of such a finding will have the consequence of a conviction. Where this is the consequence of a fact's being "disproved" there can be no grounds in public policy for requiring that exceptional degree of certainty as excludes all reasonable doubt that that fact does not exist. In their Lordships' opinion the general rule applies in such a case and it is sufficient if the court considers that upon the evidence before it it is more likely than not that the fact does not exist. The test is the same as that applied in civil proceedings: the balance of probabilities.

I conclude that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act contains a reverse onus provision imposing a legal burden on an accused to prove on a balance of probabilities that he or she was not in possession of a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking. It is therefore necessary to determine whether s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act offends the right to be "presumed innocent until proven guilty" as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter.

suivante: «si l'accusé ne démontre pas qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic, il doit être déclaré coupable de l'infraction dont fait mention l'acte d'accusation».

Dans l'arrêt Appleby, le juge Ritchie a conclu en outre que l'accusé doit prouver l'inexistence du fait présumé selon la norme de preuve en matière civile, savoir celle de la prépondérance des probabilités. Il a rejeté la norme d'une preuve hors de tout doute raisonnable applicable en matière criminelle, en se fondant notamment sur le passage suivant tiré de l'arrêt de la Chambre des lords Public Prosecutor v. Yuvaraj, [1970] 2 W.L.R. 226, à la p. 232:

> [TRADUCTION] En règle générale, dans des procédures criminelles, le défendeur n'a pas à prouver ou à réfuter quelque fait que ce soit: pour qu'il soit acquitté, il suffit que l'un des faits qui, s'il existait, constituerait l'infraction dont il est accusé, «ne soit pas prouvé». Mais il arrive exceptionnellement, comme en l'espèce, que la loi créant une infraction prévoie expressément que si d'autres faits sont prouvés, un fait précis, dont l'existence constitue un élément essentiel de l'infraction, sera présumé ou réputé exister «à moins que le contraire ne soit prouvé». En pareil cas, la conclusion que ce fait précis est «réfuté» entraîne un acquittement, alors que l'absence d'une telle conclusion entraîne une déclaration de culpabilité. Lorsque c'est là le résultat de la «réfutation» d'un fait, il ne peut y avoir, dans l'intérêt public, de motif d'exiger un degré exceptionnel de certitude tel qu'il lève tout doute raisonnable que ce fait n'existe pas. À notre avis, en pareil cas, la règle générale s'applique et il suffit que la cour considère, compte tenu de la preuve à sa disposition, que le fait n'existe probablement pas. Le critère est le même que celui qui s'applique dans les procédures civiles: celui de la prépondérance des probabilités.

Je conclus que l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants contient une disposition qui inverse la charge de la preuve en imposant à l'accusé la charge ultime de prouver selon la prépondérance des probabilités qu'il n'était pas en possession d'un stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic. Il est donc nécessaire d'établir si l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants porte atteinte au droit d'un inculpé d'être «présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable», garanti par l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte.

(b) The Presumption of Innocence and s. 11(d) of the Charter

Section 11(d) of the Charter constitutionally entrenches the presumption of innocence as part of the supreme law of Canada. For ease of reference, I set out this provision again:

> 11. Any person charged with an offence has the right
>
> . . .
>
> (d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

To interpret the meaning of s. 11(d), it is important to adopt a purposive approach. As this Court stated in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295, at p. 344:

> The meaning of a right or freedom guaranteed by the Charter was to be ascertained by an analysis of the purpose of such a guarantee; it was to be understood, in other words, in the light of the interests it was meant to protect.
>
> In my view this analysis is to be undertaken, and the purpose of the right or freedom in question is to be sought by reference to the character and the larger objects of the Charter itself, to the language chosen to articulate the specific right or freedom, to the historical origins of the concepts enshrined, and where applicable, to the meaning and purpose of the other specific rights and freedoms . . . .

To identify the underlying purpose of the Charter right in question, therefore, it is important to begin by understanding the cardinal values it embodies.

The presumption of innocence is a hallowed principle lying at the very heart of criminal law. Although protected expressly in s. 11(d) of the Charter, the presumption of innocence is referable and integral to the general protection of life, liberty and security of the person contained in s. 7 of the Charter (see Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486, per Lamer J.) The presumption of innocence protects the fundamental liberty and human dignity of any and every person accused by the State of criminal conduct. An individual charged with a criminal offence faces grave social and personal consequences, including potential loss of physical liberty, subjection to

b) La présomption d'innocence et l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte L'alinéa 11*d*) de la Charte enchâsse la présomption d'innocence dans la Constitution qui est la loi suprême du Canada. Par souci de commodité, je reproduis de nouveau cette disposition:

> 11. Tout inculpé a le droit:
>
> . . .
>
> d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

Il importe dans l'interprétation de l'al. 11*d*) de tenir compte de son objet. Comme l'a souligné cette Cour dans l'arrêt R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 R.C.S. 295, à la p. 344:

> Le sens d'un droit ou d'une liberté garantis par la Charte doit être vérifié au moyen d'une analyse de l'objet d'une telle garantie; en d'autres termes, ils doivent s'interpréter en fonction des intérêts qu'ils visent à protéger.
>
> À mon avis, il faut faire cette analyse et l'objet du droit ou de la liberté en question doit être déterminé en fonction de la nature et des objectifs plus larges de la Charte elle-même, des termes choisis pour énoncer ce droit ou cette liberté, des origines historiques des concepts enchâssés et, s'il y a lieu, en fonction du sens et de l'objet des autres libertés et droits particuliers . . .

Par conséquent, pour identifier l'objet qui sous-tend le droit garanti par la Charte dont il est question en l'espèce, il est important de commencer par comprendre les valeurs fondamentales inhérentes à ce droit.

La présomption d'innocence est un principe consacré qui se trouve au cœur même du droit criminel. Bien qu'elle soit expressément garantie par l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, la présomption d'innocence relève et fait partie intégrante de la garantie générale du droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de la personne, contenue à l'art. 7 de la Charte (voir Renvoi: Motor Vehicle Act de la C.-B., [1985] 2 R.C.S. 486, le juge Lamer). La présomption d'innocence a pour effet de sauvegarder la liberté fondamentale et la dignité humaine de toute personne que l'État accuse d'une conduite criminelle. Un individu accusé d'avoir commis une infraction criminelle s'expose à de lourdes conséquences social stigma and ostracism from the community, as well as other social, psychological and economic harms. In light of the gravity of these consequences, the presumption of innocence is crucial. It ensures that until the State proves an accused's guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, he or she is innocent. This is essential in a society committed to fairness and social justice. The presumption of innocence confirms our faith in humankind; it reflects our belief that individuals are decent and law-abiding members of the community until proven otherwise.

The presumption of innocence has enjoyed long-standing recognition at common law. In the leading case, Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1935] A.C. 462 (H.L.), Viscount Sankey wrote at pp. 481-82:

> Throughout the web of the English Criminal Law one golden thread is always to be seen, that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt subject to what I have already said as to the defence of insanity and subject also to any statutory exception. If, at the end of and on the whole of the case, there is a reasonable doubt, created by the evidence given by either the prosecution or the prisoner, as to whether the prisoner killed the deceased with a malicious intention, the prosecution has not made out the case and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. No matter what the charge or where the trial, the principle that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner is part of the common law of England and no attempt to whittle it down can be entertained.

Subsequent Canadian cases have cited the Woolmington principle with approval (see, for example, Manchuk v. The King, [1938] S.C.R. 341, at p. 349; R. v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299, at p. 1316).

Further evidence of the widespread acceptance of the principle of the presumption of innocence is its inclusion in the major international human rights documents. Article 11(I) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted December 10, 1948 by the General Assembly of the United Nations, provides:

sociales et personnelles, y compris la possibilité de privation de sa liberté physique, l'opprobre et l'ostracisme de la collectivité, ainsi que d'autres préjudices sociaux, psychologiques et économiques. Vu la gravité de ces conséquences, la présomption d'innocence revêt une importance capitale. Elle garantit qu'un accusé est innocent tant que l'État n'a pas prouvé sa culpabilité hors de tout doute raisonnable. Voilà qui est essentiel dans une société qui prône l'équité et la justice sociale. La présomption d'innocence confirme notre foi en l'humanité; elle est l'expression de notre croyance que, jusqu'à preuve contraire, les gens sont honnêtes et respectueux des lois.

La présomption d'innocence a depuis fort longtemps droit de cité en common law. Dans l'arrêt de principe Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1935] A.C. 462 (H.L.), le vicomte Sankey écrit aux pp. 481 et 482:

> [TRADUCTION] Dans toute la toile du droit criminel anglais se retrouve toujours un certain fil d'or, soit le devoir de la poursuite de prouver la culpabilité du prévenu, sous réserve de ce que j'ai déjà dit à propos de la défense excipant de l'aliénation mentale et sous réserve, également, de toute exception créée par la loi. Si, à l'issue des débats, la preuve produite, soit par la poursuite, soit par le prévenu, fait naître un doute raisonnable quant à savoir si ce dernier a tué la victime avec préméditation, la poursuite a échoué et le prévenu a droit à un acquittement. Peu importe la nature de l'accusation ou le lieu du procès, le principe obligeant la poursuite à prouver la culpabilité du prévenu est consacré dans la common law d'Angleterre et toute tentative d'y porter atteinte doit être repoussée.

Le principe posé dans l'arrêt Woolmington a par la suite été cité et approuvé dans des arrêts canadiens (voir, par exemple, Manchuk v. The King, [1938] R.C.S. 341, à la p. 349; R. c. Ville de Sault Ste-Marie, [1978] 2 R.C.S. 1299, à la p. 1316).

L'acceptation générale du principe de la présomption d'innocence ressort en outre de son inclusion dans les plus importants documents internationaux relatifs aux droits de la personne. Le paragraphe 11(I) de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, adoptée le 10 décembre 1948 par l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, dispose:

Article 11

I. Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.

In the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966, art. 14(2) states:

Article 14

2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall have the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.

Canada acceded to this Covenant, and the Optional Protocol which sets up machinery for implementing the Covenant, on May 19, 1976. Both came into effect on August 19, 1976.

In light of the above, the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty requires that s. 11(d) have, at a minimum, the following content. First, an individual must be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Second, it is the State which must bear the burden of proof. As Lamer J. stated in Dubois v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 350, at p. 357:

> Section 11(d) imposes upon the Crown the burden of proving the accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt as well as that of making out the case against the accused before he or she need respond, either by testifying or calling other evidence.

Third, criminal prosecutions must be carried out in accordance with lawful procedures and fairness. The latter part of s. 11(d), which requires the proof of guilt "according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal", underlines the importance of this procedural requirement.

(c) Authorities on Reverse Onus Provisions and the Presumption of Innocence

Having considered the general meaning of the presumption of innocence, it is now, I think, desirable to review briefly the authorities on reverse onus clauses in Canada and other jurisdictions.

Article 11

I. Toute personne accusée d'un acte délictueux est présumée innocente jusqu'à ce que sa culpabilité ait été légalement établie au cours d'un procès public où toutes les garanties nécessaires à sa défense lui auront été assurées.

Le paragraphe 14(2) du Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques, 1966, porte:

Article 14

2. Toute personne accusée d'une infraction pénale est présumée innocente jusqu'à ce que sa culpabilité ait été légalement établie.

Le Canada a adhéré à ce pacte ainsi qu'au Protocole facultatif prévoyant les modalités d'application du Pacte, le 19 mai 1976. Les deux sont entrés en vigueur le 19 août 1976.

Compte tenu de ce qui précède, le droit, prévu par l'al. 11*d*), d'être présumé innocent tant qu'on n'est pas déclaré coupable exige à tout le moins que, premièrement, la culpabilité soit établie hors de tout doute raisonnable et, deuxièmement, que ce soit à l'État qu'incombe la charge de la preuve. Comme l'affirme le juge Lamer dans l'arrêt Dubois c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 350, à la p. 357:

> L'alinéa 11*d*) impose à la poursuite le fardeau de démontrer la culpabilité de l'accusé hors de tout doute raisonnable ainsi que de présenter sa preuve contre l'accusé avant que celui-ci n'ait besoin de répondre, soit en témoignant soit en citant d'autres témoins.

Troisièmement, les poursuites criminelles doivent se dérouler d'une manière conforme aux procédures légales et à l'équité. L'importance de ces dernières ressort de la dernière partie de l'al. 11*d*) qui pose comme exigence que la culpabilité soit établie «conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable».

c) Jurisprudence relative aux dispositions portant inversion de la charge de la preuve et à la présomption d'innocence

Ayant étudié le sens général de la présomption d'innocence, je crois qu'il convient maintenant de passer brièvement en revue la jurisprudence canadienne et celle d'autres ressorts traitant des dispositions portant inversion de la charge de la preuve.

(i) The Canadian Bill of Rights Jurisprudence

Section 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights, which safeguards the presumption of innocence, provides:

> 2. Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of the Parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared, and in particular, no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to
>
> . . .
>
> (f) deprive a person charged with a criminal offence of the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal . . . .

The wording of this section closely parallels that of s. 11(d). For this reason, one of the Crown's primary contentions is that the Canadian Bill of Rights jurisprudence should be determinative of the outcome of the present appeal.

The leading case decided under s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and relied on by the Crown, is R. v. Appleby, supra. In that case, the accused had challenged s. 224A(1)(a) (now s. 237(1)(a)) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34, which imposes a burden upon an accused to prove that he or she, though occupying the driver's seat, did not enter the vehicle for the purpose of setting it in motion and did not, therefore, have care and control. This Court rejected the arguments of the accused that s. 2(f) had been violated; it relied on the Woolmington case which held that the presumption of innocence was subject to "statutory exceptions". As Ritchie J. stated in his judgment for the majority at pp. 315-16:

> It seems to me, therefore, that if Woolmington's case is to be accepted, the words "presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law . . ." as they appear in

(i) Jurisprudence relative à la Déclaration canadienne des droits

L'alinéa 2*f*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, qui protège la présomption d'innocence, est ainsi rédigé:

> 2. Toute loi du Canada, à moins qu'une loi du Parlement du Canada ne déclare expressément qu'elle s'appliquera nonobstant la Déclaration canadienne des droits, doit s'interpréter et s'appliquer de manière à ne pas supprimer, restreindre ou enfreindre l'un quelconque des droits ou des libertés reconnus et déclarés aux présentes, ni à en autoriser la suppression, la diminution ou la transgression, et en particulier, nulle loi du Canada ne doit s'interpréter ni s'appliquer comme
>
> . . .
>
> f) privant une personne accusée d'un acte criminel du droit à la présomption d'innocence jusqu'à ce que la preuve de sa culpabilité ait été établie en conformité de la loi, après une audition impartiale et publique de sa cause par un tribunal indépendant et non préjugé
>
> . . .

Le texte de cette disposition se rapproche de celui de l'al. 11*d*). Pour cette raison, le ministère public avance parmi ses arguments principaux que ce pourvoi doit être tranché en fonction de la jurisprudence relative à la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

L'arrêt de principe portant sur l'al. 2*f*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, invoqué par le ministère public, est l'arrêt R. c. Appleby, précité. Dans cette affaire, l'accusé avait contesté la validité de l'al. 224A(1)a) (l'actuel al. 237(1)a)) du Code criminel, S.R.C. 1970, chap. C-34, qui impose à l'accusé la charge de prouver que, même s'il occupait la place du conducteur d'un véhicule à moteur, il n'était pas entré dans ce véhicule afin de le mettre en marche et que, par conséquent, il n'en n'avait ni la garde ni le contrôle. Cette Cour avait rejeté les arguments de l'accusé portant qu'il y avait eu violation de l'al. 2*f*); elle s'était alors fondée sur l'arrêt Woolmington qui établit qu'on peut par voie de disposition législative déroger à la présomption d'innocence. Comme l'a dit le juge Ritchie dans les motifs qu'il a rédigés au nom de la majorité, aux pp. 315 et 316:

> Par conséquent, il me semble que si l'on doit accepter l'affaire Woolmington, les termes «du droit à la présomption d'innocence jusqu'à ce que la preuve de sa

s. 2(f) of the Bill of Rights, must be taken to envisage a law which recognizes the existence of statutory exceptions reversing the onus of proof with respect to one or more ingredients of an offence in cases where certain specific facts have been proved by the Crown in relation to such ingredients.

In a concurring opinion, Laskin J. (as he then was) put forward an alternative test. He chose not to follow Ritchie J.'s approach of reading a statutory exception limitation into the phrase "according to law" in s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights, and said at p. 317:

> I do not construe s. 2(f) as self-defeating because of the phrase "according to law" which appears therein. Hence, it would be offensive to s. 2(f) for a federal criminal enactment to place upon the accused the ultimate burden of establishing his innocence with respect to any element of the offence charged. The "right to be presumed innocent", of which s. 2(f) speaks, is, in popular terms, a way of expressing the fact that the Crown has the ultimate burden of establishing guilt; if there is any reasonable doubt at the conclusion of the case on any element of the offence charged, an accused person must be acquitted. In a more refined sense, the presumption of innocence gives an accused the initial benefit of a right of silence and the ultimate benefit (after the Crown's evidence is in and as well any evidence tendered on behalf of the accused) of any reasonable doubt: see Coffin v. U.S. (1895), 156 U.S. 432 at 452.

Nevertheless, Laskin J. went on to hold that the presumption of innocence is not violated by "any statutory or non-statutory burden upon an accused to adduce evidence to neutralize, or counter on a balance of probabilities, the effect of evidence presented by the Crown" (p. 318). The test, according to Laskin J., is whether the legislative provision calls for a finding of guilt even though there is a reasonable doubt as to the culpability of the accused. This would seem to prohibit the imposition of any legal burden on the accused; however, Laskin J. upheld a statutory provision which would appear to have done precisely that.

In a subsequent case, R. v. Shelley, supra, involving a reverse onus provision regarding culpabilité ait été établie en conformité de la loi . . . » à l'art. 2(f) de la Déclaration des droits, doivent être interprétés comme envisageant une loi qui reconnaît l'existence d'exceptions légales déplaçant le fardeau de la preuve en ce qui concerne un élément ou plus d'une infraction, lorsque certains faits précis ont été prouvés par la Couronne relativement à ces éléments.

Dans ses motifs concordants, le juge Laskin (alors juge puîné) a proposé un autre critère. En effet, à la différence du juge Ritchie, il a choisi de ne pas considérer comme une exception légale l'expression «en conformité de la loi» à l'al. 2*f*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et, à la p. 317, il a dit ce qui suit:

> Je ne considère pas que l'art. 2(f) s'annule lui-même à cause de l'expression «en conformité de la loi» qui y figure. Ainsi, une loi fédérale, en matière criminelle, qui imposerait à l'accusé l'obligation ultime de prouver son innocence relativement à tout élément de l'accusation portée contre lui, enfreindrait l'art. 2(f). Le «droit à la présomption d'innocence» dont parle l'art. 2(f) signifie, en termes populaires, que le fardeau ultime d'établir la culpabilité incombe au ministère public. Si, à la fin des plaidoiries, il existe un doute raisonnable relativement à tout élément de l'accusation, le prévenu doit être acquitté. Plus précisément, la présomption d'innocence donne au prévenu l'avantage initial du droit au silence et l'avantage ultime (après la présentation de la preuve du ministère public et de toute autre preuve pour le compte du prévenu) de tout doute raisonnable: voir Coffin v. U.S. (1895), 156 U.S. 432 à 452.

Néanmoins, le juge Laskin a ajouté qu'il n'y a pas de violation de la présomption d'innocence du fait «qu'un prévenu puisse avoir, en vertu d'une loi ou non, l'obligation de présenter une preuve pour neutraliser ou contrecarrer, par une balance des probabilités, l'effet de la preuve du ministère public» (à la p. 318). Selon le juge Laskin, le critère est de savoir si la disposition législative exige une déclaration de culpabilité même s'il subsiste un doute raisonnable quant à la culpabilité de l'accusé. Cela semblerait donc s'opposer à ce qu'une charge ultime soit imposée à l'accusé. Cependant, le juge Laskin a conclu à la validité d'une disposition législative qui paraît avoir eu précisément cet effet.

Par la suite, dans l'arrêt R. c. Shelley, précité, où il s'agissait d'une disposition qui inversait la unlawful importation, Laskin C.J. discussed further the views he had articulated in Appleby at p. 200:

> This Court held in R. v. Appleby that a reverse onus provision, which goes no farther than to require an accused to offer proof on a balance of probabilities, does not necessarily violate the presumption of innocence under s. 2(f). It would, of course, be clearly incompatible with s. 2(f) for a statute to put upon an accused a reverse onus of proving a fact in issue beyond a reasonable doubt. In so far as the onus goes no farther than to require an accused to prove as essential fact upon a balance of probabilities, the essential fact must be one which is rationally open to the accused to prove or disprove, as the case may be. If it is one which an accused cannot reasonably be expected to prove, being beyond his knowledge or beyond what he may reasonably be expected to know, it amounts to a requirement that is impossible to meet.

In addition, Laskin C.J. sowed the seeds for the development of a "rational connection test" for determining the validity of a reverse onus provision when he stated at p. 202:

> It is evident to me in this case that there is on the record no rational or necessary connection between the fact proved, i.e. possession of goods of foreign origin, and the conclusion of unlawful importation which the accused under s. 248(1) must, to avoid conviction, disprove.

Although there are important lessons to be learned from the Canadian Bill of Rights jurisprudence, it does not constitute binding authority in relation to the constitutional interpretation of the Charter. As this Court held in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, the Charter, as a constitutional document, is fundamentally different from the statutory Canadian Bill of Rights, which was interpreted as simply recognizing and declaring existing rights. (See also Singh v. Minister of Employment and Immigration, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 177 per Wilson J.; R. v. Therens, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 613, per Le Dain J.) In rejecting the Canadian Bill of Rights religion cases as determinative of the meaning of freedom of religion under the charge de la preuve en matière d'importation illégale, le juge en chef Laskin a développé davantage l'opinion qu'il avait exprimée dans l'arrêt Appleby (à la p. 200):

> Dans l'arrêt R. c. Appleby, cette Cour a décidé qu'une disposition qui prévoit le déplacement du fardeau de la preuve et qui n'exige rien de plus d'un accusé que la preuve selon la prépondérance des probabilités, ne viole pas nécessairement la présomption d'innocence de l'al. 2*f*). Bien sûr, il serait vraiment incompatible avec l'al. 2*f*) qu'une loi oblige un accusé à prouver hors de tout doute raisonnable un fait en litige. Tant que le fardeau n'exige pas d'un accusé plus que la preuve d'un fait essentiel selon la prépondérance des probabilités, il doit s'agir d'un fait essentiel que l'accusé est en mesure d'établir ou de réfuter selon le cas. S'il s'agit d'un fait que l'accusé ne peut raisonnablement être en mesure de prouver, soit qu'il l'ignore ou qu'il ne peut raisonnablement être en mesure de le connaître, cela équivaut à une exigence impossible à remplir.

De plus, le juge en chef Laskin a jeté les bases de l'élaboration d'un «critère du lien rationnel» applicable à la détermination de la validité d'une disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve. À la page 202, il tient les propos suivants:

> Il me paraît évident en l'espèce qu'il n'y a au dossier aucun lien rationnel ou nécessaire entre le fait prouvé, c.-à-d. la possession de marchandises d'origine étrangère, et la conclusion d'importation illégale que l'accusé doit réfuter en vertu du par. 248(1) pour ne pas être déclaré coupable.

Quoique la jurisprudence portant sur la Déclaration canadienne des droits soit très instructive, elle n'est nullement déterminante en ce qui concerne l'interprétation constitutionnelle de la Charte. Comme cette Cour l'a conclu dans l'arrêt R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., précité, la Charte, en tant que document constitutionnel, diffère fondamentalement du texte législatif qu'est la Déclaration canadienne des droits, lequel a été interprété comme ne faisant que reconnaître et déclarer l'existence de droits déjà existants. (Voir également Singh c. Ministre de l'Emploi et de l'Immigration, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 177, le juge Wilson; R. c. Therens, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 613, le juge Le Dain.) En affirmant dans l'arrêt Big M Drug Mart Ltd. que les affaires en matière religieuse décidées sous le régime de la Déclaration canadienne des droits ne sauraient être déterminantes quant au sens qui Charter in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., the Court had occasion to say at pp. 343-44:

> I agree with the submission of the respondent that the Charter is intended to set a standard upon which present as well as future legislation is to be tested. Therefore the meaning of the concept of freedom of conscience and religion is not to be determined solely by the degree to which that right was enjoyed by Canadians prior to the proclamation of the Charter. For this reason, Robertson and Rosetanni, supra, cannot be determinative of the meaning of "freedom of conscience and religion" under the Charter. We must look, rather, to the distinctive principles of constitutional interpretation appropriate to expounding the supreme law of Canada.

With this in mind, one cannot but question the appropriateness of reading into the phrase "according to law" in s. 11(d) of the Charter the statutory exceptions acknowledged in Woolmington and in Appleby. The Woolmington case was decided in the context of a legal system with no constitutionally entrenched human rights document. In Canada, we have tempered parliamentary supremacy by entrenching important rights and freedoms in the Constitution. Viscount Sankey's statutory exception proviso is clearly not applicable in this context and would subvert the very purpose of the entrenchment of the presumption of innocence in the Charter. I do not, therefore, feel constrained in this case by the interpretation of s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights presented in the majority judgment in Appleby. Section 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is not rendered constitutionally valid simply by virtue of the fact that it is a statutory provision.

(ii) Canadian Charter Jurisprudence

In addition to the present case, there have been a number of other provincial appellate level judgments addressing the meaning of the presumption of innocence contained in s. 11(d). This jurisprudence provides a comprehensive and persuasive source of insight into the questions raised in this appeal. In particular, six appellate level courts, in addition to the Ontario Court of Appeal, have held doit être donné à la liberté de religion garantie par la Charte, la Cour a dit, aux pp. 343 et 344:

> Je suis d'accord avec l'intimée que la Charte vise à établir une norme en fonction de laquelle les lois actuelles et futures seront appréciées. Donc, le sens du concept de la liberté de conscience et de religion ne doit pas être déterminé uniquement en fonction de la mesure dans laquelle les Canadiens jouissaient de ce droit avant la proclamation de la Charte. Pour cette raison, l'arrêt Robertson and Rosetanni, précité, ne peut être déterminant quant au sens qui doit être donné à la «liberté de conscience et de religion» garantie par la Charte. Il nous faut plutôt recourir aux principes distinctifs d'interprétation constitutionnelle applicables à la loi suprême du Canada.

Dans ce contexte, on ne peut que se demander s'il est approprié de voir dans l'expression «conformément à la loi» figurant à l'art. 11*d*) de la Charte les exceptions légales reconnues dans les arrêts Woolmington et Appleby. L'arrêt Woolmington est le produit d'un système juridique dans lequel les droits de la personne ne sont pas enchâssés dans un document constitutionnel. Au Canada, par contre, nous avons tempéré la primauté du Parlement par l'enchâssement de libertés et de droits importants dans la Constitution. La réserve des exceptions légales établie par le vicomte Sankey ne s'applique manifestement pas dans le contexte canadien, car elle irait à l'encontre de l'objet même de l'enchâssement de la présomption d'innocence dans la Charte. C'est pourquoi je ne me sens pas lié en l'espèce par l'interprétation qu'a donnée à l'al. 2*f*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits la Cour à la majorité dans l'arrêt Appleby. L'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants n'est pas constitutionnel du seul fait qu'il s'agit d'une disposition législative.

(ii) Jurisprudence relative à la Charte canadienne

Outre l'espèce, il y a eu plusieurs autres arrêts de cours d'appel provinciales qui ont traité du sens de la présomption d'innocence énoncée à l'al. 11*d*). Ils constituent une jurisprudence détaillée et persuasive qui nous éclaire sur les questions soulevées dans le présent pourvoi. En particulier, outre la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario, six autres cours d'appel ont conclu que l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violates the Charter: R. v. Carroll, supra; R. v. Cook, supra; R. v. O'Day, supra; R. v. Stanger, supra; R. v. Landry, supra; R. v. Stock (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 319 (B.C.C.A.)

Following the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in the present case, the Prince Edward Island Supreme Court (in banco) rendered its decision in R. v. Carroll, supra. Writing for the majority, MacDonald J. held at p. 105:

> Unless a provision falls within s. 1 of the Charter, there cannot be a requirement that an accused must prove an essential positive element of the Crown's case other than by raising a reasonable doubt. The presumption of innocence cannot be said to exist if by shifting the persuasive burden the court is required to convict even if a reasonable doubt may be said to exist.

In a concurring judgment, Mitchell J. commented at pp. 107-08:

> Section 11(d) gives an accused person the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty. It follows that if an accused is to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, he must not be convicted unless and until the Crown has proven each and all of the elements necessary to constitute the crime.

Applying these legal conclusions to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, the Court held that s. 11(d) had been violated. As Mitchell J. stated at p. 108:

> Under s. 8 an accused is not presumed innocent until proven guilty. He is only presumed innocent until found in possession. Once the Crown proves the accused had possession of the narcotic, he is presumed to be guilty of an intention to traffic until he proves otherwise.

The Nova Scotia Supreme Court, Appellate Division, also concluded that s. 8 is an unconstitutional violation of the s. 11(d) presumption of innocence in its decision in R. v. Cook, supra. After reviewing R. v. Oakes, supra, and R. v. Carroll, supra, Hart J.A. concluded at pp. 435-36:

va à l'encontre de la Charte: R. v. Carroll, précité; R. v. Cook, précité; R. v. O'Day, précité; R. v. Stanger, précité; R. v. Landry, précité; R. v. Stock (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 319 (C.A.C.-B.)

À la suite de l'arrêt rendu par la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario dans la présente affaire, la Cour suprême de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard (in banco) a rendu l'arrêt R. v. Carroll, précité. Le juge MacDonald, qui a rédigé les motifs de la majorité, conclut, à la p. 105:

> [TRADUCTION] À moins qu'une disposition ne relève de l'art. 1 de la Charte, on ne peut exiger d'un accusé qu'il établisse un élément positif essentiel de la preuve du ministère public, si ce n'est en faisant naître un doute raisonnable. On ne peut pas dire que la présomption d'innocence existe si, en raison du déplacement de la charge de persuasion, la cour est tenue de rendre un verdict de culpabilité même si on peut dire qu'il existe un doute raisonnable.

Dans des motifs concordants, le juge Mitchell explique, aux pp. 107 et 108:

> [TRADUCTION] L'alinéa 11*d*) reconnaît à tout accusé le droit d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable. Il s'ensuit que, si un accusé doit être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, aucun verdict de culpabilité ne doit être rendu, à moins que le ministère public n'ait établi chacun des éléments constitutifs du crime.

Appliquant ces conclusions de droit à l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants, la cour a conclu à la violation de l'al. 11*d*). Comme l'affirme le juge Mitchell, à la p. 108:

> [TRADUCTION] Sous le régime de l'art. 8, un accusé n'est pas présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable. La présomption d'innocence ne joue que jusqu'au moment où l'on conclut qu'il était en possession d'un stupéfiant. Dès lors que le ministère public établit que l'accusé avait le stupéfiant en sa possession, il est, jusqu'à preuve contraire, présumé avoir eu l'intention de se livrer au trafic.

Dans l'arrêt R. v. Cook, précité, la Division d'appel de la Cour suprême de la Nouvelle-Écosse a elle aussi jugé inconstitutionnel l'art. 8 du fait qu'il porte atteinte à la présomption d'innocence énoncée à l'al. 11*d*). Après avoir examiné les arrêts R. v. Oakes et R. v. Carroll, précités, le juge Hart conclut, aux pp. 435 et 436:

Section 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is a piece of legislation that attempts to relieve the Crown of its normal burden of proof by use of what is known as a reverse onus. Different types of reverse onus have been known to the law and proof of a case with the aid of a reverse onus can in my opinion, fall into the wording of s. 11(d) of the Charter as being proof "according to law" .... I know of no justification, however, for holding that it would be "according to law" to allow use of a reverse onus clause which permitted the Crown the assistance of a provision which relieved it from calling any probative evidence to establish one of the essential elements of an offence.

[TRADUCTION] L'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants tente, par le recours à ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler une inversion de la charge de la preuve, de dégager le ministère public de son fardeau normal en matière de preuve. On a connu en droit différents types de dispositions portant inversion de la charge de la preuve et, selon moi, une preuve établie à l'aide d'une telle disposition peut être visée par le texte de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, comme ayant été faite «conformément à la loi» ... Toutefois, à ce que je sache, rien ne justifie la conclusion qu'il serait «conforme à la loi» d'autoriser le recours à une disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve qui permet au ministère public de s'aider d'une disposition qui le dispense de produire une preuve probante quelconque visant à établir l'un des éléments essentiels d'une infraction.

Although concurring in result, Jones J.A. maintained that the reasonableness test should be applied with respect to s. 1 and not with respect to the words "according to law" in s. 11(d).

Le juge Jones, quoique souscrivant à la conclusion de ses collègues, a soutenu que le critère du caractère raisonnable doit s'appliquer à l'égard de l'article premier et non pas à l'égard de l'expression «conformément à la loi» que l'on trouve à l'al. 11*d*).

The test of reasonableness should be available in considering the secondary question under s. 1 of the Charter. It is important that the burden of proof should be on the Crown to show that a statute which violates s. 11(d) of the Charter is demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. (p. 439)

[TRADUCTION] On doit pouvoir recourir au critère du caractère raisonnable dans l'examen de la question secondaire soulevée par l'article premier de la Charte. Il importe que ce soit au ministère public qu'il incombe de prouver qu'une loi qui viole l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte est manifestement justifiée dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique. (p. 439)

In R. v. O'Day, supra, the New Brunswick Court of Appeal struck down s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act and registered its agreement with the three earlier provincial appellate level courts.

Dans l'arrêt R. v. O'Day, précité, la Cour d'appel du Nouveau-Brunswick a déclaré inconstitutionnel l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants et a exprimé son approbation des trois arrêts antérieurs rendus par des cours d'appel provinciales.

The Alberta Court of Appeal in R. v. Stanger, supra, also found s. 8 unconstitutional; however, the court was not unanimous in this conclusion. On the meaning of s. 11(d), Stevenson J.A., writing for the majority, paraphrased Martin J.A.'s comment in Oakes and stated at p. 351 that the presumption of innocence meant "first, that an accused is innocent until proven guilty in accordance with established procedure, and secondly, that guilt must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt". Mr. Justice Stevenson also cited MacDonald J.'s comment in Carroll that the presumption of innocence is maintained "as long as the prosecution has the final burden of establishing guilt, on any element of the offence charged, beyond a reasonable doubt" (supra, p. 98).

La Cour d'appel de l'Alberta, dans l'arrêt R. v. Stanger, précité, a également conclu à l'inconstitutionnalité de l'art. 8; cette conclusion n'a toutefois pas été unanime. En ce qui concerne le sens de l'al. 11*d*), le juge Stevenson, qui a rédigé les motifs de la majorité, a paraphrasé les observations faites par le juge Martin dans l'arrêt Oakes, disant à la p. 351 que la présomption d'innocence signifie [TRADUCTION] «en premier lieu, qu'un accusé est innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable conformément à la procédure établie et, en deuxième lieu, que la culpabilité doit être prouvée hors de tout doute raisonnable». De plus, le juge Stevenson a cité l'observation du juge MacDonald dans l'ar-

I should add that the majority, in Stanger, correctly rejected the applicability of the Privy Council decision in Ong Ah Chuan v. Public Prosecutor, [1981] A.C. 648. That case concerned constitutional provisions of Singapore which are significantly different from those of the Charter; in particular, they do not contain an explicit endorsement of the presumption of innocence. Moreover, the Privy Council did not read this principle into the general due process protections of the Constitution of Singapore.

In R. v. Landry, supra, the Quebec Court of Appeal invalidated s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act and extended its conclusions to s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. As Malouf J.A. stated at p. 561:

> Both the Bill of Rights and the Charter recognize the right of an accused to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law. I cannot accept that such a basic and fundamental principle can be set aside by such a reverse onus provision.

Finally, in a very brief judgment, R. v. Stock, supra, the British Columbia Court of Appeal concurred with the Court of Appeal decisions reviewed above, endorsing in particular the Ontario Court of Appeal decision in Oakes. An earlier British Columbia Court of Appeal opinion, Re Anson and The Queen (1983), 146 D.L.R. (3d) 661 (B.C.C.A.), had dismissed an appeal from a ruling which had upheld the constitutionality of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act; however, the basis for the denial of the appeal was procedural. The court did not assess the constitutionality of s. 8 in relation to the presumption of innocence.

There have also been a number of cases in which the meaning of s. 11(d) has been considered in rêt Carroll, précité, portant que la présomption d'innocence vaut [TRADUCTION] «tant que la poursuite a la charge ultime d'établir hors de tout doute raisonnable ... la culpabilité relativement à tout élément de l'infraction imputée» (précité, à la p. 98).

Je tiens à ajouter que c'est avec raison que, dans l'arrêt Stanger, la cour à la majorité a jugé inapplicable l'arrêt du Conseil privé Ong Ah Chuan v. Public Prosecutor, [1981] A.C. 648. Cette affaire concernait des dispositions de la Constitution de Singapour qui sont sensiblement différentes de celles de la Charte; en particulier, elles ne contiennent pas de reconnaissance explicite de la présomption d'innocence. De plus, le Conseil privé n'a pas estimé que ce principe était inhérent aux dispositions générales de la Constitution de Singapour garantissant le caractère équitable des procédures.

Dans l'arrêt R. v. Landry, précité, la Cour d'appel du Québec a déclaré invalide l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Les conclusions de la cour portaient en outre sur l'al. 2*f*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, le juge Malouf faisant remarquer, à la p. 561:

> [TRADUCTION] La Déclaration des droits et la Charte reconnaissent toutes deux à l'accusé le droit d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable conformément à la loi. Je ne puis admettre qu'un principe aussi élémentaire et fondamental puisse être écarté par une telle disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve.

Finalement, dans l'arrêt très bref R. v. Stock, précité, la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique s'est dite d'accord avec les arrêts de cours d'appel que nous venons d'examiner, approuvant en particulier l'arrêt Oakes de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario. Dans l'arrêt antérieur Re Anson and The Queen (1983), 146 D.L.R. (3d) 661, la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique avait rejeté l'appel d'une décision qui avait jugé constitutionnel l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Cependant, ce rejet était fondé sur des motifs de procédure. La cour n'a pas examiné la constitutionnalité de l'art. 8 en fonction de la présomption d'innocence.

Il y a eu en outre plusieurs arrêts dans lesquels le sens de l'al. 11*d*) a été étudié en fonction relation to other legislative provisions; see, for example, R. v. Holmes (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 250 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Whyte (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 277 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. granted; R. v. Lee's Poultry Ltd. (1985), 17 C.C.C. 539 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. T. (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 125 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Kowalczuk (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 25 (Man. C.A.); R. v. Schwartz (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 34 (Man. C.A.); Re Boyle and The Queen (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 713 (Ont. C.A.)

To summarize, the Canadian Charter jurisprudence on the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) and reverse onus provisions appears to have solidly accorded a high degree of protection to the presumption of innocence. Any infringements of this right are permissible only when, in the words of s. 1 of the Charter, they are reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

(iii) United States Jurisprudence

In the United States, protection of the presumption of innocence is not explicit. Rather, it has been read into the "due process" provisions of the American Bill of Rights contained in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States of America. An extensive review of the United States case law is provided in Martin J.A.'s judgment for the Ontario Court of Appeal. I will, therefore, merely highlight the major jurisprudential developments.

In Tot v. United States, 319 U.S. 463 (1943), Roberts J. outlined the following test at pp. 467-68:

> ... a statutory presumption cannot be sustained if there be no rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed, if the inference of the one from proof of the other is arbitrary because of lack of connnection between the two in common experience.

The comparative convenience of producing evidence was also acknowledged as a corollary test. The case involved a presumption to be drawn, d'autres dispositions législatives; voir, par exemple, R. v. Holmes (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 250 (C.A. Ont.); R. v. Whyte (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 277 (C.A.C.-B.), autorisation de pourvoi devant la Cour suprême du Canada accordée; R. v. Lee's Poultry Ltd. (1985), 17 C.C.C. 539 (C.A. Ont.); R. v. T. (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 125 (C.A.N.-É.); R. v. Kowalczuk (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 25 (C.A. Man.); R. v. Schwartz (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 34 (C.A. Man.); Re Boyle and The Queen (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 713 (C.A. Ont.)

En résumé, la jurisprudence canadienne relative à la présomption d'innocence énoncée à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte et aux dispositions portant inversion de la charge de la preuve paraît avoir accordé un très haut degré de protection à la présomption d'innocence. Il ne peut y avoir atteinte à ce droit que, comme le dit l'article premier de la Charte, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

(iii) Jurisprudence américaine

Aux États-Unis, la présomption d'innocence n'est pas expressément protégée. Au contraire, on a considéré qu'elle découle implicitement des dispositions de l'American Bill of Rights relatives au «caractère équitable des procédures», que contiennent les Cinquième et Quatorzième amendements de la Constitution of the United States of America. On trouve, dans les motifs que le juge Martin a rédigés pour la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario, un examen approfondi de la jurisprudence américaine, dont je ne soulignerai en conséquence que les points saillants.

Dans la décision Tot v. United States, 319 U.S. 463 (1943), le juge Roberts formule le critère suivant, aux pp. 467 et 468:

> [TRADUCTION] ... une présomption légale ne saurait jouer s'il n'existe pas de lien rationnel entre le fait prouvé et le fait ultime présumé, si la conclusion à l'existence de l'un à partir de la preuve de l'autre est arbitraire parce que l'expérience générale ne démontre pas de lien entre ces deux faits.

De plus, on a reconnu comme critère accessoire la facilité relative avec laquelle des éléments de preuve peuvent être produits. Dans cette affaire, il from the possession of firearms by a person convicted of a previous crime of violence, that the firearms were illegally obtained through interstate or foreign commerce. Of note was Roberts J.'s comment that even if a rational connection had been proved, the statutory presumption could not be sustained because of the prejudical reliance on a past conviction as part of the basic fact. The accused would be discredited in the eyes of the jury even before he attempted to disprove the presumed fact.

In Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6 (1969), Harlan J. articulated a more stringent test for invalidity at p. 36:

> ... a criminal statutory presumption must be regarded as "irrational" or "arbitrary", and hence unconstitutional, unless it can at least be said with substantial assurance that the presumed fact is more likely than not to flow from the proved fact on which it is made to depend.

Harlan J. also noted that since the statutory presumption was invalid under the above test, "we need not reach the question whether a criminal presumption which passes muster when so judged must also satisfy the criminal 'reasonable doubt' standard if proof of the crime charged or an essential element thereof depends upon its use" (footnote 64).

The United States Supreme Court did answer this question in County Court of Ulster County, New York v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140 (1979). It held that where a mandatory criminal presumption was imposed by statute, the State may not "rest its case entirely on a presumption unless the fact proved is sufficient to support the inference of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt" (p. 167). A mere rational connection is insufficient. This case illustrates the high degree of constitutional protection accorded the principle that an accused must be found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The s'agissait d'une présomption, fondée sur la possession d'armes à feu par une personne ayant déjà été déclarée coupable d'un crime violent, que ces armes à feu avaient été illégalement obtenues par le commerce international ou entre états. Soulignons ici que le juge Roberts a fait observer que, même si on avait prouvé l'existence d'un lien rationnel, la présomption légale ne pouvait s'appliquer parce que le fait établi sur lequel on se fondait comportait une déclaration de culpabilité antérieure, préjudiciable à l'accusé. Ce dernier serait donc discrédité aux yeux du jury avant même qu'il n'essaie de réfuter le fait présumé.

Dans la décision Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6 (1969), à la p. 36, le juge Harlan formule un critère plus sévère pour conclure à l'invalidité:

> [TRADUCTION] ... une présomption légale en matière criminelle doit être tenue pour «irrationnelle» ou «arbitraire» et, partant inconstitutionnelle, à moins qu'on ne puisse affirmer avec beaucoup de certitude que le fait présumé découle probablement du fait établi dont il est censé dépendre.

Le juge Harlan a fait remarquer en outre que, vu l'invalidité de la présomption légale selon le critère énoncé ci-dessus, [TRADUCTION] «nous n'avons pas à nous pencher sur la question de savoir si une présomption en matière criminelle qui répond à ce critère doit aussi satisfaire à la norme du «doute raisonnable», applicable dans les affaires criminelles, lorsque la preuve du crime imputé ou d'un élément essentiel de celui-ci dépend de l'application de cette présomption» (note 64).

La Cour suprême des États-Unis a répondu à cette question dans l'arrêt County Court of Ulster County, New York v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140 (1979). Elle a conclu que, lorsqu'une loi crée une présomption impérative en matière criminelle, l'État ne peut [TRADUCTION] «fonder sa preuve entièrement sur une présomption, à moins que le fait prouvé ne suffise pour justifier la conclusion que l'accusé est coupable hors de tout doute raisonnable» (à la p. 167). Un simple lien rationnel ne suffit pas. Cet arrêt démontre donc le haut degré de protection constitutionnelle accordée au principe selon lequel la culpabilité d'un accusé doit être établie hors de tout doute raisonnable. La raison d'être de ce principe a été bien exprimée par le juge Brennan rationale for this is well stated by Brennan J. in In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970), at pp. 363-64:

The requirement of proof beyond a reasonable doubt has this vital role in our criminal procedure for cogent reasons. The accused during a criminal prosecution has at stake interests of immense importance, both because of the possibility that he may lose his liberty upon conviction and because of the certainty that he would be stigmatized by the conviction. Accordingly, a society that values the good name and freedom of every individual should not condemn a man for commission of a crime when there is reasonable doubt about his guilt.

(iv) European Convention on Human Rights Jurisprudence

As mentioned above, international developments in human rights law have afforded protection to the principle of the presumption of innocence. The jurisprudence on The European Convention on Human Rights includes a consideration of the legitimacy of reverse onus provisions. Section 6(2) of The European Convention on Human Rights reads:

Article 6

2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.

The meaning of s. 6(2) was clarified in the Pfunders Case (Austria v. Italy) (1963), 6 Yearbook E.C.H.R. 740, at p. 782 and p. 784:

This text, according to which everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law, requires firstly that court judges in fulfilling their duties should not start with the conviction or assumption that the accused committed the act with which he is charged. In other words, the onus to prove guilt falls upon the Prosecution, and any doubt is to the benefit of the accused. Moreover, the judges must permit the latter to produce evidence in rebuttal. In their judgment they can find him guilty only on the basis of direct or indirect evidence sufficiently strong in the eyes of the law to establish his guilt.

dans l'arrêt In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970), aux pp. 363 et 364:

[TRADUCTION] Si l'exigence d'une preuve hors de tout doute raisonnable joue dans notre procédure criminelle un rôle si vital, il y a de très bonnes raisons à cela. Pour un accusé qui fait face à des poursuites criminelles, l'enjeu revêt une importance capitale, d'une part en raison de la privation de liberté que risque d'entraîner une déclaration de culpabilité et, d'autre part, à cause de l'opprobre qui en résulterait certainement. Par conséquent, une société qui attache de la valeur à la réputation et à la liberté de chaque citoyen doit se garder de condamner une personne pour la perpétration d'un crime lorsqu'il subsiste un doute raisonnable quant à sa culpabilité.

(iv) Jurisprudence portant sur la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme

Comme je l'ai déjà mentionné, le droit international dans le domaine des droits de la personne a évolué de manière à protéger le principe de la présomption d'innocence. La jurisprudence relative à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme traite notamment de la légitimité des dispositions portant inversion de la charge de la preuve. Le paragraphe 6(2) de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme est ainsi rédigé:

Article 6

2. Toute personne accusée d'une infraction est présumée innocente jusqu'à ce que sa culpabilité ait été légalement établie.

Le sens du par. 6(2) a été élucidé dans l'Affaire Pfunders (Autriche c. Italie) (1963), 6 Annuaire C.E.D.H. 741, aux pp. 783 et 785:

Ce texte, aux termes duquel toute personne accusée d'une infraction est présumée innocente jusqu'à ce que sa culpabilité ait été légalement établie, exige en premier lieu que les membres du tribunal, en remplissant leur fonction, ne partent pas de la conviction ou de la supposition que le prévenu a commis l'acte incriminé. Autrement dit, la charge de la preuve de la culpabilité incombe au Ministère public, et le doute profite à l'inculpé. De plus, les juges doivent permettre à ce dernier de leur fournir ses contre-preuves. Puis, au moment de prendre leur décision, ils ne doivent arriver à une condamnation que sur la base de preuves directes ou indirectes mais suffisamment fortes, aux yeux de la loi, pour établir la culpabilité de l'intéressé.

Although the Commission has endorsed the general importance of the requirement that the prosecution prove the accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, it has acknowledged the permissibility of certain exceptions to this principle. For example, the Commission upheld a statutory reverse onus provision in which a man living with or habitually in the company of a prostitute is presumed to be knowingly living on the earnings of prostitution unless he proves otherwise (X against the United Kingdom, Appl'n. No. 5124/71, Collection of Decisions, E.C.H.R., 135). The Commission noted the importance of examining the substance and effect of a statutory reverse onus. It concluded, however, at p. 135:

> The statutory presumption in the present case is restrictively worded. . . . The presumption is neither irrebuttable nor unreasonable. To oblige the prosecution to obtain direct evidence of "living on immoral earnings" would in most cases make its task impossible.

(See discussion in Francis Jacobs, The European Convention on Human Rights (Oxford: 1975), pp. 113-14.)

(d) Conclusion Regarding s. 11(d) of the Charter and s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act

This review of the authorities lays the groundwork for formulating some general conclusions regarding reverse onus provisions and the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d). We can then proceed to apply these principles to the particulars of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act.

In general one must, I think, conclude that a provision which requires an accused to disprove on a balance of probabilities the existence of a presumed fact, which is an important element of the offence in question, violates the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d). If an accused bears the burden of disproving on a balance of probabilities an essential element of an offence, it would be possible for a conviction to occur despite the existence of a reasonable doubt. This would arise if the accused adduced sufficient evidence to raise a

Bien que la Commission ait reconnu l'importance générale de l'exigence que la poursuite prouve la culpabilité de l'accusé hors de tout doute raisonnable, elle a reconnu aussi le caractère acceptable de certaines exceptions à ce principe. Par exemple, la Commission a conclu à la validité d'une disposition légale portant inversion de la charge de la preuve, disposition selon laquelle l'homme qui cohabite avec une prostituée ou qui est régulièrement en sa compagnie est présumé vivre sciemment de revenus tirés de la prostitution, à moins qu'il ne prouve le contraire (X contre le Royaume-Uni, demande n° 5124/71, Recueil des décisions, C.E.D.H. 135). La Commission a souligné l'importance d'examiner le contenu et l'effet d'une disposition législative portant inversion de la charge de la preuve. Elle conclut toutefois, à la p. 135:

> [TRADUCTION] La présomption légale en l'espèce est formulée de manière restrictive ... Cette présomption n'est ni irréfutable ni déraisonnable. Obliger la poursuite à obtenir une preuve directe que quelqu'un «vit de revenus immoraux» rendrait, dans la plupart des cas, sa tâche impossible.

(Voir l'analyse de Francis Jacobs, The European Convention on Human Rights (Oxford: 1975), aux pp. 113 et 114.)

d) Conclusion relative à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte et à l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants À partir de cet examen de la jurisprudence, nous sommes en mesure de formuler certaines conclusions générales sur les dispositions portant inversion de la charge de la preuve et sur la présomption d'innocence énoncée à l'al. 11*d*). Nous pourrons ensuite appliquer ces principes aux dispositions de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants.

Je crois que, d'une manière générale, on doit conclure qu'une disposition qui oblige un accusé à démontrer selon la prépondérance des probabilités l'inexistence d'un fait présumé qui constitue un élément important de l'infraction en question, porte atteinte à la présomption d'innocence de l'al. 11*d*). S'il incombe à l'accusé de réfuter selon la prépondérance des probabilités un élément essentiel d'une infraction, une déclaration de culpabilité pourrait être prononcée en dépit de l'existence d'un doute raisonnable. Cela se présenterait si l'accusé reasonable doubt as to his or her innocence but did not convince the jury on a balance of probabilities that the presumed fact was untrue.

The fact that the standard is only the civil one does not render a reverse onus clause constitutional. As Sir Rupert Cross commented in the Rede Lectures, "The Golden Thread of the English Criminal Law: The Burden of Proof", delivered in 1976 at the University of Toronto, at pp. 11-13:

> It is sometimes said that exceptions to the Woolmington rule are acceptable because, whenever the burden of proof on any issue in a criminal case is borne by the accused, he only has to satisfy the jury on the balance of probabilities, whereas on issues on which the Crown bears the burden of proof the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt .... The fact that the standard is lower when the accused bears the burden of proof than it is when the burden of proof is borne by the prosecution is no answer to my objection to the existence of exceptions to the Woolmington rule as it does not alter the fact that a jury or bench of magistrates may have to convict the accused although they are far from sure of his guilt.

As we have seen, the potential for a rational connection between the basic fact and the presumed fact to justify a reverse onus provision has been elaborated in some of the cases discussed above and is now known as the "rational connection test". In the context of s. 11(d), however, the following question arises: if we apply the rational connection test to the consideration of whether s. 11(d) has been violated, are we adequately protecting the constitutional principle of the presumption of innocence? As Professors MacKay and Cromwell point out in their article "Oakes: A Bold Initiative Impeded by Old Ghosts" (1983), 32 C.R. (3d) 221, at p. 233:

> The rational connection test approves a provision that forces the trier to infer a fact that may be simply rationally connected to the proved fact. Why does it follow that such a provision does not offend the constitu-produisait une preuve suffisante pour soulever un doute raisonnable quant à sa culpabilité, mais ne parvenait pas à convaincre le jury selon la prépondérance des probabilités que le fait présumé est inexact.

Ce n'est pas parce que la norme applicable est la norme de preuve en matière civile qu'une disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve est constitutionnelle. Comme l'a expliqué sir Rupert Cross dans «The Golden Thread of the English Criminal Law: The Burden of Proof», conférence donnée en 1976 à l'Université de Toronto dans le cadre des Rede Lectures (aux pp. 11 à 13):

> [TRADUCTION] D'aucuns prétendent que des exceptions à la règle posée dans l'arrêt Woolmington sont acceptables parce que, lorsque la charge de la preuve relativement à telle question dans une affaire criminelle incombe à l'accusé, celui-ci n'a à convaincre le jury que selon la prépondérance des probabilités, tandis que dans le cas des questions à l'égard desquelles la charge de la preuve incombe au ministère public, le jury doit être convaincu hors de tout doute raisonnable ... Bien que la norme de preuve soit moins sévère dans le cas de l'accusé qu'elle ne l'est dans le cas de la poursuite, je m'oppose tout de même à toute exception à la règle établie dans l'arrêt Woolmington parce que cela ne change rien au fait qu'un jury ou une formation de magistrats peut avoir à déclarer l'accusé coupable même s'ils ne sont pas du tout certains de sa culpabilité.

Rappelons ici que certains des arrêts étudiés précédemment ont établi qu'une disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve pourrait se justifier par l'existence d'un lien rationnel entre le fait établi et le fait présumé. Il s'agit de ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler maintenant le «critère du lien rationnel». Dans le contexte de l'al. 11*d*), toutefois, la question suivante se pose: si nous appliquons le critère du lien rationnel à la question de savoir s'il y a eu violation de l'al. 11*d*), accordons-nous alors une protection adéquate au principe constitutionnel de la présomption d'innocence? Comme le soulignent les professeurs MacKay et Cromwell dans leur article intitulé «Oakes: A Bold Initiative Impeded by Old Ghosts» (1983), 32 C.R. (3d) 221, à la p. 233:

> [TRADUCTION] Le critère du lien rationnel a pour effet de sanctionner une disposition qui oblige le juge à conclure à l'existence d'un fait qui peut n'avoir qu'un lien rationnel avec le fait établi. Pourquoi s'ensuit-il tional right to be proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt?

A basic fact may rationally tend to prove a presumed fact, but not prove its existence beyond a reasonable doubt. An accused person could thereby be convicted despite the presence of a reasonable doubt. This would violate the presumption of innocence.

I should add that this questioning of the constitutionality of the "rational connection test" as a guide to interpreting s. 11(d) does not minimize its importance. The appropriate stage for invoking the rational connection test, however, is under s. 1 of the Charter. This consideration did not arise under the Canadian Bill of Rights because of the absence of an equivalent to s. 1. At the Court of Appeal level in the present case, Martin J.A. sought to combine the analysis of s. 11(d) and s. 1 to overcome the limitations of the Canadian Bill of Rights jurisprudence. To my mind, it is highly desirable to keep s. 1 and s. 11(d) analytically distinct. Separating the analysis into two components is consistent with the approach this Court has taken to the Charter to date (see R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra; Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; Law Society of Upper Canada v. Skapinker, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 357).

To return to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, I am in no doubt whatsoever that it violates s. 11(d) of the Charter by requiring the accused to prove on a balance of probabilities that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking. Mr. Oakes is compelled by s. 8 to prove he is not guilty of the offence of trafficking. He is thus denied his right to be presumed innocent and subjected to the potential penalty of life imprisonment unless he can rebut the presumption. This is radically and fundamentally inconsistent with the societal values of human dignity and liberty which qu'une telle disposition ne porte pas atteinte au droit constitutionnel de voir sa culpabilité prouvée hors de tout doute raisonnable?

Un fait établi peut rationnellement tendre à prouver un fait présumé, sans pour autant en prouver l'existence hors de tout doute raisonnable. Un accusé pourrait donc être reconnu coupable malgré l'existence d'un doute raisonnable, ce qui irait à l'encontre de la présomption d'innocence.

Je m'empresse d'ajouter que cette mise en doute de la constitutionnalité du «critère du lien rationnel» comme guide d'interprétation de l'al. 11*d*) ne diminue en rien l'importance de ce critère. C'est toutefois dans le contexte de l'article premier de la Charte qu'il convient d'invoquer le critère du lien rationnel. Or, cette question ne s'est pas présentée sous le régime de la Déclaration canadienne des droits parce que celle-ci ne contient pas de disposition équivalant à l'article premier. En Cour d'appel en l'espèce, le juge Martin a cherché à combiner l'analyse de l'al. 11*d*) et celle de l'article premier en vue de surmonter les limites de la jurisprudence portant sur la Déclaration canadienne des droits. À mon sens, il est très souhaitable qu'à des fins d'analyse l'article premier et l'al. 11*d*) restent distincts. Ce partage de l'analyse en deux composantes est compatible avec la façon dont cette Cour a abordé la Charte jusqu'à présent (voir R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., précité; Hunter c. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 R.C.S. 145; Law Society of Upper Canada c. Skapinker, [1984] 1 R.C.S. 357).

Revenons à l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Je n'ai pas le moindre doute que cet article viole l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte en exigeant de l'accusé qu'il établisse selon la prépondérance des probabilités qu'il n'était pas en possession du stupéfiant pour en faire le trafic. L'article 8 oblige M. Oakes à prouver qu'il n'est pas coupable de l'infraction de trafic. Il se voit ainsi refuser le droit d'être présumé innocent et court en même temps le risque de se voir infliger une peine d'emprisonnement à perpétuité, à moins qu'il ne réussisse à réfuter la présomption. Cela est radicalement et fondamentalement incompatible avec les valeurs sociales de la liberté et de la dignité humaine, que nous faisons nôtres, et va directement à l'encontre de la we espouse, and is directly contrary to the presumption of innocence enshrined in s. 11(d). Let us turn now to s. 1 of the Charter.

V

Is s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act a Reasonable and Demonstrably Justified Limit Pursuant to s. 1 of the Charter?

The Crown submits that even if s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violates s. 11(d) of the Charter, it can still be upheld as a reasonable limit under s. 1 which, as has been mentioned, provides:

> 1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

The question whether the limit is "prescribed by law" is not contentious in the present case since s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is a duly enacted legislative provision. It is, however, necessary to determine if the limit on Mr. Oakes' right, as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter, is "reasonable" and "demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society" for the purpose of s. 1 of the Charter, and thereby saved from inconsistency with the Constitution.

It is important to observe at the outset that s. 1 has two functions: first, it constitutionally guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in the provisions which follow; and, second, it states explicitly the exclusive justificatory criteria (outside of s. 33 of the Constitution Act, 1982) against which limitations on those rights and freedoms must be measured. Accordingly, any s. 1 inquiry must be premised on an understanding that the impugned limit violates constitutional rights and freedoms—rights and freedoms which are part of the supreme law of Canada. As Wilson J. stated in Singh v. Minister of Employment and Immigration, supra, at p. 218: " . . . it is important to remember that the courts are conducting this inquiry in light of a présomption d'innocence enchâssée à l'al. 11*d*). Passons maintenant à l'article premier de la Charte.

V

L'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants constitue-t-il une limite raisonnable dont la justification puisse se démontrer, au sens de l'article premier de la Charte?

Le ministère public fait valoir que même à supposer que l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants contrevienne à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, il peut tout de même être déclaré valide pour le motif qu'il constitue une restriction raisonnable au sens de l'article premier qui, rappelons-le, dispose:

> 1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

La question de savoir s'il s'agit d'une restriction apportée «par une règle de droit» ne se pose pas en l'espèce puisque l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants est une disposition législative dûment adoptée. Il est toutefois nécessaire de déterminer si, dans le cas de M. Oakes, la restriction au droit garanti par l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte est «raisonnable» et si sa justification peut «se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique» au sens de l'art. 1 de la Charte, de manière à être compatible avec la Constitution.

Il importe de souligner dès l'abord que l'article premier remplit deux fonctions: premièrement, il enchâsse dans la Constitution les droits et libertés énoncés dans les dispositions qui le suivent; et, deuxièmement, il établit explicitement les seuls critères justificatifs (à part ceux de l'art. 33 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982) auxquels doivent satisfaire les restrictions apportées à ces droits et libertés. En conséquence, tout examen fondé sur l'article premier doit partir de l'idée que la restriction attaquée porte atteinte à des droits et libertés garantis par la Constitution — des droits et des libertés qui font partie de la loi suprême du Canada. Comme le fait remarquer le juge Wilson dans l'arrêt Singh c. Ministre de l'Emploi et de commitment to uphold the rights and freedoms set out in the other sections of the Charter."

A second contextual element of interpretation of s. 1 is provided by the words "free and democratic society". Inclusion of these words as the final standard of justification for limits on rights and freedoms refers the Court to the very purpose for which the Charter was originally entrenched in the Constitution: Canadian society is to be free and democratic. The Court must be guided by the values and principles essential to a free and democratic society which I believe embody, to name but a few, respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, commitment to social justice and equality, accommodation of a wide variety of beliefs, respect for cultural and group identity, and faith in social and political institutions which enhance the participation of individuals and groups in society. The underlying values and principles of a free and democratic society are the genesis of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter and the ultimate standard against which a limit on a right or freedom must be shown, despite its effect, to be reasonable and demonstrably justified.

The rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter are not, however, absolute. It may become necessary to limit rights and freedoms in circumstances where their exercise would be inimical to the realization of collective goals of fundamental importance. For this reason, s. 1 provides criteria of justification for limits on the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter. These criteria impose a stringent standard of justification, especially when understood in terms of the two contextual considerations discussed above, namely, the violation of a constitutionally guaranteed right or freedom and the fundamental principles of a free and democratic society.

The onus of proving that a limit on a right or freedom guaranteed by the Charter is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratl'Immigration, précité, à la p. 218: « ... il est important de se rappeler que les tribunaux effectuent cette enquête tout en veillant au respect des droits et libertés énoncés dans les autres articles de la Charte.»

Un second élément contextuel d'interprétation de l'article premier est fourni par l'expression «société libre et démocratique». L'inclusion de ces mots à titre de norme finale de justification de la restriction des droits et libertés rappelle aux tribunaux l'objet même de l'enchâssement de la Charte dans la Constitution: la société canadienne doit être libre et démocratique. Les tribunaux doivent être guidés par des valeurs et des principes essentiels à une société libre et démocratique, lesquels comprennent, selon moi, le respect de la dignité inhérente de l'être humain, la promotion de la justice et de l'égalité sociales, l'acceptation d'une grande diversité de croyances, le respect de chaque culture et de chaque groupe et la foi dans les institutions sociales et politiques qui favorisent la participation des particuliers et des groupes dans la société. Les valeurs et les principes sous-jacents d'une société libre et démocratique sont à l'origine des droits et libertés garantis par la Charte et constituent la norme fondamentale en fonction de laquelle on doit établir qu'une restriction d'un droit ou d'une liberté constitue, malgré son effet, une limite raisonnable dont la justification peut se démontrer.

Toutefois, les droits et libertés garantis par la Charte ne sont pas absolus. Il peut être nécessaire de les restreindre lorsque leur exercice empêcherait d'atteindre des objectifs sociaux fondamentalement importants. C'est pourquoi l'article premier prévoit des critères de justification des limites imposées aux droits et libertés garantis par la Charte. Ces critères établissent une norme sévère en matière de justification, surtout lorsqu'on les rapproche des deux facteurs contextuels examinés précédemment, savoir la violation d'un droit ou d'une liberté garantis par la Constitution et les principes fondamentaux d'une société libre et démocratique.

La charge de prouver qu'une restriction apportée à un droit ou à une liberté garantis par la Charte est raisonnable et que sa justification peut ic society rests upon the party seeking to uphold the limitation. It is clear from the text of s. 1 that limits on the rights and freedoms enumerated in the Charter are exceptions to their general guarantee. The presumption is that the rights and freedoms are guaranteed unless the party invoking s. 1 can bring itself within the exceptional criteria which justify their being limited. This is further substantiated by the use of the word "demonstrably" which clearly indicates that the onus of justification is on the party seeking to limit: Hunter v. Southam Inc., supra.

The standard of proof under s. 1 is the civil standard, namely, proof by a preponderance of probability. The alternative criminal standard, proof beyond a reasonable doubt, would, in my view, be unduly onerous on the party seeking to limit. Concepts such as "reasonableness", "justifiability" and "free and democratic society" are simply not amenable to such a standard. Nevertheless, the preponderance of probability test must be applied rigorously. Indeed, the phrase "demonstrably justified" in s. 1 of the Charter supports this conclusion. Within the broad category of the civil standard, there exist different degrees of probability depending on the nature of the case: see Sopinka and Lederman, The Law of Evidence in Civil Cases (Toronto: 1974), at p. 385. As Lord Denning explained in Bater v. Bater, [1950] 2 All E.R. 458 (C.A.), at p. 459:

> The case may be proved by a preponderance of probability, but there may be degrees of probability within that standard. The degree depends on the subject-matter. A civil court, when considering a charge of fraud, will naturally require a higher degree of probability than that which it would require if considering whether negligence were established. It does not adopt so high a degree as a criminal court, even when it is considering a charge of a criminal nature, but still it does require a degree of probability which is commensurate with the occasion.

se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique incombe à la partie qui demande le maintien de cette restriction. Il ressort nettement du texte de l'article premier que les restrictions apportées aux droits et libertés énoncés dans la Charte constituent des exceptions à la garantie générale dont ceux-ci font l'objet. On présume que les droits et libertés sont garantis, à moins que la partie qui invoque l'article premier ne puisse satisfaire aux critères exceptionnels qui justifient leur restriction. C'est ce que confirme l'emploi de l'expression «puisse se démontrer» qui indique clairement qu'il appartient à la partie qui cherche à apporter la restriction de démontrer qu'elle est justifiée: Hunter c. Southam Inc., précité.

La norme de preuve aux fins de l'article premier est celle qui s'applique en matière civile, savoir la preuve selon la prépondérance des probabilités. L'autre possibilité, la preuve hors de tout doute raisonnable qui s'applique en matière criminelle, imposerait selon moi une charge trop lourde à la partie qui cherche à apporter la restriction. Des concepts comme «le caractère raisonnable», «le caractère justifiable» et «une société libre et démocratique» ne se prêtent tout simplement pas à l'application d'une telle norme. Néanmoins, le critère de la prépondérance des probabilités doit être appliqué rigoureusement. En fait, l'expression «dont la justification puisse se démontrer», que l'on trouve à l'article premier de la Charte, étaye cette conclusion. La norme générale applicable en matière civile comporte différents degrés de probabilité qui varient en fonction de la nature de chaque espèce: voir Sopinka et Lederman, The Law of Evidence in Civil Cases (Toronto: 1974), à la p. 385. Comme l'explique lord Denning dans Bater v. Bater, [1950] 2 All E.R. 458 (C.A.), à la p. 459:

> [TRADUCTION] La preuve peut être faite selon la prépondérance des probabilités, mais cette norme peut comporter des degrés de probabilité. Ce degré dépend de l'objet du litige. Une cour civile, saisie d'une accusation de fraude, exigera naturellement un degré de probabilité plus élevé que celui qu'elle exigerait en examinant si la faute a été établie. Elle n'adopte pas une norme aussi sévère que le ferait une cour criminelle, même en examinant une accusation de nature criminelle, mais il reste qu'elle exige un degré de probabilité proportionné aux circonstances.

This passage was cited with approval in Hanes v. Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Co., [1963] S.C.R. 154, at p. 161. A similar approach was put forward by Cartwright J. in Smith v. Smith, [1952] 2 S.C.R. 312, at pp. 331-32:

> I wish, however, to emphasize that in every civil action before the tribunal can safely find the affirmative of an issue of fact required to be proved it must be reasonably satisfied, and that whether or not it will be so satisfied must depend on the totality of the circumstances on which its judgment is formed including the gravity of the consequences . . . .

Having regard to the fact that s. 1 is being invoked for the purpose of justifying a violation of the constitutional rights and freedoms the Charter was designed to protect, a very high degree of probability will be, in the words of Lord Denning, "commensurate with the occasion". Where evidence is required in order to prove the constituent elements of a s. 1 inquiry, and this will generally be the case, it should be cogent and persuasive and make clear to the Court the consequences of imposing or not imposing the limit. See: Law Society of Upper Canada v. Skapinker, supra, at p. 384; Singh v. Minister of Employment and Immigration, supra, at p. 217. A court will also need to know what alternative measures for implementing the objective were available to the legislators when they made their decisions. I should add, however, that there may be cases where certain elements of the s. 1 analysis are obvious or self-evident.

To establish that a limit is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, two central criteria must be satisfied. First, the objective, which the measures responsible for a limit on a Charter right or freedom are designed to serve, must be "of sufficient importance to warrant overriding a constitutionally protected right or freedom": R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at p. 352. The standard must be high in order to ensure that objectives which are trivial or discordant with the principles integral to a free and democratic society do not gain s. 1 protection. It is necessary, at a minimum, that an objective relate to concerns which are pressing and substan-

Ce passage a été cité et approuvé dans l'arrêt Hanes v. Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Co., [1963] R.C.S. 154, à la p. 161. Un point de vue semblable a été exprimé par le juge Cartwright dans l'arrêt Smith v. Smith, [1952] 2 R.C.S. 312, aux pp. 331 et 332:

> [TRADUCTION] Je tiens toutefois à souligner que, dans toute action civile, pour pouvoir conclure sans risque à l'exactitude d'une question de fait qui doit être établie, le tribunal doit être convaincu d'une manière raisonnable qui dépendra de l'ensemble des circonstances à partir desquelles il formera son jugement, y compris la gravité des conséquences . . .

Compte tenu du fait que l'article premier est invoqué afin de justifier une violation des droits et libertés constitutionnels que la Charte vise à protéger, un degré très élevé de probabilité sera, pour reprendre l'expression de lord Denning, «proportionné aux circonstances». Lorsqu'une preuve est nécessaire pour établir les éléments constitutifs d'une analyse en vertu de l'article premier, ce qui est généralement le cas, elle doit être forte et persuasive et faire ressortir nettement à la cour les conséquences d'une décision d'imposer ou de ne pas imposer la restriction. Voir: Law Society of Upper Canada c. Skapinker, précité, à la p. 384; Singh c. Ministre de l'Emploi et de l'Immigration, précité, à la p. 217. La cour devra aussi connaître les autres moyens dont disposait le législateur, au moment de prendre sa décision, pour réaliser l'objectif en question. Je dois cependant ajouter qu'il peut arriver que certains éléments constitutifs d'une analyse en vertu de l'article premier soient manifestes ou évidents en soi.

Pour établir qu'une restriction est raisonnable et que sa justification peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique, il faut satisfaire à deux critères fondamentaux. En premier lieu, l'objectif que visent à servir les mesures qui apportent une restriction à un droit ou à une liberté garantis par la Charte, doit être «suffisamment important pour justifier la suppression d'un droit ou d'une liberté garantis par la Constitution»: R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., précité, à la p. 352. La norme doit être sévère afin que les objectifs peu importants ou contraires aux principes qui constituent l'essence même d'une société libre et démocratique ne bénéficient pas de la protection de tial in a free and democratic society before it can be characterized as sufficiently important.

Second, once a sufficiently significant objective is recognized, then the party invoking s. 1 must show that the means chosen are reasonable and demonstrably justified. This involves "a form of proportionality test": R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at p. 352. Although the nature of the proportionality test will vary depending on the circumstances, in each case courts will be required to balance the interests of society with those of individuals and groups. There are, in my view, three important components of a proportionality test. First, the measures adopted must be carefully designed to achieve the objective in question. They must not be arbitrary, unfair or based on irrational considerations. In short, they must be rationally connected to the objective. Second, the means, even if rationally connected to the objective in this first sense, should impair "as little as possible" the right or freedom in question: R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at p. 352. Third, there must be a proportionality between the effects of the measures which are responsible for limiting the Charter right or freedom, and the objective which has been identified as of "sufficient importance".

With respect to the third component, it is clear that the general effect of any measure impugned under s. 1 will be the infringement of a right or freedom guaranteed by the Charter; this is the reason why resort to s. 1 is necessary. The inquiry into effects must, however, go further. A wide range of rights and freedoms are guaranteed by the Charter, and an almost infinite number of factual situations may arise in respect of these. Some limits on rights and freedoms protected by the Charter will be more serious than others in terms of the nature of the right or freedom violated, the extent of the violation, and the degree to which the measures which impose the limit trench upon the integral principles of a free and demol'article premier. Il faut à tout le moins qu'un objectif se rapporte à des préoccupations urgentes et réelles dans une société libre et démocratique, pour qu'on puisse le qualifier de suffisamment important.

En deuxième lieu, dès qu'il est reconnu qu'un objectif est suffisamment important, la partie qui invoque l'article premier doit alors démontrer que les moyens choisis sont raisonnables et que leur justification peut se démontrer. Cela nécessite l'application d'«une sorte de critère de proportionnalité»: R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., précité, à la p. 352. Même si la nature du critère de proportionnalité pourra varier selon les circonstances, les tribunaux devront, dans chaque cas, soupeser les intérêts de la société et ceux de particuliers et de groupes. À mon avis, un critère de proportionnalité comporte trois éléments importants. Premièrement, les mesures adoptées doivent être soigneusement conçues pour atteindre l'objectif en question. Elles ne doivent être ni arbitraires, ni inéquitables, ni fondées sur des considérations irrationnelles. Bref, elles doivent avoir un lien rationnel avec l'objectif en question. Deuxièmement, même à supposer qu'il y ait un tel lien rationnel, le moyen choisi doit être de nature à porter «le moins possible» atteinte au droit ou à la liberté en question: R. c. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., précité, à la p. 352. Troisièmement, il doit y avoir proportionnalité entre les effets des mesures restreignant un droit ou une liberté garantis par la Charte et l'objectif reconnu comme «suffisamment important».

Quant au troisième élément, il est évident que toute mesure attaquée en vertu de l'article premier aura pour effet général de porter atteinte à un droit ou à une liberté garantis par la Charte; d'où la nécessité du recours à l'article premier. L'analyse des effets ne doit toutefois pas s'arrêter là. La Charte garantit toute une gamme de droits et de libertés à l'égard desquels un nombre presque infini de situations peuvent se présenter. La gravité des restrictions apportées aux droits et libertés garantis par la Charte variera en fonction de la nature du droit ou de la liberté faisant l'objet d'une atteinte, de l'ampleur de l'atteinte et du degré d'incompatibilité des mesures restrictives avec les principes inhérents à une société libre et cratic society. Even if an objective is of sufficient importance, and the first two elements of the proportionality test are satisfied, it is still possible that, because of the severity of the deleterious effects of a measure on individuals or groups, the measure will not be justified by the purposes it is intended to serve. The more severe the deleterious effects of a measure, the more important the objective must be if the measure is to be reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Having outlined the general principles of a s. 1 inquiry, we must apply them to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. Is the reverse onus provision in s. 8 a reasonable limit on the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society?

The starting point for formulating a response to this question is, as stated above, the nature of Parliament's interest or objective which accounts for the passage of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. According to the Crown, s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is aimed at curbing drug trafficking by facilitating the conviction of drug traffickers. In my opinion, Parliament's concern that drug trafficking be decreased can be characterized as substantial and pressing. The problem of drug trafficking has been increasing since the 1950's at which time there was already considerable concern. (See Report of the Special Committee on Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, Appendix to Debates of the Senate, Canada, Session 1955, pp. 690-700; see also Final Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs (Ottawa, 1973).) Throughout this period, numerous measures were adopted by free and democratic societies, at both the international and national levels.

At the international level, on June 23, 1953, the Protocol for Limiting and Regulating the Cultiva- démocratique. Même si un objectif est suffisamment important et même si on a satisfait aux deux premiers éléments du critère de proportionnalité, il se peut encore qu'en raison de la gravité de ses effets préjudiciables sur des particuliers ou sur des groupes, la mesure ne soit pas justifiée par les objectifs qu'elle est destinée à servir. Plus les effets préjudiciables d'une mesure sont graves, plus l'objectif doit être important pour que la mesure soit raisonnable et que sa justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Ayant exposé les principes généraux qui régissent une analyse en vertu de l'article premier, nous devons maintenant les appliquer à l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. La disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve qui figure à l'art. 8 apporte-t-elle au droit d'être présumé innocent tant que la culpabilité n'est pas prouvée hors de tout doute raisonnable, une restriction raisonnable dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique?

Comme je l'ai déjà souligné, pour répondre à cette question, il faut commencer par préciser la nature de l'intérêt ou de l'objectif poursuivi par le législateur en adoptant l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants. Selon le ministère public, l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants vise à refréner le trafic des stupéfiants en facilitant l'obtention d'un verdict de culpabilité contre les trafiquants. À mon avis, le souci du législateur de réduire le trafic des stupéfiants peut être qualifié de réel et urgent. Le problème du trafic des stupéfiants n'a cessé de s'aggraver depuis les années cinquante, et déjà à cette époque ce phénomène suscitait beaucoup d'inquiétude. (Voir Rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'enquêter sur le trafic des stupéfiants, appendice aux Débats du Sénat du Canada, session 1955, aux pp. 736 à 747; voir aussi Rapport final, Commission d'enquête sur l'usage des drogues à des fins non médicales (Ottawa, 1973).) Pendant toute cette période, des sociétés libres et démocratiques ont adopté de nombreuses mesures tant sur le plan national que sur le plan international.

Sur le plan international, le Protocole visant à limiter et à réglementer la culture du pavot, ainsi tion of the Poppy Plant, the Production of, International and Wholesale Trade in, and Use of Opium, to which Canada is a signatory, was adopted by the United Nations Opium Conference held in New York. The Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, was acceded to in New York on March 30, 1961. This treaty was signed by Canada on March 30, 1961. It entered into force on December 13, 1964. As stated in the Preamble, "addiction to narcotic drugs constitutes a serious evil for the individual and is fraught with social and economic danger to mankind, . . . "

At the national level, statutory provisions have been enacted by numerous countries which, inter alia, attempt to deter drug trafficking by imposing criminal sanctions (see, for example, Misuse of Drugs Act 1975, 1975 (N.Z.), No. 116; Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, 1971 (U.K.), c. 38).

The objective of protecting our society from the grave ills associated with drug trafficking, is, in my view, one of sufficient importance to warrant overriding a constitutionally protected right or freedom in certain cases. Moreover, the degree of seriousness of drug trafficking makes its acknowledgement as a sufficiently important objective for the purposes of s. 1, to a large extent, self-evident. The first criterion of a s. 1 inquiry, therefore, has been satisfied by the Crown.

The next stage of inquiry is a consideration of the means chosen by Parliament to achieve its objective. The means must be reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. As outlined above, this proportionality test should begin with a consideration of the rationality of the provision: is the reverse onus clause in s. 8 rationally related to the objective of curbing drug trafficking? At a minimum, this requires that s. 8 be internally rational; there must be a rational connection between the basic fact of possession and the presumed fact of possession for the purpose of trafficking. Otherwise, the reverse onus clause could give rise to unjustified and erroneous que la production, le commerce international, le commerce de gros et l'emploi de l'opium, dont le Canada est signataire, a été adopté le 23 juin 1953 dans le cadre de la Conférence des Nations unies sur l'opium tenue à New York. La Convention unique sur les stupéfiants de 1961 a été conclue à New York le 30 mars 1961. Signé par le Canada le même jour, ce traité est entré en vigueur le 13 décembre 1964. Comme on le dit dans le préambule, «la toxicomanie est un fléau pour l'individu et constitue un danger économique et social pour l'humanité . . .»

Sur le plan national, de nombreux pays ont adopté des dispositions législatives visant notamment, par l'imposition de sanctions pénales, à empêcher le trafic des stupéfiants (voir, par exemple, la Misuse of Drugs Act 1975, 1975 (N.Z.), nº 116; la Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, 1971 (U.K.), chap. 38).

L'objectif de protection de notre société contre les fléaux liés au trafic des stupéfiants est, selon moi, suffisamment important pour justifier dans certains cas l'atteinte à un droit ou à une liberté garantis par la Constitution. De plus, la gravité du trafic des stupéfiants fait qu'il va presque sans dire que sa répression constitue un objectif suffisamment important aux fins de l'article premier. Le ministère public a donc satisfait au premier critère applicable à une analyse en vertu de l'article premier.

L'étape suivante de l'analyse consiste à examiner le moyen choisi par le législateur pour atteindre son objectif. Ce moyen doit être raisonnable et sa justification doit pouvoir se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique. Soulignons encore une fois que l'application de ce critère de proportionnalité doit commencer par un examen de la rationalité de la disposition: existe-t-il un lien rationnel entre la disposition de l'art. 8 portant inversion de la charge de la preuve et l'objectif consistant à refréner le trafic des stupéfiants? Cela nécessite tout au moins que l'art. 8 soit lui-même rationnel. Il doit exister un lien rationnel entre le fait établi de la possession et le fait présumé de la possession à des fins de trafic, sinon la disposition portant inversion de la charge de la preuve pourrait avoir pour conséquence que convictions for drug trafficking of persons guilty only of possession of narcotics.

In my view, s. 8 does not survive this rational connection test. As Martin J.A. of the Ontario Court of Appeal concluded, possession of a small or negligible quantity of narcotics does not support the inference of trafficking. In other words, it would be irrational to infer that a person had an intent to traffic on the basis of his or her possession of a very small quantity of narcotics. The presumption required under s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is overinclusive and could lead to results in certain cases which would defy both rationality and fairness. In light of the seriousness of the offence in question, which carries with it the possibility of imprisonment for life, I am further convinced that the first component of the proportionality test has not been satisfied by the Crown.

Having concluded that s. 8 does not satisfy this first component of proportionality, it is unnecessary to consider the other two components.

VI

Conclusion

The Ontario Court of Appeal was correct in holding that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and is therefore of no force or effect. Section 8 imposes a limit on the right guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter which is not reasonable and is not demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society for the purpose of s. 1. Accordingly, the constitutional question is answered as follows:

Question:

Is s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act inconsistent with s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and thus of no force and effect?

Answer: Yes.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

des personnes coupables de simple possession de stupéfiants soient erronément et sans justification déclarées coupables de trafic.

Selon moi, l'art. 8 ne satisfait pas au critère du lien rationnel. Comme l'a conclu le juge Martin de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario, la possession d'une quantité infime ou négligeable de stupéfiants ne justifie pas une conclusion de trafic. En d'autres termes, il serait irrationnel de déduire qu'une personne avait l'intention de faire le trafic du seul fait qu'elle était en possession d'une petite quantité de stupéfiants. La présomption requise en vertu de l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants est trop large et est susceptible dans certains cas d'entraîner des résultats à la fois irrationnels et inéquitables. Compte tenu de la gravité de l'infraction en question, qui comporte la possibilité d'un emprisonnement à perpétuité, je suis d'autant plus persuadé que le ministère public n'a pas satisfait au premier élément du critère de proportionnalité.

Ayant conclu que l'art. 8 ne satisfait pas à ce premier élément de proportionnalité, il n'est pas nécessaire d'examiner les deux autres éléments.

VI

Conclusion

C'est à bon droit que la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a conclu que l'art. 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants contrevient à la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et qu'il est par conséquent inopérant. L'article 8 apporte au droit garanti par l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte une restriction qui n'est pas raisonnable et dont la justification ne peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique, au sens de l'article premier. Par conséquent, la question constitutionnelle reçoit la réponse suivante:

Question:

L'article 8 de la Loi sur les stupéfiants est-il incompatible avec l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et, par conséquent, inopérant?

Réponse: Oui.

Par conséquent, je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi.

The reasons of Estey and McIntyre JJ. were delivered by ESTEY J.—I would dismiss this appeal. I agree with the conclusions of the Chief Justice with reference to the relationship between s. 11(d) and s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. For the disposition of all other issues arising in this appeal, I would adopt the reasons given by Martin J.A. in the court below.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant: Roger Tassé, Ottawa.

Solicitors for the respondent: Cockburn, Foster, Cudmore and Kitely, London.

Version française des motifs des juges Estey et McIntyre rendus par LE JUGE ESTEY — Je suis d'avis de rejeter ce pourvoi. Je suis d'accord avec les conclusions du Juge en chef quant au lien entre l'al. 11*d*) et l'article premier de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Pour ce qui est de statuer sur toutes les autres questions que soulève le présent pourvoi, je suis d'avis d'adopter les motifs du juge Martin de la Cour d'appel.

Pourvoi rejeté.

Procureur de l'appelante: Roger Tassé, Ottawa.

Procureurs de l'intimé: Cockburn, Foster, Cudmore and Kitely, London.

The Government of Saskatchewan, the Honourable Lorne J. McLaren, the Honourable Lorne H. Hepworth and his Honour Judge Robert Harvie Allan Appellants

and

The Attorney General of Canada, the Attorney General for Ontario, the Attorney General of British Columbia and the Attorney General for Alberta Interveners

v.

The Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, Locals 544, 496, 635 and 955,

The United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Locals P-241-1, P-241-2, P-241-3, P-241-4 and P-241-6,

The Dairy and Produce Workers, Local 834, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, Local 834,

The International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, Local 395,

Maurice Hnidy, Doug Harold, Ron Orobko, Ron Bohn, Dean Schendel, John Kukurudza, Allan Goyer, Don Deck, Doug Leite, David Klassen, Reg Cox, Gordon Fairburn, Andy Stariuala, Lance Brownbridge Respondents

and

The Attorney General of Manitoba Intervener

INDEXED AS: RWDSU v. SASKATCHEWAN

File No.: 19430.

1985: October 8; 1987: April 9.

Present: Dickson C.J. and Beetz, McIntyre, Chouinard*, Wilson, Le Dain and La Forest JJ.

* Chouinard J. took no part in the judgment.

Le gouvernement de la Saskatchewan, l'honorable Lorne J. McLaren, l'honorable Lorne H. Hepworth et monsieur le juge Robert Harvie Allan Appelants

et

Le procureur général du Canada, le procureur général de l'Ontario, le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique et le procureur général de l'Alberta Intervenants

c.

Le Syndicat des détaillants, grossistes et magasins à rayons, sections locales 544, 496, 635 et 955,

Le Syndicat international des travailleurs unis de l'alimentation et du commerce, sections locales P-241-1, P-241-2, P-241-3, P-241-4 et P-241-6,

The Dairy and Produce Workers, section locale 834, affilié à l'International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, section locale 834,

The International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, section locale 395,

Maurice Hnidy, Doug Harold, Ron Orobko, Ron Bohn, Dean Schendel, John Kukurudza, Allan Goyer, Don Deck, Doug Leite, David Klassen, Reg Cox, Gordon Fairburn, Andy Stariuala, Lance Brownbridge Intimés

et

Le procureur général du Manitoba Intervenant

RÉPERTORIÉ: SDGMR c. SASKATCHEWAN

N° du greffe: 19430.

1985: 8 octobre; 1987: 9 avril.

Présents: Le juge en chef Dickson et les juges Beetz, McIntyre, Chouinard*, Wilson, Le Dain et La Forest.

* Le juge Chouinard n'a pas pris part au jugement.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR SASKATCHEWAN

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Freedom of association — Provincial legislation temporarily prohibiting strikes and lock-outs in dairy industry — Legislation providing for arbitration — Whether provincial legislation violated s. 2(d) of the Charter — If so, whether such violation justifiable under s. 1 of the Charter — The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1.

Following unsuccessful contract talks between the respondent unions and the only major dairy businesses in Saskatchewan, the unions served strike notices on the dairies. Before the rotating strike could begin, the dairies served the unions with a series of lock-out notices covering all of their fluid milk plants. The provincial legislature responded to these developments by passing The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act which temporarily prohibited the dairy employees from striking and the dairies from locking out their employees. The Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench dismissed respondents' application for a declaration that the Act infringed the freedom of association guaranteed by s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms but their appeal to the Court of Appeal was allowed. This appeal is to determine whether the Act violates s. 2(d) of the Charter and, if so, whether such violation can be justified under s. 1.

Held (Wilson J. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed.

Per Beetz, Le Dain and La Forest JJ.: For the reasons expressed by Le Dain J. in the Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313, the guarantee of freedom of association in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not include a guarantee of the right to bargain collectively and the right to strike. Accordingly, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act did not violate s. 2(d) of the Charter.

Per McIntyre J.: For the reasons I expressed in the Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act did not violate freedom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Charter because freedom of association does not embody the right to strike.

Per Dickson C.J.: In the context of labour relations, the guarantee of freedom of association in s. 2(d) of the

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA SASKATCHEWAN

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Liberté d'association — Loi provinciale interdisant temporairement les grèves et les lock-out dans l'industrie laitière — Loi prescrivant le recours à l'arbitrage — La loi provinciale viole-t-elle l'art. 2d) de la Charte? — Dans l'affirmative, s'agit-il d'une violation justifiable en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte? — The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1.

À la suite de négociations infructueuses entre les syndicats intimés et les seules entreprises laitières importantes de la Saskatchewan, les syndicats ont signifié des avis de grève aux laiteries. Avant que la grève tournante ne puisse commencer, les laiteries ont signifié aux syndicats une série d'avis de lock-out visant chacune de leurs usines de traitement du lait de consommation. La législature provinciale a réagi à ces événements en adoptant The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act qui interdisait temporairement aux employés d'usines laitières de faire la grève et aux laiteries de lock-outer leurs employés. La Cour du Banc de la Reine de la Saskatchewan a rejeté la requête des intimés visant à obtenir un jugement déclaratoire portant que la Loi enfreignait la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, mais leur appel devant la Cour d'appel a été accueilli. Le présent pourvoi vise à déterminer si la Loi viole l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte et, dans l'affirmative, si cette violation peut être justifiée en vertu de l'article premier.

Arrêt (le juge Wilson est dissidente): Le pourvoi est accueilli.

Les juges Beetz, Le Dain et La Forest: Pour les motifs exprimés par le juge Le Dain dans le Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313, la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés n'inclut aucune garantie des droits de négocier collectivement et de faire la grève. Par conséquent, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act ne viole pas l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte.

Le juge McIntyre: Pour les motifs que j'ai exprimés dans le Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act ne porte pas atteinte à la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte parce que cette liberté ne comprend pas le droit de faire la grève.

Le juge en chef Dickson: En matière de relations de travail, la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de Charter included the freedom to bargain collectively and to strike. Therefore, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act violated s. 2(d) of the Charter to the extent that it interfered with the employees' freedom to engage in strike activity that would have been lawful in the absence of the Act.

The Act was justifiable under s. 1 of the Charter. A legislature is entitled to abrogate the freedom of employees to strike if the effect of a strike or lock-out would be especially injurious to the economic interests of third parties, provided that the legislature substituted a fair arbitration scheme to resolve the dispute. The rationale for such an abrogation is that third parties who do not participate in a particular collective bargaining process ought not to be unduly harmed when the bargaining fails to produce a settlement. Economic harm to a third party will not always suffice, however, to justify, under s. 1, legislation abrogating the right to strike. In an interdependent economy, it is inevitable that a work stoppage in one industry will entail detrimental economic consequences for at least some individuals in other industries. In order for the legislation to be saved under s. 1, the objective advanced to justify the legislation must relate to a "pressing and substantial concern". Moreover, the legislative objective must be weighed against the deleterious effects of the measures which limit the enjoyment of the Charter right. In view of these principles established in Oakes, the relevant question to be answered in making such a determination is whether the potential for economic harm to third parties during a work stoppage is so massive and immediate and so focussed in its intensity as to justify the limitation of a constitutionally guaranteed freedom in respect of those employees.

In the case at bar, the legislative objective of avoiding serious harm to dairy farmers, in light of the unique nature of the dairy industry, constituted a satisfactory justification for the abrogation of the freedom of the dairy plant workers to strike. The evidence adduced indicated that the strike and the lock-out would entail a virtually total closure of milk processing facilities in Saskatchewan. These facilities provided the sole outlet for dairy farmers and their closure would pose a serious threat to the farmers in that they would be forced to dump their product. The dairy farmers could not stop production and could not store the milk for more than three days. These effects would persist whether the work stoppage was of a short or long duration. Not only were the threatened economic losses large in absolute terms la Charte comprend la liberté de négocier collectivement et de faire la grève. Par conséquent, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act enfreint l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte dans la mesure où elle porte atteinte à la liberté des employés de faire une grève qui, n'eût été la Loi, aurait été légale.

La Loi est justifiable en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte. Le législateur est autorisé à supprimer la liberté de grève d'employés chaque fois qu'une grève ou un lock-out nuirait particulièrement aux intérêts économiques de tierces personnes, pourvu qu'il substitue à ces moyens de pression un régime équitable d'arbitrage permettant de régler le différend. La raison d'être d'une telle suppression est que les tiers qui ne participent pas à un processus donné de négociation collective ne devraient pas avoir à subir de préjudice indu lorsque les négociations n'aboutissent pas à un accord. Toutefois, le préjudice économique subi par un tiers ne sera pas toujours suffisant pour justifier, en vertu de l'article premier, une loi supprimant le droit de grève. Dans une économie interdépendante, il est inévitable qu'un arrêt de travail dans un secteur donné aura des conséquences économiques fâcheuses, pour certaines personnes du moins, dans d'autres secteurs. Pour que la loi en question puisse être sauvegardée en vertu de l'article premier, il faut que l'objectif proposé pour la justifier se rapporte à une «préoccupation urgente et réelle». Il faut en outre soupeser l'objectif de la loi en question et les effets préjudiciables des mesures qui limitent la jouissance du droit garanti par la Charte. Compte tenu de ces principes établis dans l'arrêt Oakes, la question à laquelle il faut répondre dans cette détermination est de savoir si le préjudice économique que des tiers risquent de subir pendant un arrêt de travail est considérable, immédiat et concentré dans ses effets au point de justifier, dans le cas de ces salariés, la restriction d'une liberté garantie par la Constitution.

En l'espèce, compte tenu du caractère unique de l'industrie laitière, l'objectif du législateur d'éviter que les producteurs laitiers ne subissent un préjudice grave constitue un motif suffisant pour justifier la suppression de la liberté de grève des travailleurs d'usines laitières. D'après la preuve, la grève et le lock-out entraîneraient la fermeture quasi totale des installations de traitement du lait en Saskatchewan. Ces installations représentaient le seul débouché des producteurs laitiers et leur fermeture constituerait une grave menace pour ces derniers en ce sens qu'ils seraient obligés de jeter leur produit. Les producteurs laitiers ne pouvaient pas arrêter la production ni ne pouvaient entreposer le lait pendant plus de trois jours. Ces effets subsisteraient peu importe que l'arrêt de travail soit de courte ou de longue but they were to be borne in their full intensity by the province's 800 dairy farmers. The economic harm threatened by a total work stoppage in the dairy processing industry was so immediate, of such a high degree and of such an intense focus as to fall well within the ambit of the legislature's discretion to substitute a fair and efficient arbitration scheme for the dairy processing employees' freedom to strike.

The compulsory arbitration scheme enacted in the Act met the criteria of proportionality for such a scheme. The Act applied only to the workers in the dairy industry; it provided for a neutral arbitrator; either party could ultimately compel the other to submit to arbitration without interference from the government; and the scope of arbitration was not legislatively restricted. Accordingly, the Act satisfied the requirements of s. 1 of the Charter and embodied a reasonable limit on freedom of association.

Per Wilson J. (dissenting): The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act could not be saved under s. 1. The prevention of economic harm to a particular sector is not per se a government objective of sufficient importance to justify the limitation on the freedom of association guaranteed by s. 2(d). Economic regulation is an important government function in today's society but, if it is to be done at the expense of our fundamental freedoms, then it must be done in response to a serious threat to the well-being of the body politic or a substantial segment of it. The evidence adduced in this case fell far short of establishing economic harm to the dairy workers and the public which is in that category.

There is, however, a point at which government interference with the collective bargaining process is justified. To determine under s. 1 of the Charter when that point has been reached, the government must satisfy the court that as a minimum the damage to the dairy industry as a consequence of the work stoppage would be considerably greater than that which would flow in the ordinary course of things from a work stoppage of reasonable duration. Industry and the public accept a certain amount of damage and inconvenience as the price of maintaining free negotiation in the work place. Such damage and inconvenience cannot therefore constitute the "pressing and substantial concern" held by this Court in Oakes to justify government intervention. There has to be more to it than that. There is no basis of solid fact in this case on which to make a judgment as to durée. Non seulement les pertes économiques qui risquaient de se produire étaient-elles considérables au sens absolu, mais c'étaient les 800 producteurs laitiers de la province qui devraient en supporter tout le poids. Le préjudice économique que risquait d'occasionner un arrêt total du travail dans l'industrie du traitement du lait était à ce point immédiat, considérable et concentré dans ses effets qu'il relevait clairement du pouvoir discrétionnaire qu'a le législateur de substituer un régime d'arbitrage juste et efficace à la liberté de grève des employés d'usines de traitement du lait.

Le régime d'arbitrage obligatoire établi par la Loi satisfait aux critères de proportionnalité applicables à un tel régime. La Loi n'est applicable qu'aux travailleurs de l'industrie laitière; elle prévoit le recours à un arbitre neutre; une partie peut en définitive obliger l'autre à aller en arbitrage sans intervention gouvernementale; de plus, la Loi n'apporte aucune restriction à la portée de l'arbitrage. Par conséquent, la Loi remplit les exigences de l'article premier de la Charte et la restriction qu'elle apporte à la liberté d'association est raisonnable.

Le juge Wilson (dissidente): L'article premier ne permet pas de sauvegarder The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act. La prévention d'un préjudice économique pour un secteur particulier ne constitue pas en soi un objectif gouvernemental suffisamment important pour justifier la restriction de la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*). La réglementation en matière économique est une importante fonction gouvernementale dans la société d'aujourd'hui mais, si elle doit être accomplie aux dépens de nos libertés fondamentales, elle doit alors faire suite à une menace grave au bien-être de l'État ou d'une partie importante de celui-ci. La preuve soumise en l'espèce n'établit pas que les producteurs laitiers et le public subiront un préjudice économique qui s'inscrit dans cette catégorie.

Il y a toutefois un point où l'ingérence gouvernementale dans le processus de négociation collective est justifiée. Pour que la cour puisse déterminer en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte à quel moment ce point a été atteint, le gouvernement doit la convaincre au moins que le préjudice que subirait l'industrie laitière par suite de l'arrêt de travail serait sensiblement plus grave que celui qui résulterait dans le cours ordinaire d'un arrêt de travail d'une durée raisonnable. L'industrie et le public acceptent un certain niveau de préjudices et d'inconvénients comme prix à payer pour conserver la liberté de négociation dans le milieu de travail. Par conséquent, ces préjudices et inconvénients ne peuvent constituer la «préoccupation urgente et réelle» qui, selon ce que la Cour a jugé dans l'arrêt Oakes, est nécessaire pour justifier l'intervention du gouvernement. Il doit y avoir whether the government's intervention was reasonable or not. The government has thus failed to discharge its onus and the infringement of respondents' freedom of association accordingly was not demonstrably justified.

Assuming that the objective of protecting the economic interests of dairy farmers was of sufficient importance to justify overriding the workers' right to strike, the means chosen were not closely tailored to the objective so as to ensure the least possible infringement of the right. The government should not automatically respond with a total strike ban and the institution of compulsory arbitration. In the complex area of economic harm, the tailoring need not be exact but tailoring there must be. Here, the government did not establish that it had to impose such measure. On the contrary, the evidence adduced seemed to indicate that it could have tailored its legislative response in this case by instituting a partial ban on both strike and lock-out. This would have attained its objective while at the same time meeting the proportionality test enunciated in Oakes.

The second government objective supporting the limitation on the freedom under s. 2(d) was that the dairy workers provided an essential service—the delivery of an important food product to the consumers—and that the cessation of such delivery might threaten the health of part of the population. There was no evidence to support this allegation. No threat to the health of Saskatchewan consumers was therefore established.

Cases Cited

By Le Dain J.

Applied: Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313.

By McIntyre J.

Applied: Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313.

By Dickson C.J.

Referred to: Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313; R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103; Dolphin Delivery Ltd. v. Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Local 580

plus que cela. Il n'y a en l'espèce aucune base factuelle solide qui permette de se prononcer sur la question de savoir si l'intervention du gouvernement était raisonnable ou non. Il s'ensuit que le gouvernement ne s'est pas acquitté de son obligation et qu'il n'a donc pas démontré que la violation de la liberté d'association des intimés était justifiée.

À supposer que l'objectif de la protection des intérêts économiques des producteurs laitiers soit suffisamment important pour justifier la suppression du droit de grève des travailleurs, les moyens choisis n'étaient pas directement adaptés à cet objectif de manière à assurer que l'on porterait le moins possible atteinte à ce droit. Le gouvernement ne devrait pas répondre automatiquement par une interdiction totale de faire grève et par l'imposition de l'arbitrage obligatoire. Dans le domaine complexe du préjudice économique, l'«adaptation» est obligatoire quoiqu'elle n'ait pas à être parfaite. En l'espèce, le gouvernement n'a pas démontré qu'il se devait d'imposer une telle mesure. Au contraire, il semble ressortir de la preuve que le gouvernement aurait pu adapter sa réponse législative en l'espèce en décrétant une interdiction partielle à la fois de faire la grève et d'imposer un lock-out. Cela lui aurait permis d'atteindre son objectif tout en satisfaisant au critère de proportionnalité énoncé dans l'arrêt Oakes.

Le second objectif invoqué par le gouvernement à l'appui de la restriction à la liberté que prévoit l'al. 2*d*), porte que les travailleurs de l'industrie laitière fournissent un service essentiel, soit la livraison aux consommateurs d'un produit alimentaire important, et que l'arrêt de cette livraison pourrait mettre en danger la santé d'une partie de la population. Aucun élément de preuve n'a été présenté à l'appui de cet argument. Par conséquent, on n'a établi l'existence d'aucune menace à la santé des consommateurs de la Saskatchewan.

Jurisprudence

Citée par le juge Le Dain

Arrêt appliqué: Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313.

Citée par le juge McIntyre

Arrêt appliqué: Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313.

Citée par le juge en chef Dickson

Arrêts mentionnés: Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313; R. c. Oakes, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 103; Dolphin Delivery Ltd. v. Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Local (1984), 10 D.L.R. (4th) 198, aff'd on a different issue, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573.

By Wilson J. (dissenting)

PSAC v. Canada, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 424; Re Anti-Inflation Act, [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373; R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103; Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714; Ares v. Venner, [1970] S.C.R. 608; Attorney-General v. Times Newspapers Ltd., [1974] A.C. 273; Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2(d), 24(1).
Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52(1).
Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1.
Trade Union Act, R.S.S. 1978, c. T-17, s. 34.

Authors Cited

Adell, Bernard. "Establishing a Collective Employee Voice in the Workplace: How Can the Obstacles be Lowered?" In Essays in Labour Relations Law. Papers presented at the Conference on Government and Labour Relations: The Death of Voluntarism. School Management, University of Lethbridge, September 6-8, 1984. Don Mills, Ont.: CCH Canadian Ltd., 1986.

Arthurs H. W. "Free Collective Bargaining in a Regulated Society". In The Direction of Labour Policy in Canada. Edited by Frances Bairstow. Montréal: McGill University. Industrial Relations Centre, 1977.

Arthurs, H. W. "Public Interest Labor Disputes in Canada: A Legislative Perspective" (1967), 17 Buffalo L. Rev. 39.

Canada. Task Force on Labour Relations. Canadian Industrial Relations: The Report of Task Force on Labour Relations. Ottawa: Privy Council Office, 1968.

International Labour Organization. Freedom of Association: Digest of Decisions and Principles of the Freedom of Association Committee of the Governing Body of the I.L.O., 3rd ed. Geneva: International Labour Office, 1985.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 609, [1985] 5 W.W.R. 97, 39 Sask. R. 193, 85 CLLC ¶ 14,054, allowing respondents' appeal from a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench (1984), 12 D.L.R. (4th) 10, [1984] 4 W.W.R. 717, 33 Sask. R. 219, 84 CLLC ¶ 14,061, 10 C.R.R. 1. Appeal allowed, Wilson J. dissenting.

580 (1984), 10 D.L.R. (4th) 198, conf. sur un point différent, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 573.

Citée par le juge Wilson (dissidente)

AFPC c. Canada, [1987] 1 R.C.S. 424; Renvoi: Loi anti-inflation, [1976] 2 R.C.S. 373; R. c. Oakes, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 103; Re Loi de 1979 sur la location résidentielle, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 714; Ares c. Venner, [1970] R.C.S. 608; Attorney-General v. Times Newspapers Ltd., [1974] A.C. 273; Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313.

Lois et règlements cités

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 2*d*), 24(1).
Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, art. 52(1).
Trade Union Act, R.S.S. 1978, chap. T-17, art. 34.

Doctrine citée

Adell, Bernard. «Establishing a Collective Employee Voice in the Workplace: How Can the Obstacles be Lowered?» In Essays in Labour Relations Law. Papers presented at the Conference on Government and Labour Relations: The Death of Voluntarism. School Management, University of Lethbridge, September 6-8, 1984. Don Mills, Ont.: CCH Canadian Ltd., 1986.

Arthurs H. W. «Free Collective Bargaining in a Regulated Society». In The Direction of Labour Policy in Canada. Edited by Frances Bairstow. Montréal: McGill University. Industrial Relations Centre, 1977.

Arthurs, H. W. «Public Interest Labor Disputes in Canada: A Legislative Perspective» (1967), 17 Buffalo L. Rev. 39.

Canada. Équipe spécialisée en relations de travail. Les relations du travail au Canada: Rapport de l'Équipe spécialisée en relations de travail. Ottawa: Bureau du Conseil privé, 1968.

Organisation internationale du Travail. La liberté syndicale: Recueil de décisions et de principes du Comité de la liberté syndicale du Conseil d'administration du B.I.T., 3e éd. Genève: Bureau international du Travail, 1985.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Saskatchewan (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 609, [1985] 5 W.W.R. 97, 39 Sask. R. 193, 85 CLLC ¶ 14,054, qui a accueilli l'appel interjeté par les intimés contre un jugement de la Cour du Banc de la Reine (1984), 12 D.L.R. (4th) 10, [1984] 4 W.W.R. 717, 33 Sask. R. 219, 84 CLLC ¶ 14,061, 10 C.R.R. 1. Pourvoi accueilli, le juge Wilson est dissidente.

Robert G. Richards and B. G. Welsh, for the appellants.

George Taylor, Q.C., for the respondents.

Eric Bowie, Q.C., for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada.

John Cavarzan, Q.C., for the intervener the Attorney General for Ontario.

Joseph J. Arvay, for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Brian R. Burrows, for the intervener the Attorney General for Alberta.

Valerie J. Matthews Lemieux and W. Glenn McFetridge, for the intervener the Attorney General of Manitoba.

The following are the reasons delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE—This appeal raises the question whether The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, or any part thereof, violates the guarantee of freedom of association under s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, if so, whether such violation can be justified under s. 1.

I

Facts

The individual respondents are employees of the only major dairy businesses in Saskatchewan, Palm Dairies Limited ("Palm") and Dairy Producers Co-operative Limited ("Co-op"). The respondent unions represent all of the employees—except those excluded from membership in any bargaining unit—in eleven of the only twelve fluid milk plants operating in the province.

In March of 1984, contract talks were conducted between Palm and Co-op and the respondent unions. No progress was made towards an agreement. On March 31, 1984, Local P-241-2 of the respondent United Food and Commercial Workers International Union served notice on Palm that strike action would commence on April 8, 1984, at Palm's Saskatoon plant. The Dairy and Produce

Robert G. Richards et B. G. Welsh, pour les appelants.

George Taylor, c.r., pour les intimés.

Eric Bowie, c.r., pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada.

John Cavarzan, c.r., pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario.

Joseph J. Arvay, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique.

Brian R. Burrows, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta.

Valerie J. Matthews Lemieux et W. Glenn McFetridge, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Manitoba.

Version française des motifs rendus par

LE JUGE EN CHEF—Ce pourvoi soulève la question de savoir si The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, ou une partie quelconque de cette loi, viole la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et, dans l'affirmative, si cette violation peut être justifiée en vertu de l'article premier.

I

Les faits

Les particuliers intimés sont des employés de Palm Dairies Limited («Palm») et de Dairy Producers Co-operative Limited («Co-op»), les seules entreprises laitières importantes de la Saskatchewan. Les syndicats intimés représentent tous les employés (sauf ceux qui, par voie d'exclusion, ne peuvent appartenir à aucune unité de négociation) de onze des douze usines de traitement du lait de consommation que compte la province.

En mars 1984, des négociations ont eu lieu entre Palm et Co-op d'une part et les syndicats intimés d'autre part. On n'a fait aucun progrès vers la signature d'une convention collective. Le 31 mars 1984, la section locale P-241-2 du Syndicat international des travailleurs unis de l'alimentation et du commerce, l'un des intimés, a avisé Palm qu'une grève serait déclenchée le 8 avril 1984 à son Workers, Local 834, notified Co-op on March 31 that strike action would begin on April 8 at the Co-op Regina plant. However, this notice was withdrawn on April 6 when Local 834 instead notified Palm of strike action beginning on April 9 at Palm's Regina plant. It appears from the evidence that what was intended by the unions was some form of partial or rotating strike. These intentions were defeated by the employers, who, on April 1, served the unions with a series of lock-out notices covering all of the eleven Co-op and Palm fluid milk plants and taking effect on April 8.

On April 9 the legislature of Saskatchewan responded to these developments by enacting The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, which came into force immediately. It had the temporary effect of prohibiting the dairy employees from striking and prohibiting a lock-out by their employers.

The respondents applied to the Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench for a declaration that the Act infringed freedom of association and was thereby of no force and effect. A number of affidavits were filed on behalf of the respondents containing the following opinion as to the result that would have obtained if the employers had not locked out the employees:

(a) Approximately 85% of the capacity of the dairy industry in Saskatchewan would have continued to function and provide services and commodities to dairy farmers and to the consumers of dairy products;

(b) The pick-up of milk from dairy farmers in Saskatchewan for use in the dairy industry would have continued at full capacity; and

(c) The total quantity of milk and milk products previously available to consumers in Saskatchewan could have continued to be available because Dairy Producers has sufficient capacity to make up for any shortfall consequent on Palm's not operating.

Attached to the affidavits, however, were the lock-out notices of the employers indicating that the employers would not co-operate with the partial usine de Saskatoon. Le 31 mars, la section locale 834 de Dairy and Produce Workers a informé Co-op qu'une grève serait déclenchée le 8 avril à son usine de Regina. Ce dernier avis de grève a toutefois été retiré le 6 avril quand la section locale 834 a plutôt notifié à Palm son intention d'entreprendre une grève le 9 avril à son usine de Regina. Il ressort de la preuve que ce qu'envisageaient les syndicats était une forme de grève partielle ou tournante. Les employeurs ont mis fin à ces intentions lorsqu'ils ont, le 1er avril, signifié aux syndicats une série d'avis de lock-out visant chacune des onze usines de traitement du lait de consommation de Co-op et de Palm. Ces lock-out devaient entrer en vigueur le 8 avril.

Le 9 avril, la législature de la Saskatchewan a réagi à ces événements en adoptant The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, qui est entrée en vigueur immédiatement. Elle avait pour effet d'interdire temporairement toute grève par les employés des usines laitières et tout lock-out par leurs employeurs.

Les intimés ont demandé à la Cour du Banc de la Reine de la Saskatchewan un jugement déclaratoire portant que la Loi violait la liberté d'association et était, par conséquent, inopérante. Un certain nombre d'affidavits, déposés pour le compte des intimés, contiennent l'opinion suivante quant à ce qui se serait produit si les employeurs n'avaient pas lock-outé les employés:

[TRADUCTION]

a) L'industrie laitière de la Saskatchewan aurait continué à fonctionner et à fournir services et denrées aux producteurs laitiers et aux consommateurs de produits laitiers dans une proportion d'environ 85 pour 100 de son rendement normal;

b) la collecte, auprès des producteurs laitiers de la Saskatchewan, du lait destiné à être utilisé dans l'industrie laitière aurait continué comme avant; et

c) la même quantité totale de lait et de produits laitiers aurait pu continuer à être offerte aux consommateurs de la Saskatchewan parce que Dairy Producers est en mesure de compenser tout manque résultant de la fermeture de Palm.

Toutefois, étaient joints aux affidavits les avis de lock-out des employeurs, qui révélaient que ces derniers n'avaient pas l'intention de prêter leur strike planned by the unions. The respondents also submitted several newspaper articles as exhibits attached to an affidavit. The Attorney General for Saskatchewan adduced no evidence.

The Chambers judge, Sirois J. dismissed the application: (1984), 12 D.L.R. (4th) 10. An appeal was taken to the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal and the appeal was allowed, Brownridge J.A. dissenting: (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 609. On appeal to this Court, the Attorneys General of Canada, Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta intervened on behalf of the appellants. The Attorney General of Manitoba intervened on behalf of the respondents.

II

The Constitutional Questions

The Constitutional questions read as follows:

1. Does The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, or any part thereof, infringe or deny freedom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?
2. If The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, or any part thereof, does infringe or deny freedom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is the Act, or such part, justified by s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore not inconsistent with the Constitution Act, 1982?

III

Relevant Legislation

1. The Charter

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

concours à la grève partielle projetée par les syndicats. Les intimés ont également produit plusieurs coupures de journaux comme pièces annexées à un affidavit. Quant au procureur général de la Saskatchewan, il n'a présenté aucune preuve.

Le juge Sirois, siégeant en chambre, a rejeté la demande: (1984), 12 D.L.R. (4th) 10. L'appel interjeté devant la Cour d'appel de la Saskatchewan a été accueilli, mais avec dissidence de la part du juge Brownridge: (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 609. En cette Cour, le procureur général du Canada et ceux de l'Ontario, de la Colombie-Britannique et de l'Alberta sont intervenus en faveur des appelants. Le procureur général du Manitoba est intervenu en faveur des intimés.

II

Les questions constitutionnelles

Les questions constitutionnelles sont ainsi formulées:

1. The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, ou une partie quelconque de cette loi, constitue-t-elle une violation ou une négation de la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?
2. Si The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, ou une partie quelconque de cette loi, constitue une violation ou une négation de la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, la Loi, ou cette partie de la Loi, est-elle justifiée en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et, par conséquent, compatible avec la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982?

III

Les dispositions législatives pertinentes

1. La Charte

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes:

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association. [Emphasis added.]

2. The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act

2 ...

(f) "work stoppage" means a strike, lock-out, work slow down or a refusal or failure to perform the usual duties of employment.

3 Immediately upon the coming into force of this Act:

(a) the employees shall resume the duties of their employment with the employer; and

(b) the employer shall permit its employees to resume their employment; in accordance with the terms and conditions of the last collective bargaining agreement.

. . .

6 Notwithstanding any other Act or law or any provision of the last collective bargaining agreement to the contrary, the term of that agreement is extended to include the period commencing on April 1, 1984, and ending on the day on which a new or amended collective bargaining agreement is concluded in accordance with this Act and the terms and conditions of the last collective bargaining agreement remain in effect between the employer and the union for that period.

7 During the period for which the last collective bargaining agreement is extended in accordance with section 6:

(a) the employer shall not declare or cause a work stoppage,

(b) no officer or representative of the union shall declare, authorize or direct a work stoppage of any employee against the employer; and

(c) no employee shall participate in a work stoppage against the employer.

8 Where, 15 days after the coming into force of this Act, a new or amended collective bargaining agreement has not been concluded between the employer and the union, the employer and the union shall submit to final and binding arbitration in accordance with this Act.

. . .

12 (1) Every person who contravenes this Act is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction:

(a) in the case of an offence committed by the employer or the union or by a person acting on behalf

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association. [C'est moi qui souligne.]

2. The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act

[TRADUCTION] 2 ...

f) «arrêt de travail» signifie une grève, un lock-out, un ralentissement de travail ou le refus ou l'omission de remplir les fonctions habituelles d'un emploi.

3 Dès l'entrée en vigueur de la présente loi:

a) les employés reprendront leurs fonctions chez l'employeur; et

b) l'employeur permettra à ses employés de reprendre leurs fonctions; conformément aux modalités énoncées dans leur dernière convention collective.

. . .

6 Nonobstant ce que peut prévoir toute autre loi ou toute disposition contraire de la dernière convention collective, celle-ci est prorogée à partir du 1er avril 1984 jusqu'au jour de la signature conformément à la présente loi d'une nouvelle convention collective ou d'une convention modifiée, et les modalités énoncées dans la dernière convention collective demeurent applicables à l'employeur et au syndicat pendant cette période.

7 Pendant la durée de la prorogation de la dernière convention collective conformément à l'article 6:

a) l'employeur ne déclarera ni ne provoquera un arrêt de travail;

b) aucun dirigeant ni aucun représentant du syndicat ne déclarera, n'autorisera ni n'ordonnera un arrêt de travail dirigé par un employé contre un employeur; et

c) aucun employé ne participera à un arrêt de travail dirigé contre un employeur.

8 Si, dans les 15 jours suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente loi, une nouvelle convention collective ou une convention modifiée n'intervient pas entre l'employeur et le syndicat, ceux-ci se soumettront à l'arbitrage exécutoire et sans appel conformément à la présente loi.

. . .

12 (1) Quiconque contrevient à la présente loi est coupable d'une infraction et est passible, sur déclaration sommaire de culpabilité:

a) dans le cas d'une infraction commise par l'employeur ou le syndicat ou par une personne agissant of the employer or the union, to a fine of not more than $1,000 and, in the case of a continuing offence, to a further fine of $200 for each day or part of a day during which the offence continues;

(b) in the case of an offence committed by any person other than one described in clause (a), to a fine of not more than $100 and in the case of a continuing offence, to a further fine of $25 for each day or part of a day during which the offence continues.

pour le compte de l'employeur ou du syndicat, d'une amende ne dépassant pas 1 000 $ et, s'il s'agit d'une infraction continue, d'une amende supplémentaire de 200 $ pour chaque journée ou partie de journée pendant laquelle la perpétration de l'infraction se poursuit;

b) dans le cas d'une infraction commise par une personne autre que celles décrites à l'alinéa a), d'une amende ne dépassant pas 100 $ et, s'il s'agit d'une infraction continue, d'une amende supplémentaire de 25 $ pour chaque journée ou partie de journée pendant laquelle la perpétration de l'infraction se poursuit.

IV

Judgments

1. Court of Queen's Bench

Sirois J. referred to the opinion expressed in the union affidavits that the dairy industry would have continued 85 per cent unimpeded if a lock-out had not occurred as "purely speculative". He held that irreconcilable differences between labour and management, involving an imminent threat of a strike and lock-out and consequential harm to dairy farmers and the public, justified the enactment of the impugned legislation.

In his view, it was unnecessary to resort to s. 1 of the Charter since the legislation did not violate s. 2(d). A democracy by its very nature imposes restrictions on freedom through majority rule and "The courts must in this sense respect the duly enacted legislation, which must be looked upon as the expressed intention of the majority of the people" (p. 24). He concluded that the right to strike is not a fundamental freedom but exists within a statutory framework designed to ensure peace and order in labour relations.

Sirois J. continued by pointing out that even if the Act did violate s. 2(d) of the Charter, the legislation was saved by s. 1. The impasse between the two sides had to be resolved for the welfare and greater common good of the citizens of the

IV

Les jugements

1. Cour du Banc de la Reine

Le juge Sirois a qualifié de [TRADUCTION] «purement spéculative» l'opinion exprimée dans les affidavits déposés par les syndicats, selon laquelle l'industrie laitière aurait continué de fonctionner dans une proportion de 85 pour 100 de son rendement normal s'il n'y avait pas eu de lock-out. Il a conclu que des points de divergence inconciliables entre les travailleurs et les employeurs, qui comportaient une menace imminente de grève et de lock-out au préjudice des producteurs laitiers et du public, justifiaient l'adoption de la loi en cause.

Selon lui, il n'était pas nécessaire de recourir à l'article premier de la Charte puisque la Loi ne violait pas l'al. 2*d*). Une démocratie, de par sa nature même, impose des restrictions à la liberté en vertu de la règle de la majorité et [TRADUCTION] «Dans ce sens, les tribunaux sont tenus de respecter toute loi dûment adoptée, qui doit être considérée comme l'expression de la volonté de la majorité des gens» (p. 24). Il a conclu que le droit de grève n'est pas une liberté fondamentale, mais qu'il existe dans un cadre législatif conçu pour assurer la paix et l'ordre dans les relations de travail.

Le juge Sirois a poursuivi en soulignant que même si la Loi enfreignait l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte, elle était sauvegardée en vertu de l'article premier. L'impasse entre les deux parties devait être réglée au mieux des intérêts des citoyens de la province.

province. The government was, therefore, justified in enacting the legislation.

2. Court of Appeal

The appeal was allowed by the majority.

(i) Bayda C.J.S.

Bayda C.J.S. held that every freedom has an inherent limit; a freedom without an inherent limit would lead to an absurdity, for a freedom of everyone to do everything is a freedom to do nothing. The limitations on freedom of association in s. 2(d) of the Charter are, according to Bayda C.J.S., as follows: 1) individuals are free to perform in association without governmental interference only those acts that they are free to perform alone; 2) where an act by definition is incapable of individual performance, an individual is free to perform the act in association provided the mental component of the act is not to inflict harm.

According to the Chief Justice, those cases which have held that freedom of association only covers the act of combining and not activities in pursuit of the combination's purposes should not be followed. "To be in association means to act in association, for, it is metaphysically impossible for a human being to exist in a state of inanimateness, or in a state of no movement, or as it were, in a state of mere beingness" (p. 615). Freedom of association must, therefore, mean freedom to act as well as to be in association.

A strike is a concerted refusal to work and is, therefore, association. An individual may refuse to work. It follows, according to Bayda C.J.S. that the act of refusal to work by employees acting in concert is permissible. Since there was, in his view, some force to the contention that a strike by its nature was an act incapable of performance by an individual, the Chief Justice considered whether strike activity fell into the second class of inherently prohibited acts. He concluded that it did not. The dominant mental element of a strike was to compel an employer to agree to terms and conditions of employment, not to inflict injury. Thus, Le gouvernement a donc eu raison d'adopter la Loi en question.

2. Cour d'appel

La Cour d'appel à la majorité a accueilli l'appel.

(i) Le juge en chef Bayda de la Saskatchewan

Le juge en chef Bayda a conclu que chaque liberté comporte en soi des limites et qu'une liberté sans limites inhérentes mènerait à l'absurdité, car la liberté de chacun de faire quoi que ce soit constitue en réalité une liberté de ne rien faire du tout. D'après le juge en chef Bayda, l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte impose à la liberté d'association les restrictions suivantes: 1) les gens ne sont libres d'accomplir collectivement, sans intervention gouvernementale, que les actes qu'ils sont libres d'accomplir seuls; 2) dans le cas d'un acte non susceptible par définition d'être accompli par un seul individu, les individus ont la liberté de s'associer pour l'accomplir pourvu qu'il n'ait pas pour but de causer un préjudice.

Selon le Juge en chef, la jurisprudence qui établit que la liberté d'association vise seulement l'acte qui consiste à s'associer et non pas les activités exercées conformément aux objets de l'association, ne doit pas être suivie. [TRADUCTION] «Être associé signifie agir de concert, car il est métaphysiquement impossible qu'un être humain existe dans un état inanimé, ou dans un état d'inertie ou, pour ainsi dire, dans un état de simple existence» (p. 615). La liberté d'association doit donc s'entendre aussi bien de la liberté d'agir de concert que de celle d'être associé.

Une grève est un refus concerté de travailler et constitue donc une association. Un individu peut refuser de travailler. Il s'ensuit, selon le juge en chef Bayda, qu'il est permis à des employés agissant de concert d'accomplir l'acte qui consiste à refuser de travailler. Puisque, à son avis, ce n'était pas sans raison qu'on a soutenu qu'une grève est, de par sa nature même, un acte non susceptible d'accomplissement par un seul individu, le Juge en chef a examiné si une grève se situe dans la seconde catégorie, celle des actes intrinsèquement interdits. Il a conclu que non. Le but principal d'une grève est de forcer un employeur à en venir à legislation which prohibits strikes is in violation of s. 2(d).

Accordingly, Bayda C.J.S. turned to s. 1 to determine whether the legislation was justifiable as a reasonable limit on the freedom of association of the respondents (at pp. 627-28):

> The exiguous circumstances disclosed in the affidavits leave to conjecture and speculation the economic and many other relevant circumstances of the appellants [respondents] who presumably would be detrimentally affected by the imposition of any limit. Apart from some inadmissible information contained in newspaper clippings (wrongly relied upon by the chambers judge as evidence) attached to one of the affidavits, the affidavits taken in their entirety say virtually nothing about the circumstances of the two companies, or of the producers of the milk, or of the consumers, all of whom presumably would be detrimentally affected if no limit were imposed. A number of the deponents stated an opinion that the proposed rotating strikes by the unions would not have deprived consumers of milk and would not have resulted in the producers being unable to market their milk. There was some information to support that opinion; there was no evidence to contradict or undermine it. In the end, I am compelled to say that there was not sufficient material before the chambers judge to enable him to engage in the balancing process he needed to engage in to arrive at a reasoned decision upon the reasonableness of the limit. Had the proper circumstances been disclosed to him, he may indeed have arrived at a reasoned decision that the limit was reasonable. On the other hand, he may not have. In other words, the impugned legislation may be reasonable but we have no way of knowing that. [Emphasis added.]

Thus, the onus under s. 1 of the Charter was not satisfied. Bayda C.J.S. concluded that the Act was of no force and effect under s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982 and the respondents were entitled to a declaration under s. 24(1) of the Charter.

(ii) Cameron J.A. (concurring in result)

According to Cameron J.A. the objects of a trade union include the improvement of working une entente quant aux conditions de travail et non pas de causer un préjudice. Ainsi, toute loi qui interdit le recours à la grève enfreint l'al. 2*d*).

En conséquence, le juge en chef Bayda a eu recours à l'article premier en vue de déterminer si la Loi était justifiable à titre de limite raisonnable imposée à la liberté d'association des intimés (aux pp. 627 et 628):

> [TRADUCTION] Vu le peu de détails fournis par les affidavits, on en est réduit aux conjectures quant à la situation économique des appelants [intimés], qui subiraient vraisemblablement un préjudice si des restrictions étaient imposées, et quant à un grand nombre d'autres aspects pertinents de leur situation. Mis à part quelques renseignements inadmissibles contenus dans des coupures de journaux (que le juge en chambre a erronément considérées comme des éléments de preuve) annexées à l'un des affidavits, les affidavits dans l'ensemble n'apportent presque aucune précision concernant la situation des deux sociétés, des producteurs laitiers ou encore des consommateurs qui subiraient tous probablement un préjudice si aucune restriction n'était imposée. Un certain nombre de déposants ont exprimé l'opinion que les grèves tournantes envisagées par les syndicats n'auraient pas eu pour effet de priver de lait les consommateurs ni n'auraient mis les producteurs dans l'impossibilité d'écouler leur lait. Il y avait des données à l'appui de ce point de vue et il n'y avait aucun élément de preuve qui le contredisait ou l'affaiblissait. En définitive, je ne puis que conclure à l'absence de données suffisantes pour permettre au juge en chambre de se lancer dans le processus d'évaluation nécessaire pour aboutir à une décision raisonnée sur le caractère raisonnable de la restriction. Si on lui avait révélé les circonstances pertinentes, il aurait pu en effet arriver à une décision raisonnée que la restriction était raisonnable. Par ailleurs, il aurait pu ne pas le faire. En d'autres termes, il se peut que la loi attaquée soit raisonnable, mais nous n'avons aucun moyen de le savoir. [C'est moi qui souligne.]

Il s'ensuit qu'on n'a pas satisfait à l'exigence posée par l'article premier de la Charte. Le juge en chef Bayda a conclu que la Loi était inopérante en vertu du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 et que les intimés avaient droit à un jugement déclaratoire en vertu du par. 24(1) de la Charte.

(ii) Le juge Cameron (souscrivant au dispositif)

Selon le juge Cameron, un syndicat a notamment pour objet d'améliorer les conditions de tra-conditions and the financial welfare of its members, while the means of achieving those objects include collective bargaining, and, when that fails, the collective refusal to work. The Charter does not explicitly guarantee these objects in the sense of ensuring their attainment, but this does not bear upon the determination of the scope of freedom to associate.

In his view, some of the means by which a trade union pursues its objectives are constitutionally protected while others are not. The two primary ones of expression and assembly are the subject of express guarantee, but that is not to say that only those means which are themselves expressly guaranteed by the Charter are immune from legislative interference. Others are surely protected by necessary implication.

Cameron J.A. observed that the freedom to bargain collectively, of which the right to withdraw services is an integral aspect, lies at the very centre of the existence of an association of workers. To remove their freedom to withhold their labour would be to sterilize their association. Cameron J.A. reviewed the jurisprudence and concluded that (at p. 645):

> ... while the decided cases weigh in favour of the exclusion of "the right to strike" from the constitutional freedom of association, the emerging framework of principle governing Charter interpretation rather points to its inclusion, especially if we are to be faithful to the call to give these rights and freedoms a "generous interpretation ... suitable to give to individuals the full measure" of them.

Accordingly, the dairy workers in this case had a constitutionally protected freedom to withhold their services. There was nothing standing in the way of their doing so, except the impugned legislation, which, by denying them their freedom to withhold their work, abridged their s. 2(d) freedom of association.

Concerning s. 1 of the Charter, Cameron J.A. agreed with Bayda C.J.S. that the evidence adduced was insufficient. The newspaper articles, in his view, were not a source of information which vail de ses membres et de veiller à leur bien-être financier, alors que les moyens d'atteindre ces objets comprennent la négociation collective et, en cas d'échec, le refus collectif de travailler. La Charte ne garantit pas explicitement lesdits objets au sens d'en assurer la réalisation, mais cela n'est nullement déterminant en ce qui concerne l'étendue de la liberté d'association.

À son avis, certains des moyens par lesquels un syndicat poursuit ses objectifs sont protégés par la Constitution alors que d'autres ne le sont pas. Les deux moyens principaux, savoir l'expression et la réunion, font l'objet d'une garantie expresse, mais cela ne veut pas dire que seuls les moyens qui sont eux-mêmes expressément garantis par la Charte échappent à toute intervention de la part du législateur. Il en est sûrement d'autres qui sont protégés par voie de déduction nécessaire.

Le juge Cameron fait remarquer que la liberté de négocier collectivement, dont le droit de cesser de fournir ses services fait partie intégrante et se situe au cœur même de l'existence d'une association de travailleurs. Les dépouiller de la liberté de refuser de travailler reviendrait à rendre stérile leur association. Ayant passé en revue la jurisprudence, le juge Cameron tire la conclusion suivante (à la p. 645):

> [TRADUCTION] ... bien que la jurisprudence tende nettement à exclure «le droit de grève» de la liberté d'association garantie par la Constitution, l'ensemble des principes qui commence à se dégager relativement à l'interprétation de la Charte semble plutôt réclamer son inclusion, surtout si nous voulons écouter l'appel visant à donner à ces droits et libertés une «interprétation généreuse [...] propre à permettre aux particuliers [d'en] bénéficier pleinement».

Il s'ensuit que les travailleurs de l'industrie laitière dans la présente affaire jouissaient de la liberté, garantie par la Constitution, de cesser de fournir leurs services. Rien ne les empêchait de le faire, si ce n'est la loi attaquée qui, en leur interdisant de refuser de travailler, portait atteinte à la liberté d'association que leur garantit l'al. 2*d*).

En ce qui concerne l'article premier de la Charte, le juge Cameron s'est dit d'accord avec le juge en chef Bayda quant à l'insuffisance des preuves produites. Selon lui, les coupures de jour-could form the basis for judicial decision-making. Cameron J.A. dealt with the arguments of the Government of Saskatchewan as follows (at p. 651):

> The government contended that the dairy industry was an "essential industry" and that milk and dairy products, "because of their tremendous importance to health, (were) essential commodities". But even if that were so, there was no evidence to show that milk would necessarily be unavailable to Saskatchewan residents if the work stoppage had occurred. Nor was there any evidence to establish, as the government also contended, that the "continued viability of the dairy industry in this province" was at stake. Indeed the evidence of the unions suggested that 85% of the capacity of the industry would have remained unaffected by the rotational strikes which were proposed.
>
> The government also contended that the situation posed "serious economic problems for many Saskatchewan farmers". While that was very likely so, evidence of the extent of this might have been helpful, as perhaps it might have been useful to establish the degree to which this was caused by the actions of the employers, the biggest of which was a producer's co-operative, as well as by the employees. [Emphasis added.]

Cameron J.A. therefore held that the appeal should be allowed and the employees should be granted a declaration that the Act was of no force or effect.

(iii) Brownridge J.A. (dissenting)

According to Brownridge J.A., on numerous occasions it has been held that legislation which restricted or abolished the right of union members to strike did not, for this reason alone, infringe the guaranteed freedom of association. In this regard, he agreed with the majority opinion in Dolphin Delivery Ltd. v. Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Local 580 (1984), 10 D.L.R. (4th) 198 (B.C.C.A.), appealed to this Court on a different issue, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573, in which it was found that freedom of association did not include protection of the pursuit of the purposes for which the association exists. Since Brownridge J.A. did not find any violation of s. 2(d), he did not feel it was necessary to consider s. 1 of the Charter, naux ne constituaient pas une source de renseignements sur lesquels pouvait se fonder une décision judiciaire. Aux arguments avancés par le gouvernement de la Saskatchewan, le juge Cameron a répondu (à la p. 651):

> [TRADUCTION] Le gouvernement a fait valoir que l'industrie laitière est une «industrie essentielle» et que le lait et les produits laitiers «(sont) des denrées essentielles en raison de leur grande importance pour la santé». Mais même à supposer que cela soit vrai, il n'y a aucune preuve que les résidents de la Saskatchewan auraient nécessairement été dans l'impossibilité de se procurer du lait si l'arrêt de travail s'était produit. De plus, aucune preuve n'a été produite à l'appui d'un autre argument du gouvernement, savoir que c'est la «viabilité même de l'industrie laitière dans cette province» qui est en jeu. En fait, il ressort de la preuve soumise par les syndicats que 85 pour 100 du rendement de l'industrie n'aurait pas été touché par les grèves tournantes projetées.
>
> Le gouvernement a également soutenu que la situation posait «de graves problèmes économiques à un bon nombre de producteurs de la Saskatchewan». Quoique cela fût fort probable, il aurait pu être utile de produire des éléments de preuve établissant jusqu'à quel point c'était le cas, car cela aurait peut-être permis d'établir dans quelle mesure cette situation découlait des actes des employeurs dont le plus important était une coopérative de producteurs, et dans quelle mesure elle était imputable aux employés. [C'est moi qui souligne.]

Le juge Cameron a donc conclu qu'il y avait lieu d'accueillir l'appel et de rendre en faveur des employés un jugement déclaratoire portant que la Loi était inopérante.

(iii) Le juge Brownridge (dissident)

Selon le juge Brownridge, on a jugé à maintes reprises que ce n'est pas simplement parce qu'un texte législatif restreint ou abolit le droit des syndiqués de faire la grève qu'il porte atteinte à la liberté d'association garantie par la Charte. À ce propos, il a partagé l'opinion exprimée par la cour à la majorité dans l'arrêt Dolphin Delivery Ltd. v. Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Local 580 (1984), 10 D.L.R. (4th) 198 (C.A.C.-B.), qui a fait l'objet d'un pourvoi devant cette Cour relativement à une question différente, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 573, et dans lequel on a conclu que la liberté d'association ne protégeait pas la poursuite des objectifs d'une association. Étant donné sa conclusion qu'il n'y avait pas eu de although he indicated that in any event he agreed with Sirois J. on that issue.

V

Section 2(d) of the Charter and The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act

In the Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313 (hereinafter Alberta Labour Reference) released concurrently, I interpreted the guarantee of freedom of association in s. 2(d) of the Charter as including protection of the freedom to bargain collectively and to strike. In the present appeal, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act abrogates the freedom of workers to strike. It compels workers to "resume the duties of their employment" (s. 3(a)); it extends the terms of the former collective bargaining agreement (s. 6); it forbids the employee from participating in a work stoppage during this period of extension (s. 7(c)); and it requires submission to final and binding arbitration if a new or amended collective bargaining agreement has not been concluded between the employer and the union within 15 days of the coming into force of the Act (s. 8).

For the reasons which I set out in the Alberta Labour Reference, I am of the opinion that The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act violates s. 2(d) of the Charter to the extent that it interferes with the freedom of the employees to engage in strike activity that would have been lawful in the absence of the Act. It is therefore necessary to turn to s. 1 of the Charter.

VI

Section 1

The general principles under which a s. 1 inquiry is to be conducted are stated in R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103. The inquiry involves two steps: 1) assessing the importance of the objective underlying the impugned law and 2) assessing the violation de l'al. 2*d*), le juge Brownridge n'a pas cru nécessaire d'étudier l'article premier de la Charte, bien qu'il ait souligné qu'en tout état de cause il souscrivait à l'avis du juge Sirois sur ce point.

V

L'alinéa 2*d*) de la Charte et The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act

Dans le Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313 (ci-après le Renvoi relatif aux relations de travail en Alberta), dont les motifs sont prononcés en même temps que le présent arrêt, j'ai interprété la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte comme comprenant la protection de la liberté de négocier collectivement et de faire la grève. Dans la présente affaire, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act abolit la liberté de grève de certains travailleurs. Elle oblige ces derniers à «reprendr[e] leurs fonctions» (al. 3a)); elle proroge l'ancienne convention collective (art. 6), elle interdit aux employés de participer à un arrêt de travail pendant la durée de cette prorogation (al. 7c)), et elle impose le recours à l'arbitrage exécutoire et sans appel si une nouvelle convention collective ou une convention modifiée n'intervient pas entre l'employeur et le syndicat dans les 15 jours suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi (art. 8).

Pour les raisons que j'ai exposées dans le Renvoi relatif aux relations de travail en Alberta, j'estime que The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act enfreint l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte dans la mesure où elle porte atteinte à la liberté des employés en question de se livrer à une grève qui, n'eût été de la Loi, aurait été légale. Il est donc nécessaire de se reporter à l'article premier de la Charte.

VI

L'article premier

Les principes généraux qui doivent régir une analyse en vertu de l'article premier sont énoncés dans l'arrêt R. c. Oakes, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 103. L'analyse se déroule en deux étapes qui consistent 1) à établir l'importance de l'objectif qui sous-tend proportionality of the means employed to achieve the purpose pursued. The onus of proving the constituent elements of a s. 1 analysis is on the party seeking to justify the limit.

Two purposes or objectives have been advanced to justify the Act. First, it is said that because of the peculiar characteristics of the dairy industry a shut-down of processing facilities would have serious adverse consequences for the dairy industry, especially for dairy farmers. Second, it is argued that milk is an important food product, an essential commodity, and continuity of supply to consumers must be preserved.

In the Alberta Labour Reference, I accepted the "essential services" justification for the substitution of an adequate scheme of compulsory arbitration for the freedom to strike. The legislature is entitled to limit the freedom of employees to strike if the effect of a strike would be to deprive the public of essential services. The rationale for such a limitation is that members of the public who do not participate in a particular collective bargaining process ought not to be unduly harmed when the bargaining fails to produce a settlement. In my view, such a rationale also applies when the harm to third parties is economic in nature. Although, as I indicated in the Alberta Labour Reference, the right to bargain collectively and therefore the right to strike involve more than purely economic interests of workers, it cannot be doubted that economic concerns play an important role in a great many industrial disputes. It would be strange, indeed, if our society were to give constitutional protection for the freedom of employees to advance economic, as well as non-economic, interests by striking, while insisting that the state remain idle and indifferent to the infliction on others of serious economic harm. To require the legislature to be blind to the economic harm which may ensue from work stoppages would be to freeze into the constitution a particular system of industrial relations. Although, as yet, it would appear that Canadian legislatures have not discovered an alternative mode of industrial dispute resolution which is as la loi attaquée, et 2) à déterminer si les moyens employés pour atteindre cet objectif sont proportionnés à celui-ci. La charge d'établir les éléments constitutifs d'une analyse en vertu de l'article premier incombe à la partie qui cherche à justifier la restriction.

On prétend que la loi en cause se justifie par deux buts ou objectifs. En premier lieu, on dit qu'en raison des particularités de l'industrie laitière, la fermeture des installations de traitement nuirait gravement à cette industrie et surtout aux producteurs laitiers. En deuxième lieu, on fait valoir que le lait est un aliment important, une denrée essentielle, et qu'il faut en conséquence assurer aux consommateurs un approvisionnement continu.

Dans le Renvoi relatif aux relations de travail en Alberta, j'ai accepté l'argument des «services essentiels» pour justifier la substitution d'un régime convenable d'arbitrage obligatoire à la liberté de grève. Le législateur est autorisé à restreindre la liberté de grève d'employés chaque fois qu'une grève aurait pour effet de priver le public de services essentiels. La raison d'être d'une telle restriction est que les membres du public qui ne participent pas à un processus donné de négociation collective ne devraient pas avoir à subir de préjudice indu lorsque les négociations n'aboutissent pas à un accord. À mon avis, cette même raison d'être s'applique aussi lorsque le préjudice subi par des tiers est de nature économique. Quoique, comme je l'ai souligné dans le Renvoi relatif aux relations de travail en Alberta, le droit de négocier collectivement et, partant, celui de faire la grève, ne mette pas en jeu que des intérêts purement économiques des travailleurs, il ne fait pas de doute que des préoccupations d'ordre économique jouent un rôle important dans un bon nombre de conflits de travail. En fait, il serait étrange que notre société accorde une protection constitutionnelle à la liberté des salariés de recourir à la grève pour promouvoir leurs intérêts économiques et autres, et tienne en même temps à ce que l'État reste inactif et indifférent devant le préjudice économique grave causé à autrui. Exiger que le législateur ferme les yeux sur le préjudice économique qui peut résulter d'arrêts de travail sensitive to the associational interests of employees as the traditional strike/lock-out mechanism, it is not inconceivable that, some day, a system with fewer injurious incidental effects will be developed. In the meantime, in my view, legislatures are justified in abrogating the right to strike and substituting a fair arbitration scheme, in circumstances when a strike or lock-out would be especially injurious to the economic interests of third parties. As Professor Adell stated:

> We are not deterred, nor should we be, by any claim that the right to strike is sacrosanct and ought never to be restricted. Limiting the right to strike when its social cost is considered too high may well be a legitimate legislative choice.

(Bernard Adell, "Establishing a Collective Employee Voice in the Workplace: How Can the Obstacles be Lowered?" in Essays in Labour Relations Law (1986), at p. 18.)

I do not mean to suggest that any economic harm to a third party will suffice to justify the abrogation of the right to strike. In an interdependent economy it is inevitable that a work stoppage in one industry will entail detrimental economic consequences for at least some individuals in other industries. The objective advanced to justify legislation which infringes a Charter-protected right or freedom must relate to a "pressing and substantial concern" in order for the legislation to be saved under s. 1: Oakes, supra, at pp. 138-39. Moreover, the third element of the s. 1 proportionality requirement propounded in Oakes calls for a weighing of the legislative objective against the deleterious effects of the measures which limit the enjoyment of the Charter right or freedom. These principles suggest that the relevant question, therefore, is whether the potential for economic harm to third parties during a work stoppage is so massive and immediate and so focussed in its intensity as to justify the limitation reviendrait à consacrer dans la Constitution un régime particulier de relations de travail. Même si, jusqu'à maintenant, les législateurs canadiens ne semblent pas avoir découvert un autre mode de règlement des conflits de travail qui tienne aussi bien compte des intérêts collectifs des salariés que le mécanisme traditionnel de la grève et du lock-out, il n'est pas inconcevable qu'un jour on saura mettre au point un régime comportant moins d'effets secondaires préjudiciables. D'ici là, j'estime que les législateurs ont raison de supprimer le droit de grève et de lui substituer un régime d'arbitrage équitable dans les cas où une grève ou un lock-out serait particulièrement préjudiciable aux intérêts économiques de tierces personnes. Comme le fait remarquer le professeur Adell:

> [TRADUCTION] On ne recule pas et on ne doit pas reculer devant la prétention que le droit de grève est sacro-saint et qu'il ne devrait jamais être restreint. La restriction du droit de grève lorsque son coût social est jugé trop élevé peut fort bien constituer un choix valable de la part du législateur.

(Bernard Adell, «Establishing a Collective Employee Voice in the Workplace: How Can the Obstacles be Lowered?» dans Essays in Labour Relations Law (1986), à la p. 18.)

Je ne veux pas laisser entendre par là que n'importe quel préjudice économique subi par un tiers suffira pour justifier la suppression du droit de grève. Dans une économie interdépendante, il est inévitable qu'un arrêt de travail dans un secteur donné aura des conséquences économiques fâcheuses, pour certaines personnes du moins, dans d'autres secteurs. L'objectif proposé pour justifier un texte législatif qui porte atteinte à un droit ou à une liberté garantis par la Charte doit se rapporter à une «préoccupation urgente et réelle» pour que le texte en question soit sauvegardé en vertu de l'article premier: Oakes, précité, à la p. 139. De plus, le troisième élément de l'exigence de proportionnalité posée dans l'arrêt Oakes à l'égard de l'article premier oblige à soupeser l'objectif de la loi en question et les effets préjudiciables des mesures qui limitent la jouissance d'un droit ou d'une liberté garantis par la Charte. Il ressort de ces principes que la question pertinente est donc la suivante: Le préjudice économique que des tiers of a constitutionally guaranteed freedom in respect of those employees.

I now turn to an application of the above principles to the facts of the present appeal. At the outset, I wish to make it clear that I am treating the present case as one involving harm to a third party, namely, dairy farmers, rather than as a case involving harm to one of the parties to the industrial dispute. The fact that one of the employers was a co-operative company owned at least in part by at least some dairy farmers does not, in my view, dictate a contrary approach. A co-operative company is a separate legal entity and its directors are entitled to pursue a labour relations strategy which does not conform to the wishes of individual members. To pierce the corporate veil in respect of a widely-held corporation would be most unfair to individual members of the co-operative, to say nothing of non-member dairy farmers.

The only evidence before the Court is contained in the affidavits filed on behalf of the respondent unions and in the newspaper articles attached as exhibits to one of those affidavits. With great respect for the contrary opinions of Bayda C.J.S. and Cameron J.A., I am unable to see why the newspaper articles should be held to be inadmissible or unhelpful in the peculiar circumstances of this case. The newspaper reports were, I reiterate, filed on behalf of the respondents, undoubtedly with a view to providing the factual context for the Charter argument. The appellants were apparently satisfied that the newspaper reports provided an adequate factual foundation for its s. 1 justification: in any event, the Government of Saskatchewan adduced no further evidence. There is nothing on the record to indicate that either party disputed the admissibility of the articles before the Chambers judge. Except to the extent that there exists conflicting material in the newspaper reports, the reports constitute an evidentiary foundation accepted by both parties. It is unnecessary in this appeal to consider whether newspaper risquent de subir pendant un arrêt de travail est-il considérable, immédiat et concentré dans ses effets au point de justifier, dans le cas de ces salariés, la restriction d'une liberté garantie par la Constitution?

Appliquons maintenant aux faits du présent pourvoi les principes que je viens d'énoncer. Je tiens à préciser dès le départ que je procède en l'espèce comme s'il s'agissait d'un cas de préjudice causé à des tiers, savoir les producteurs laitiers, plutôt que d'un cas de préjudice subi par l'une des parties au conflit de travail. À mon avis, ce n'est pas parce que l'un des employeurs est une coopérative appartenant, du moins en partie, à des producteurs laitiers qu'il faut adopter une démarche différente. Une coopérative est une entité juridique distincte et il est loisible à ses administrateurs d'adopter en matière de relations de travail une stratégie qui ne traduit pas la volonté de membres individuels. Or, il serait des plus injuste pour les membres individuels de la coopérative, sans parler des producteurs laitiers non membres, que de faire abstraction de la personnalité morale dans le cas d'une société à grand nombre d'actionnaires.

Les seuls éléments de preuve dont dispose la Cour sont contenus dans les affidavits produits pour le compte des syndicats intimés et dans les coupures de journaux annexées comme pièces à l'un de ces affidavits. Avec égards pour les opinions contraires exprimées par le juge en chef Bayda et le juge Cameron, je suis incapable de voir pourquoi les coupures de journaux devraient être jugées inadmissibles ou d'aucune utilité dans les circonstances particulières de la présente affaire. Les reportages en question, je le répète, ont été produits pour le compte des intimés, dans le but sans doute de fournir un contexte factuel à l'argument fondé sur la Charte. Les appelants étaient apparemment convaincus que ces reportages constituaient un fondement factuel suffisant pour une justification au sens de l'article premier. Quoi qu'il en soit, le gouvernement de la Saskatchewan n'a présenté aucun autre élément de preuve. D'après ce qui ressort du dossier, ni l'une ni l'autre partie n'a contesté devant le juge en chambre l'admissibilité des coupures de journaux. Sauf dans la mesure où ils se contredisent, ces reportages constituent un articles tendered into evidence by one party and objected to by the other would generally be admissible for the purposes of s. 1.

The uncontroverted facts contained in the newspaper reports include the following:

1. The only Saskatchewan dairies not directly involved in the strike or lock-out were an independent dairy in Estevan and a Co-op cheese processing plant in Swift Current.

2. 1.3 million pounds of milk, worth about $250,000, was produced daily by Saskatchewan's 50,000 dairy cows on 800 dairy farms.

3. Co-op employs all the bulk tanker drivers who pick up milk from dairy farmers in Saskatchewan.

4. Milk is normally picked up from dairy farmers every second day. It cannot be stored on the farm for more than three days.

In addition to their factual content, the newspaper reports vividly convey the enormity of the waste that would have resulted from an interruption of milk pick-up and processing. The President of the dairy farmers' advocacy organization, the Saskatchewan Milk Producers' Association, was interviewed by one of the newspaper reporters:

In an interview, York said dairy producers would have to dump all their milk after three days if a dairy strike or lockout lasts that long.

. . .

"After three days we'd have to dump the whole works and start from scratch. You couldn't just dump half a load," he said.

York said a strike or lockout of even two days could be very harmful to the average dairy producer, as out of the 800 dairy farmers in Saskatchewan about 550 have loans and high annual or monthly payments.

(Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, Thursday, April 5, 1984)

fondement probatoire accepté par les deux parties. Il n'est pas nécessaire en l'espèce d'examiner si des coupures de journaux produites en preuve par une partie, auxquelles s'oppose l'autre partie, seraient généralement admissibles aux fins de l'article premier.

Les faits suivants qui se dégagent des coupures de journaux ne font l'objet d'aucune contestation:

1. À l'exception seulement d'une laiterie indépendante à Estevan et d'une fromagerie de Co-op à Swift Current, toutes les laiteries de la Saskatchewan étaient directement touchées par la grève ou le lock-out.

2. En Saskatchewan, 50 000 vaches laitières sur 800 fermes laitières produisaient quotidiennement 1,3 millions de livres de lait dont la valeur s'élevait à environ 250 000 $.

3. Tous les chauffeurs de camions-citernes qui font la collecte de lait auprès des producteurs laitiers de la Saskatchewan sont les employés de Co-op.

4. La collecte de lait auprès des producteurs laitiers s'effectue normalement tous les deux jours. Le lait ne peut pas être entreposé sur la ferme pendant plus de trois jours.

Outre leur contenu factuel, les reportages révèlent très clairement l'énormité du gaspillage qui aurait résulté d'une interruption de la collecte et du traitement du lait. Le président de l'organisme de défense des intérêts des producteurs laitiers, la Saskatchewan Milk Producers' Association, a été interviewé par un journaliste:

[TRADUCTION] Dans une interview, York a affirmé que les producteurs laitiers se verraient dans l'obligation de jeter tout leur lait après trois jours si une grève ou un lock-out touchant les laiteries durait aussi longtemps.

. . .

«Au bout de trois jours, nous serions obligés de jeter le tout et de repartir à zéro. On ne peut pas simplement vider la moitié d'un réservoir», a-t-il dit.

Selon York, même une grève ou un lock-out qui ne durerait que deux jours pourrait nuire gravement au producteur laitier moyen car, sur 800 producteurs en Saskatchewan, environ 550 ont contracté des emprunts et doivent effectuer des versements mensuels ou annuels élevés.

(Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, le jeudi 5 avril 1984)

Another dairy farmer was interviewed on the day the back-to-work legislation was enacted:

Burney, who is also a director of the Saskatchewan Milk Producers Association, said neither the company or the union have considered the farmer during negotiations.

"Farmers began dumping milk Sunday and they will continue to dump until the trucks start picking up milk again tomorrow", Burney said.

(Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, Monday, April 9, 1984)

These effects would persist whether the work stoppage was of a short or long duration. Not only were the threatened economic losses large in absolute terms, but the losses could not be distributed over a large population—they were to be borne in their full intensity by the Province's 800 dairy farmers. Many of these farmers were in a vulnerable financial position on account of their debt loads, as noted above, and on account of their inability to cease milk production. In my view, the economic harm threatened by a total work stoppage in the dairy processing industry was so immediate, of such a high degree and of such an intense focus as to fall well within the ambit of discretion of the Saskatchewan legislature to substitute a fair and efficient arbitration scheme for the dairy processing employees' freedom to strike. I might add that what perhaps exacerbates the economic harm to dairy farmers and distinguishes it from the routine economic harm experienced by any supplier to a producer in the throes of a work stoppage is the combination of three unusual features: (i) the producer in this case was the sole outlet for the suppliers' only product; (ii) the product in question was highly perishable; and (iii) because of the biological imperatives of the cow, the supplier could not mitigate losses by ceasing production.

Un autre producteur laitier a été interviewé le jour de l'adoption de la loi ordonnant le retour au travail:

[TRADUCTION] Burney, qui est également un directeur de la Saskatchewan Milk Producers' Association, a soutenu que ni la société ni le syndicat n'ont songé aux producteurs au cours des négociations.

«Les producteurs ont commencé à jeter leur lait dimanche et cela se poursuivra jusqu'à ce que la collecte reprenne demain», de dire Burney.

(Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, le lundi 9 avril 1984)

Ces effets subsisteraient peu importe que l'arrêt de travail soit de courte ou de longue durée. Non seulement les pertes économiques qui risquaient de se produire étaient-elles considérables au sens absolu, mais elles ne pouvaient pas être réparties sur une grande population—c'étaient les 800 producteurs laitiers de la province qui devraient en supporter tout le poids. Un bon nombre de ces producteurs étaient financièrement vulnérables en raison de leur endettement, comme je l'ai fait remarquer précédemment, et également en raison de leur incapacité d'arrêter la production de lait. À mon avis, le préjudice économique que risquait d'occasionner un arrêt total du travail dans l'industrie du traitement du lait était à ce point immédiat, considérable et concentré dans ses effets qu'il relevait clairement du pouvoir discrétionnaire qu'a le législateur de la Saskatchewan de substituer un régime d'arbitrage juste et efficace à la liberté de grève des employés d'usines de traitement du lait. Je pourrais ajouter que ce qui vient peut-être aggraver le préjudice économique subi par les producteurs laitiers et ce qui permet de le distinguer d'avec le préjudice économique ordinaire que subit n'importe quel fournisseur d'un producteur qui se trouve sous le coup d'un arrêt de travail est la combinaison de trois facteurs inhabituels: (i) le producteur en l'espèce était le seul débouché pour l'unique produit des fournisseurs; (ii) le produit en question est extrêmement périssable; et (iii) en raison des impératifs de la vache sur le plan biologique, les fournisseurs ne pouvaient pas atténuer leurs pertes en arrêtant la production.

The affidavits of the respondents were addressed to the effects which would have ensued if there had been no lock-out by the employer, but only a partial strike or a series of rotating strikes by the employees. It is claimed that the industry could have functioned at 85 per cent of normal capacity and that milk would have been collected from the farmers.

It is submitted that the appropriateness of any limitation upon the right to strike must be measured against the effects, not of the employer lock-out, but of the proposed partial strike. This argument, however, ignores the fact that the legislature was faced with the reality of a total lock-out. For the reasons given earlier, in such circumstances the legislature was justified in requiring the parties to submit their differences to binding arbitration and in ordering the parties back to work. Moreover, implicit in the respondents' argument is the assumption that the right to strike is in no way related to the employer's ability to lock out employees. To assess the validity of this assumption, it is necessary to consider the manner in which the constitutional freedom to strike interacts with the statutory regulation of labour relations.

In my reasons in the Alberta Labour Reference, I indicated that the very detailed legislative scheme of industrial relations that has been developed over several decades may be relevant to the assessment of constitutional questions pertaining to strike activity. In the Alberta Labour Reference the issue was not whether particular aspects of this standard statutory scheme were unconstitutional, but rather, when and in what circumstances that statutory paradigm could be done away with entirely in particular industries and replaced with an alternative mechanism. The present case was argued along similar lines. In addressing this issue, it would be inappropriate for the courts to venture into an assessment of the constitutional validity of the standard industrial relations paradigm which was not directly impugned. In short, until and unless a direct challenge is mounted against The Trade Union Act, R.S.S. 1978, c. T-17, that enact-

Les affidavits des intimés traitent de ce qui serait arrivé s'il y avait eu non pas un lock-out par l'employeur, mais simplement une grève partielle ou une série de grèves tournantes par les employés. On soutient que l'industrie aurait pu fonctionner alors dans une proportion de 85 pour 100 de son rendement normal et que la collecte du lait auprès des producteurs aurait été effectuée.

On fait valoir que le caractère approprié de toute restriction du droit de grève doit être évalué en fonction des effets, non pas du lock-out décrété par l'employeur, mais du projet de grève partielle. Toutefois, cet argument ne tient pas compte du fait que la législature faisait face à la réalité d'un lock-out total. Pour les motifs donnés antérieurement, la législature était justifiée, dans ces circonstances, de demander aux parties de soumettre leurs divergences à l'arbitrage exécutoire et d'ordonner leur retour au travail. De plus, cet argument des intimés laisse supposer implicitement que le droit de grève n'a aucun rapport avec la capacité de l'employeur de lock-outer ses employés. Pour décider du bien-fondé de cette hypothèse, il faut examiner la manière dont la liberté constitutionnelle de faire la grève interagit avec la réglementation législative des relations du travail.

Dans les motifs que j'ai rédigés dans le Renvoi relatif aux relations de travail en Alberta, j'ai indiqué qu'il peut y avoir lieu, dans l'examen de questions constitutionnelles qui ont trait à la grève, de tenir compte de la législation très détaillée en matière de relations de travail qui a été mise au point au cours de plusieurs décennies. Dans le Renvoi relatif aux relations de travail en Alberta, la question était non pas de savoir si des aspects particuliers de cet ensemble législatif normal étaient inconstitutionnels, mais plutôt de savoir quand et dans quelles circonstances ce paradigme législatif pouvait être écarté entièrement dans des secteurs donnés et remplacé par un autre mécanisme. La présente cause a été plaidée d'une manière semblable. Il ne siérait guère que les tribunaux, en abordant cette question, s'aventurent dans une évaluation de la constitutionnalité du paradigme normal des relations de travail qui n'a pas été attaqué directement. Bref, tant que The Trade Union Act, R.S.S. 1978, chap. T-17, n'aura ment, with its various restrictions on the employees' ability to strike, is presumptively valid.

Under The Trade Union Act, as under similar legislation in the other Canadian jurisdictions, the statutory right of employees to strike is subject to a countervailing statutory right of employers to lock out their employees, as long as certain conditions are fulfilled. The Trade Union Act, s. 34 provides:

> 34.—(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any collective bargaining agreement heretofore entered into or, except as otherwise specifically provided therein, hereafter entered into, where either party to such agreement gives or has given notice in writing pursuant to subsection (4) of section 33 to negotiate a revision of the agreement, the employees in respect of whom the agreement applies and the employer of such employees may, after this section comes into force and after the expiry of the term of operation provided in the agreement, commence to strike or commence a lock-out, as the case may require. [Emphasis added.]

The underlying premise of industrial relations reflected in The Trade Union Act is that the threat of a strike or lock-out with its potentially disastrous loss of income to employee and employer alike will motivate the parties to reach a consensual solution either before a work stoppage occurs or within a reasonable time thereafter. Whether or not the legislature has fairly or evenly balanced the relative bargaining power of the parties is not the subject of the present appeal. It suffices to note that a particular balance of power is reflected in the rights and obligations delineated in The Trade Union Act, and that employer lock-outs are permitted in the factual circumstances of this case. Since, under the unchallenged general labour law of the Province, the employer is entitled to lock out its employees in circumstances when employees are entitled to strike, it follows that the deleterious effects of permitting a strike must be taken to include the effects which flow from permitting an employer lock-out. In the present case, the effect was a virtually total closure of milk processing facilities in Saskatchewan.

pas été attaquée directement, cette loi, avec les diverses restrictions qu'elle impose à la capacité des salariés de faire la grève, doit être présumée valide.

Suivant The Trade Union Act et les lois analogues des autres ressorts canadiens, le droit de grève reconnu aux salariés par la loi est assujetti au droit compensatoire des employeurs, également reconnu par la loi, de lock-outer leurs employés pourvu que soient remplies certaines conditions. L'article 34 de The Trade Union Act est ainsi conçu:

> [TRADUCTION] 34.—(1) Nonobstant ce que peut prévoir toute convention collective intervenue avant ou, sauf disposition contraire de ladite convention, après, l'entrée en vigueur de la présente loi, lorsque l'une ou l'autre partie à la convention donne ou a donné, conformément au paragraphe 33(4), des avis écrits de son intention de négocier la révision de la convention, les employés visés par la convention et leur employeur peuvent, après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente disposition et après la date d'expiration fixée par la convention, déclencher une grève ou imposer un lock-out, selon le cas. [C'est moi qui souligne.]

Selon la prémisse fondamentale en matière de relations de travail qui se dégage de The Trade Union Act, la menace d'une grève ou d'un lock-out, avec la possibilité d'une perte désastreuse de revenus aussi bien pour l'employé que pour l'employeur, motive les parties à en venir à un consensus soit avant qu'il n'y ait arrêt de travail, soit dans un délai raisonnable après un tel arrêt. Il ne s'agit pas en l'espèce de savoir si le législateur a établi un équilibre juste ou égal entre les pouvoirs de négociation relatifs des parties. Il suffit de faire remarquer que les droits et obligations énoncés dans The Trade Union Act reflètent un certain équilibre des pouvoirs et que, compte tenu des faits de la présente affaire, il est loisible aux employeurs d'imposer des lock-out. Puisque le droit général du travail en vigueur dans la province, qui est d'ailleurs incontesté, autorise un employeur à lock-outer ses employés dans des cas où ces derniers sont en droit de faire la grève, il s'ensuit que l'on doit compter parmi les effets nocifs de l'autorisation d'une grève ceux qui découlent de l'autorisation d'un lock-out par un employeur. En l'espèce, l'effet a été la fermeture quasi totale des installations de traitement du lait en Saskatchewan.

For the above reasons, I am persuaded that the legislative objective of avoiding serious harm to dairy farmers, in light of the unique nature of the dairy industry, constituted a satisfactory justification for the abrogation of the freedom of dairy plant workers to strike. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the second objective advanced by the government, namely the maintenance of continuity of supply to consumers of an essential commodity. In any event, there was no evidence regarding the possibility of importing milk from neighbouring provinces.

The compulsory arbitration scheme enacted in The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act meets the criteria of proportionality for such a scheme which I described in the Alberta Labour Reference. The Act applies only to the workers in the dairy industry; it provides for a neutral arbitrator; either party may ultimately compel the other to submit to arbitration without interference from the government; and the scope of arbitration has not been legislatively restricted. Accordingly, The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act embodies a reasonable limit on freedom of association.

VII

Conclusion

The constitutional questions are answered as follows:

1. Does The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, or any part thereof, infringe or deny freedom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Answer: Yes. The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act infringes and denies freedom of association as guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Charter to the extent it prohibits collective withdrawal of services.

2. If The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, or any part thereof, does infringe or deny free-

Pour les motifs que je viens d'exposer, je suis convaincu que, compte tenu du caractère unique de l'industrie laitière, l'objectif du législateur d'éviter que les producteurs laitiers ne subissent un préjudice grave constitue un motif suffisant pour justifier la suppression de la liberté de grève des travailleurs d'usines laitières. Il n'est donc pas nécessaire d'étudier le second objectif invoqué par le gouvernement, qui est d'assurer aux consommateurs un approvisionnement continu en une denrée essentielle. En tout état de cause, aucune preuve n'a été produite relativement à la possibilité d'importer du lait des provinces voisines.

Le régime d'arbitrage obligatoire établi par The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act satisfait aux critères de proportionnalité applicables à un tel régime, que j'ai décrits dans le Renvoi relatif aux relations de travail en Alberta. La Loi n'est applicable qu'aux travailleurs de l'industrie laitière; elle prévoit le recours à un arbitre neutre; une partie peut en définitive obliger l'autre à aller en arbitrage sans intervention gouvernementale; de plus, la Loi n'apporte aucune restriction à la portée de l'arbitrage. Par conséquent, la restriction apportée à la liberté d'association par The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act est raisonnable.

VII

Conclusion

Les questions constitutionnelles reçoivent les réponses suivantes:

1. The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, ou une partie quelconque de cette loi, constitue-t-elle une violation ou une négation de la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

Réponse: Oui. The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act porte atteinte à la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte dans la mesure où elle interdit la cessation collective de la prestation de services.

2. Si The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, ou une partie quelconque de cette loi, consti-dom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is the Act, or such part, justified by s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore not inconsistent with the Constitution Act, 1982?

Answer: Yes. The Act is justified by s. 1 of the Charter and is therefore not inconsistent with the Constitution Act, 1982.

The appeal should be allowed without costs.

The judgment of Beetz, Le Dain and La Forest JJ. was delivered by LE DAIN J.—For the reasons I expressed in the Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313, I am of the opinion that the guarantee of freedom of association in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not include a guarantee of the right to bargain collectively and the right to strike. I would accordingly allow the appeal and answer the constitutional questions in the manner proposed by McIntyre J.

The following are the reasons delivered by

MCINTYRE J.—I have read the reasons for judgment prepared in this appeal by the Chief Justice and those prepared by Wilson J. The Chief Justice has set out the facts, the legislative provisions involved, the issues which arise in the case and adequate summaries of the judgments in the courts below. With all due respect for the views of my colleagues, I have reached different conclusions.

For the reasons which I gave in the Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313 (judgment delivered concurrently), I have reached the conclusion that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not give constitutional protection to a right to strike. I would therefore allow the appeal and it is, tue une violation ou une négation de la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, la Loi, ou cette partie de la Loi, est-elle justifiée en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et, par conséquent, compatible avec la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982?

Réponse: Oui. La Loi est justifiée en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte et est, par conséquent, compatible avec la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982.

Le pourvoi est accueilli sans adjudication de dépens.

Version française du jugement des juges Beetz, Le Dain et La Forest rendu par

LE JUGE LE DAIN—Pour les motifs que j'ai exprimés dans le Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313, je suis d'avis que la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés n'inclut aucune garantie des droits de négocier collectivement et de faire la grève. Par conséquent, je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi et de répondre aux questions constitutionnelles de la manière proposée par le juge McIntyre.

Version française des motifs rendus par

LE JUGE MCINTYRE—J'ai lu les motifs de jugement rédigés en l'espèce par le Juge en chef et par le juge Wilson respectivement. Le Juge en chef a énoncé les faits, les dispositions législatives en cause, les questions soulevées en l'espèce et a résumé de manière adéquate les jugements des tribunaux d'instance inférieure. Malgré tout le respect que j'ai pour le point de vue de mes collègues, je suis arrivé à des conclusions différentes.

Pour les motifs que j'ai donnés dans le Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313 (dont les motifs sont prononcés en même temps que le présent arrêt), je suis arrivé à la conclusion que la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés n'accorde pas une protection constitutionnelle au droit de faire la of course, unnecessary for me to consider s. 1 of the Charter.

I would answer the constitutional questions, as follows:

1. Does The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, or any part thereof, infringe or deny freedom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Answer: The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act does not violate freedom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Charter because freedom of association does not embody the right to strike.

2. If The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, or any part thereof, does infringe or deny freedom of association guaranteed in s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is the Act, or such part, justified by s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore not inconsistent with the Constitution Act, 1982?

Answer: Given my answer to the first question, I need not consider this second question.

The following are the reasons delivered by

WILSON J. (dissenting)—I agree with Chief Justice Dickson for the reasons given by him that The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, c. D-1.1, violates s. 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, I cannot agree that this legislation is saved by s. 1 of the Charter.

The Government of Saskatchewan advanced two objectives to justify the Act. First, it submitted that because of the peculiar nature of the dairy industry a shut-down of processing facilities would have serious adverse consequences for the industry, especially for dairy farmers. Second, the governgrève. Je suis par conséquent d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi et, évidemment, il ne m'est pas nécessaire d'examiner l'article premier de la Charte.

Je suis d'avis de répondre aux questions constitutionnelles de la manière suivante:

1. The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, ou une partie quelconque de cette loi, constitue-t-elle une violation ou une négation de la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

Réponse: The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act ne viole pas la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte parce que la liberté d'association ne comprend pas le droit de faire la grève.

2. Si The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, ou une partie quelconque de cette loi, constitue une violation ou une négation de la liberté d'association garantie par l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, la Loi, ou cette partie de la Loi, est-elle justifiée en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et, par conséquent, compatible avec la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982?

Réponse: Compte tenu de ma réponse à la première question, je n'ai pas à répondre à cette seconde question.

Version française des motifs rendus par

LE JUGE WILSON (dissidente)—Pour les mêmes raisons que donne le juge en chef Dickson, je suis d'accord avec lui pour dire que The Dairy Workers (Maintenance of Operations) Act, S.S. 1983-84, chap. D-1.1, viole l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Toutefois, je ne puis convenir que l'article premier de la Charte permet de sauvegarder cette loi.

Le gouvernement de la Saskatchewan a énoncé deux objectifs pour justifier la Loi. En premier lieu, on dit qu'en raison de la nature particulière de l'industrie laitière, la fermeture des installations de traitement nuirait gravement à l'industrie et surtout aux producteurs laitiers. En deuxième lieu, ment submitted that milk is an essential commodity and that the continuity of supply to consumers must be preserved for health reasons.

The first objective advanced by the government is the prevention of economic harm to dairy farmers. In the Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313 (judgment released concurrently herewith), Dickson C.J. concluded that the fact that employees were providing "essential services" justified the substitution of an adequate scheme of compulsory arbitration for the freedom to strike. He adopted the definition of an "essential service" reflected in decisions of the Freedom of Association Committee of the International Labour Office (p. 375). These decisions have consistently defined an essential service as a service "whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population" (Freedom of Association: Digest of Decisions and Principles of the Freedom of Association Committee of the Governing Body of the I.L.O., 3rd ed. Geneva, International Labour Office, 1985). The Chief Justice appears now to be engrafting a substantial extension on to that definition. He is sanctioning in this case the abrogation of the freedom to strike when the economic interests of a particular group are threatened. The implications of this for the collective bargaining process are extremely far-reaching since some measure of damage to the economic interests of the parties and the public is an inevitable concomitant every work stoppage. Indeed, the effectiveness of this negotiating tool depends upon it.

Considerable discussion has taken place in Canada and elsewhere as to the circumstances in which it is appropriate for government to interfere with the standard industrial relations paradigm by prohibiting strike action. This paradigm which prevails in statutes in all Canadian jurisdictions is based on a belief in free negotiation between buyers and sellers of labour and in the strike as the indispensable catalyst that makes the system work. Free negotiation is valued because it enables workers to participate in establishing their own working le gouvernement fait valoir que le lait est une denrée essentielle et que, pour des raisons de santé, il faut assurer aux consommateurs un approvisionnement continu.

Le premier objectif énoncé par le gouvernement est d'empêcher que les producteurs laitiers ne subissent un préjudice financier. Dans le Renvoi relatif à la Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alb.), [1987] 1 R.C.S. 313 (dont les motifs sont prononcés en même temps que le présent arrêt), le juge en chef Dickson a conclu que le fait que des employés assuraient des «services essentiels» justifiait la substitution d'un régime adéquat d'arbitrage obligatoire à la liberté de grève. Il a adopté la définition d'un «service essentiel» qui ressort des décisions du Comité de la liberté syndicale du Bureau international du Travail (p. 375). Ces décisions définissent de manière uniforme un service essentiel comme un service «dont l'interruption pourrait mettre en péril la vie, la sécurité ou la santé de la personne dans une partie ou dans la totalité de la population» (La liberté syndicale: Recueil de décisions et de principes du Comité de la liberté syndicale du Conseil d'administration du B.I.T., 3e éd., Genève, Bureau international du Travail, 1985). Le Juge en chef paraît maintenant élargir sensiblement cette définition. Il approuve en l'espèce l'abrogation de la liberté de grève lorsque les intérêts économiques d'un groupe particulier sont menacés. Cela a, sur le processus de négociation collective, des répercussions qui vont extrêmement loin étant donné que tout arrêt de travail cause inévitablement un certain préjudice aux intérêts économiques des parties et du public. En fait, l'efficacité de cet outil de négociation en dépend.

De nombreuses discussions ont porté, au Canada et ailleurs, sur les circonstances dans lesquelles il convient que le gouvernement modifie le paradigme normal des relations de travail en interdisant la grève. Ce paradigme qui prévaut dans les lois de tous les ressorts canadiens est fondé sur la croyance dans la liberté de négociation entre les employés et les employeurs et dans la grève comme catalyseur indispensable qui permet au système de fonctionner. La libre négociation est prisée parce qu'elle permet aux travailleurs de participer à conditions. It is an exercise in self-government and enhances the dignity of the worker as a person.

Past discussion as to when government should intervene to prohibit strikes has always focussed on the question of when it is best for government to intervene not on the question of when it is constitutional for government to do so. Section 2(d) of the Charter now gives constitutional protection to freedom of association and I agree with the Chief Justice that freedom of association in the context of industrial relations embraces the freedom to bargain collectively and that the strike, as an essential feature of effective collective bargaining, is also encompassed by that freedom. I cannot conclude, however, that the prevention of economic harm to a particular sector is per se a government objective of sufficient importance to justify the abrogation of the freedom guaranteed by s. 2(d).

I do not doubt that economic regulation is an important government function in today's society but, if it is to be done at the expense of our fundamental freedoms, then it must, in my view, be done in response to a serious threat to the well-being of the body politic or a substantial segment of it. The Chief Justice found this to be the case in PSAC v. Canada, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 424 (judgment released concurrently herewith), where the government's avowed objective was to fight inflation. Inflation is an economic problem that affects all the citizens of Canada and can, if uncontrolled, spark a national crisis or emergency: see Re Anti-Inflation Act, [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373. The evidence adduced in this case, in my view, falls far short of establishing economic harm to the dairy workers and the public which is in that category.

Between the two extremes of those who think that government should intervene in any labour dispute which harms the public or a segment of it and those firmly committed to the proposition that l'établissement de leurs propres conditions de travail. Il s'agit d'un exercice d'autonomie qui rehausse la dignité du travailleur en tant que personne.

Les discussions antérieures portant sur le moment où le gouvernement devrait intervenir pour interdire les grèves ont toujours été axées sur la question de savoir quand valait-il mieux que le gouvernement intervienne et non sur la question de savoir quand le gouvernement pouvait constitutionnellement le faire. L'alinéa 2*d*) de la Charte accorde maintenant une protection constitutionnelle à la liberté d'association et je suis d'accord avec le Juge en chef pour dire que la liberté d'association dans le contexte des relations de travail comprend la liberté de négocier collectivement et que la grève, à titre de caractéristique essentielle d'une négociation collective efficace, est également englobée par cette liberté. Toutefois, je ne puis conclure que la prévention d'un préjudice économique pour un secteur particulier constitue en soi un objectif gouvernemental suffisamment important pour justifier l'abrogation de la liberté garantie par l'al. 2*d*).

Je ne doute pas que la réglementation en matière économique est une importante fonction gouvernementale dans la société d'aujourd'hui, mais, si elle doit être accomplie aux dépens de nos libertés fondamentales, elle doit alors, à mon avis, faire suite à une menace grave au bien-être de l'État ou d'une partie importante de celui-ci. Le Juge en chef a conclu que c'était le cas dans l'arrêt AFPC c. Canada, [1987] 1 R.C.S. 424 (rendu en même temps que le présent arrêt), où l'objectif avoué du gouvernement était de combattre l'inflation. L'inflation est un problème économique qui touche tous les citoyens du Canada et qui peut, s'il n'est pas contrôlé, déclencher une crise ou un état d'urgence nationale: voir Renvoi: Loi anti-inflation, [1976] 2 R.C.S. 373. À mon avis, la preuve soumise en l'espèce n'établit pas que les producteurs laitiers et le public subiront un préjudice économique qui s'inscrit dans cette catégorie.

Entre les deux extrêmes que représentent, d'une part, ceux qui pensent que le gouvernement devrait intervenir dans tout conflit de travail qui porte préjudice au public ou à une partie de celui-ci et, any government intrusion on free collective bargaining is an intolerable violation of the fundamental human rights of the parties to the dispute (see the Woods Task Force Report on Canadian Industrial Relations (1968), at p. 130) are those who reluctantly acknowledge the right of government to intervene in work stoppages which pose a threat to life or health or result in the withdrawal of essential public services. Legislatures in Canada have frequently intervened to prevent strikes in "essential services". Essential services initially comprised such things as public utilities, transportation and communications but the legislative definitions have gradually expanded to cover firefighters and police and more recently the media, teachers and some classes of public employees.

What conclusion are we to draw from this progressive expansion of the concept of "essential services"? Is this the route through which increasing government intervention in labour disputes is to be justified, namely that more and more goods and services are to be designated "essential"? Or is there some other way in which the degree to which the public is affected by a particular labour dispute can be measured? Professor Arthurs says the public interest in a dispute cannot be measured in purely quantitative terms; it may affect the way of life of those affected by it and have qualitative aspects as well: H. W. Arthurs: "Public Interest Labor Disputes in Canada: A Legislative Perspective" (1967), 17 Buffalo L. Rev. 39, at p. 48. Nor can the degree of public interest be inferred from the fact that government has in fact intervened because each government intervention would then be used as a precedent to justify further intervention resulting in "an amoeba-like tendency of public interest disputes to reproduce themselves" (p. 52). Professor Arthurs provides no answer to this difficult question; he appears to accept government regulation of labour management relations as politically inevitable: H. W. Arthurs: "Free Collective Bargaining in a Regulated Society" published in The Direction of Labour Policy in d'autre part, ceux qui sont fermement d'avis que toute ingérence gouvernementale en matière de libre négociation collective constitue une violation intolérable des droits fondamentaux que possèdent, en tant que personnes, les parties au litige (voir le Rapport de l'Équipe spécialisée en relations de travail (1968), le rapport Woods aux pp. 143 et 144), il y a ceux qui reconnaissent à contrecœur que le gouvernement a le droit d'intervenir dans le cas d'arrêts de travail qui constituent une menace à la vie ou à la santé ou qui entraînent la cessation de la prestation de services publics essentiels. Les assemblées législatives au Canada sont souvent intervenues pour empêcher les grèves dans les «services essentiels». Au départ, les services essentiels comprenaient des choses comme les services publics, les transports et les communications, mais les définitions dans les lois ont progressivement évolué de manière à viser les pompiers et la police et plus récemment les médias, les enseignants et certaines catégories de fonctionnaires.

Quelle conclusion devons-nous tirer de cet élargissement progressif du concept des «services essentiels»? Est-ce là la manière de justifier une intervention gouvernementale accrue dans les conflits de travail, savoir que de plus en plus de biens et services doivent être désignés comme étant «essentiels»? Y a-t-il plutôt une autre manière de mesurer l'effet d'un conflit de travail particulier sur le public? Le professeur Arthurs affirme que l'intérêt public dans un conflit ne peut être mesuré de manière purement quantitative; il peut avoir un effet sur le mode de vie de ceux qu'il touche et comporter également des aspects qualitatifs: H. W. Arthurs: «Public Interest Labor Disputes in Canada: A Legislative Perspective» (1967), 17 Buffalo L. Rev. 39, à la p. 48. Le degré d'intérêt public ne peut pas non plus se déduire du fait que le gouvernement est effectivement intervenu parce que chaque intervention gouvernementale serait alors utilisée comme un précédent pour justifier une autre intervention, ce qui entraînerait une [TRADUCTION] «tendance des conflits d'intérêt public à se multiplier» (p. 52). Le professeur Arthurs ne répond pas à cette question épineuse; il semble accepter que la réglementation des relations de travail par le gouvernement est politiquement inévitable: H. W. Arthurs: «Free Collective Canada (McGill University Industrial Relations Centre, 1977), at p. 110. More and more inroads will be made into the concept of free collective bargaining, he says, and "we will stop paying lip service to the pristine ideal of labour and management autonomy" and "explicitly acknowledge the pre-eminence of public over private values in the industrial sector" (p. 112).

The difficulty with this critique, it seems to me, is that it fails to recognize that public and private interests are not being pitted against each other. What are being pitted against each other are two different kinds of public interest, the public interest in the continuation of services and the public interest in the freedom of workers to associate and act collectively. Whether Professor Arthur's gloomy prediction on the fate of collective bargaining in Canada absent the Charter is sound or not, the public interest in freedom of association is now a constitutionally protected value. The question, however, remains—and s. 1 of the Charter demands an answer—when is the public interest in the continuation of services so detrimentally affected by the collective bargaining process that its suspension is reasonable and justified in a free and democratic society? I say the continuation of services advisedly because it has not, in my opinion, been established that the provision of milk is an "essential" service in the same sense as hospitals, fire-fighters, police and the like are providing essential services. Certainly it is not an essential service within the definition adopted by the Chief Justice from the decisions of the Freedom of Association Committee of the I.L.O. I believe, therefore, that the answer is not to be found in the designation of more and more services as "essential".

The onus is, of course, on government to justify the suspension of the collective bargaining process under s. 1. As was noted in R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103, at p. 138:

Bargaining in a Regulated Society» publié dans The Direction of Labour Policy in Canada (McGill University Industrial Relations Centre, 1977), à la p. 110. Il dit qu'on empiétera de plus en plus sur le concept de la libre négociation collective et [TRADUCTION] «nous cesserons de rendre hommage pour la forme à l'idéal parfait de l'autonomie des salariés et du patronat» et [TRADUCTION] «nous reconnaîtrons explicitement la prééminence des valeurs publiques sur les valeurs privées dans le secteur industriel» (p. 112).

Il me semble que le problème que soulève cette critique est qu'elle ne reconnaît pas que les intérêts publics et privés ne sont pas en opposition. Ce sont deux genres différents d'intérêts publics qui sont opposés l'un à l'autre: l'intérêt public à ce que les services essentiels soient maintenus et l'intérêt public à ce que les travailleurs soient libres de s'associer et d'agir collectivement. Peu importe que soit fondée ou non la sombre prédiction du professeur Arthurs quant au sort de la négociation collective au Canada abstraction faite de la Charte, l'intérêt public à ce qu'il y ait liberté d'association constitue maintenant une valeur garantie par la Constitution. Toutefois, comme l'exige l'article premier de la Charte, il reste à répondre à la question de savoir quand le processus de négociation collective cause-t-il à l'intérêt public à ce que des services soient maintenus un préjudice suffisant pour que sa suspension soit raisonnable et justifiée dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique? C'est à dessein que j'ai parlé du maintien de services parce que, à mon avis, on n'a pas établi que l'approvisionnement en lait constitue un «service essentiel» dans le même sens que les hôpitaux, les pompiers, la police, et ainsi de suite, assurent des services essentiels. Il ne s'agit certainement pas d'un service essentiel au sens de la définition adoptée par le Juge en chef en s'inspirant des décisions du Comité de la liberté syndicale du B.I.T. Je suis donc d'avis que la réponse ne se trouve pas dans la désignation d'un nombre accru de services comme étant «essentiels».

Évidemment, il incombe au gouvernement de justifier la suspension du processus de négociation collective en vertu de l'article premier. Comme il a été souligné dans l'arrêt R. c. Oakes, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 103, à la p. 138:

Where evidence is required in order to prove the constituent elements of a s. 1 inquiry, and this will generally be the case, it should be cogent and persuasive and make clear to the Court the consequences of imposing or not imposing the limit.

The government called no evidence. The only evidence before the Court was introduced by the respondents. It consisted of affidavits sworn by union representatives and some newspaper clippings. Bayda C.J.S. of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal held the newspaper clippings inadmissible. As to the affidavits he said:

> ... the affidavits taken in their entirety say virtually nothing about the circumstances of the two companies, or of the producers of the milk, or of the consumers, all of whom presumably would be detrimentally affected if no limit were imposed.

(Re Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Locals 544, 496, 635 and 955 and Government of Saskatchewan (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 609, at p. 628.)

He concluded that there was not enough material before the Court to enable it to engage in the balancing process required to arrive at a decision on the reasonableness or otherwise of the limit.

Cameron J.A. agreed with Bayda C.J.S. that the government had failed to discharge its evidentiary burden under s. 1 of the Charter. He found that it had introduced no evidence to establish that the provision of milk was an "essential" service, that it would necessarily be unavailable to Saskatchewan residents if the work stoppage occurred, or that the "continued viability of the dairy industry in the province" was at stake.

On the subject of the newspaper clippings Cameron J.A. had this to say (at p. 649):

> This information was gleaned from the newspaper clippings which, as might be expected, contained a rich variety of comment and opinion, some of it conflicting, much of it colourful, and all of it devoted to the public advocacy of one side or another during the height of the conflict. One "spokesman" was reported to have said that, in the event of a work stoppage, milk "will flood in Lorsqu'une preuve est nécessaire pour établir les éléments constitutifs d'une analyse en vertu de l'article premier, ce qui est généralement le cas, elle doit être forte et persuasive et faire ressortir nettement à la cour les conséquences d'une décision d'imposer ou de ne pas imposer la restriction.

Le gouvernement n'a présenté aucun élément de preuve. La seule preuve dont dispose la Cour a été présentée, par les intimés. Elle est constituée d'affidavits de représentants syndicaux et de certaines coupures de journaux. Le juge en chef Bayda de la Cour d'appel de la Saskatchewan a jugé inadmissibles les coupures de journaux et a affirmé ceci au sujet des affidavits:

> [TRADUCTION] ... les affidavits dans l'ensemble n'apportent presque aucune précision concernant la situation des deux sociétés, des producteurs laitiers ou encore des consommateurs qui subiraient tous probablement un préjudice si aucune restriction n'était imposée.

(Re Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Locals 544, 496, 635 and 955 and Government of Saskatchewan (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 609, à la p. 628.)

Il a conclu que la cour n'avait pas suffisamment de données pour être en mesure de procéder à l'évaluation nécessaire pour aboutir à une décision sur le caractère raisonnable ou non de la restriction.

Le juge Cameron a convenu avec le juge en chef Bayda que le gouvernement ne s'était pas acquitté de la charge de la preuve qui lui incombait en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte. Il a conclu qu'il n'avait présenté aucun élément de preuve démontrant que l'approvisionnement en lait était un service «essentiel», que les résidents de la Saskatchewan en seraient nécessairement privés s'il survenait un arrêt de travail ou que la [TRADUCTION] «viabilité même de l'industrie laitière dans la province» était en jeu.

Voici ce que le juge Cameron a dit au sujet des coupures de journaux (à la p. 649):

> [TRADUCTION] Ces renseignements ont été tirés de coupures de journaux qui, comme on pourrait s'y attendre, contiennent un grand nombre d'observations et d'opinions dont certaines sont contradictoires et beaucoup sont imagées, et qui ont toutes été consacrées à la défense du public d'un côté ou de l'autre alors que le conflit était à son apogée. On rapporte qu'un «porte-

from Manitoba and Alberta as it always has"; others were quoted as having said producers would have to "dump their milk" by the thousands of gallons. Management representatives accused the unions of taking "a completely unrealistic position" in view of the 33 million dollar indebtedness of the companies, while the unions described the negotiations as a "farce, mickey mouse", especially since the companies were enjoying "windfall profits". All of this is the common fare of newspapers, and, while it may serve to permit the public, for its purposes, to make reasonably informed assessments of current events, it cannot, with respect, form the basis for judicial decision-making.

parole» a affirmé que s'il survient un arrêt de travail, le lait «coulera en provenance du Manitoba et de l'Alberta comme cela a toujours été le cas»; d'autres auraient dit que les producteurs seraient obligés de «jeter leur lait» par milliers de gallons. Les représentants de la direction ont accusé les syndicats d'adopter «une position complètement irréaliste» compte tenu de la dette de 33 millions de dollars des compagnies, alors que les syndicats ont décrit les négociations comme étant «une farce, une fumisterie», vu particulièrement que les sociétés réalisaient des «profits tombés du ciel». Cela est fréquent dans les journaux et, bien que cela puisse permettre au public, pour ses fins, d'évaluer d'une manière raisonnablement éclairée les événements qui se produisent, cela ne peut, avec égards, constituer le fondement d'une décision judiciaire.

While I doubt the soundness of Bayda C.J.S.'s finding that the newspaper clippings were wholly inadmissible, I certainly agree with Cameron J.A. as to their probative value. Indeed, it is because of their inherent frailties as hearsay evidence that newspaper clippings are not admissible in civil or criminal proceedings in England or in this country. I recognize, however, that a greater degree of latitude is appropriate for the purpose of establishing legislative facts in constitutional cases: see Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714. But the Court was quick to point out in that case that it was speaking only of "material not inherently unreliable" (p. 723). With respect, I think that is precisely what we have here and, even if some form of estoppel operates against the respondents because they were the ones who introduced the newspaper clippings into evidence, I do not believe that that can affect their weight as opposed to their admissibility.

Bien que je doute de la justesse de la conclusion du juge en chef Bayda portant que les coupures de journaux étaient entièrement inadmissibles, je partage certainement l'avis du juge Cameron en ce qui concerne leur valeur probante. En fait, c'est à cause de leur faiblesse inhérente à titre de preuve par ouï-dire que les coupures de journaux ne sont pas admissibles dans les instances civiles ou criminelles en Angleterre ou ici. Toutefois, je reconnais qu'une plus grande latitude est appropriée pour établir les faits législatifs dans les affaires constitutionnelles: voir Re Loi de 1979 sur la location résidentielle, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 714. Toutefois la Cour s'est empressée de souligner dans cet arrêt qu'elle ne parlait que des documents «qui ne sont pas douteux en soi» (p. 723). Avec égards, je crois que c'est précisément le cas en l'espèce et, même si une certaine forme d'irrecevabilité joue contre les intimés parce que ce sont eux qui ont soumis en preuve les coupures de journaux, je ne crois pas que cela puisse avoir un effet sur leur valeur probante par rapport à leur admissibilité.

Certainly, the newspaper clippings here do not meet Wigmore's test for an exception to the hearsay rule, namely 1) unavailability of the witnesses themselves to testify under oath and be cross-examined and 2) probable trustworthiness of their statements. This test was expressly adopted by this Court in Ares v. Venner, [1970] S.C.R. 608, at p. 620. The individuals whose statements are quoted in the clippings could easily have been called to the stand to give their evidence and be cross-examined on it. Instead, a weaker form of proof, newspaper Il est bien évident que les coupures de journaux en l'espèce ne satisfont pas au critère de Wigmore pour qu'on puisse faire exception à la règle du ouï-dire, savoir 1) la non-disponibilité des témoins eux-mêmes pour déposer sous serment et être contre-interrogés et 2) la véracité probable de leurs déclarations. Ce critère a été expressément adopté par cette Cour dans l'arrêt Ares c. Venner, [1970] R.C.S. 608, à la p. 620. Les personnes dont les déclarations sont citées dans les coupures auraient facilement pu être appelées à témoigner et à être clippings, was substituted. The Chief Justice quotes the President of the Saskatchewan Milk Producers' Association for the fact that huge quantities of milk would have to be dumped if the work stoppage lasted more than three days. The figure of a $250,000 per day loss to dairy farmers, which the Chief Justice accepts, comes from one Gunnar Pedersen, General Manager of Regina's Dairy Producers Co-operative Ltd. I do not believe that the statements of these and other interviewees meet Wigmore's test of trustworthiness. They were obviously using the media to try to persuade the public and the legislature of the justness of their cause. Their statements are completely self-serving. They are, moreover, offset by the equally self-serving excerpts from the interviewees on the other side of the debate who denied that dumping on that scale would take place or that the supply of milk to residents would be halted. According to them milk would simply be imported from the adjoining provinces as it had been in the past.

As Lord Reid said in Attorney-General v. Times Newspapers Ltd., [1974] A.C. 273, a contempt of court case, at p. 300:

> Responsible "mass media" will do their best to be fair, but there will also be ill-informed, slapdash or prejudiced attempts to influence the public. If people are led to think that it is easy to find the truth, disrespect for the processes of the law could follow, and, if mass media are allowed to judge, unpopular people and unpopular causes will fare very badly.

I think Cameron J.A. summed up very neatly the probative value of the newspaper clippings in the passage already quoted from his reasons.

Given, however, that there is a point at which government interference with the collective bargaining process is justified, how does the Court determine under s. 1 of the Charter when that point has been reached? It seems to me that the government must satisfy the court that as a minicontre-interrogées à ce sujet. On a plutôt remplacé leurs témoignages par une forme de preuve plus faible, savoir les coupures de journaux. Le Juge en chef cite le président de la Saskatchewan Milk Producers' Association quant au fait que d'énormes quantités de lait devraient être jetées si l'arrêt de travail durait plus de trois jours. Le chiffre de 250 000 $ par jour à titre de pertes que subiraient les producteurs laitiers, que le Juge en chef accepte, est donné par un nommé Gunnar Pedersen, directeur général de la Dairy Producers Co-operative Ltd. de Regina. Je ne crois pas que leurs déclarations et celles d'autres personnes interviewées satisfont au critère de véracité établi par Wigmore. De toute évidence, elles se sont servies des médias pour tenter de persuader le public et l'assemblée législative de la justesse de leur cause. Leurs déclarations ne servent que leurs propres fins. De plus, elles sont contrebalancées par des extraits qui servent également les propres fins des personnes interviewées pour la partie adverse qui ont nié qu'il y aurait un déversement de cette importance ou qu'on cesserait d'approvisionner en lait les résidents. Selon eux, le lait serait simplement importé des provinces voisines comme cela s'était fait par le passé.

Comme lord Reid l'a affirmé dans Attorney-General v. Times Newspapers Ltd., [1974] A.C. 273, une affaire d'outrage au tribunal, à la p. 300:

> [TRADUCTION] Les «masse-médias» responsables feront de leur mieux pour être justes, mais il y en aura qui tenteront d'influencer le public par des mauvais renseignements ou de manière insouciante ou partiale. Si on amène les gens à croire qu'il est facile de découvrir la vérité, il pourrait en résulter un manque de respect envers les voies de droit et, si l'on permet aux masse-médias de porter des jugements, les personnes impopulaires et les causes impopulaires s'en porteront très mal.

Je crois que le juge Cameron a très bien résumé la valeur probante des coupures de journaux dans le passage déjà cité de ses motifs.

Toutefois, étant donné qu'il y a un point où l'ingérence gouvernementale dans le processus de négociation collective est justifiée, comment la Cour détermine-t-elle, en vertu de l'article premier de la Charte, à quel moment ce point a été atteint? Selon moi, le gouvernement doit convaincre la cour mum the damage to the dairy industry as a consequence of the work stoppage would be considerably greater than that which would flow in the ordinary course of things from a work stoppage of reasonable duration. Industry and the public accept a certain amount of damage and inconvenience as the price of maintaining free negotiation in the work place. Such damage and inconvenience cannot therefore constitute the "pressing and substantial concern" which the Court held in Oakes was required in order to justify government intervention. Otherwise every work stoppage would give rise to a "pressing and substantial concern" and government intervention would be the rule rather than the exception. There has to be more to it than that.

The Chief Justice suggests that the test should be the extent of the economic harm likely to be suffered by third parties as a result of the work stoppage and he characterizes the dairy farmers as third parties for purposes of the test. I am not convinced that the dairy farmers can properly be considered third parties for this purpose. The respondents were employees of Palm Dairies Ltd. and the Dairy Producers Co-operative Ltd. The former owned two plants; the latter owned nine. The Dairy Producers Co-operative Ltd., as the name suggests, was owned by dairy farmers. I have difficulty in appreciating how the owners of a corporation involved in the strike as a principal can be viewed as innocent third parties for purposes of assessing the harm suffered by such parties. The Chief Justice expresses the view that government can more easily justify intervening to protect third parties under s. 1 than intervening to protect principal parties. This may as a general proposition be correct but why should the government be able to justify more easily the protection of owners of the corporation than the corporation itself? I think the flaw is in characterizing the dairy farmers as third parties.

The Chief Justice further suggests that in assessing the extent of the harm to third parties the relevant questions are how massive the harm is au moins que le préjudice que subirait l'industrie laitière par suite de l'arrêt de travail serait sensiblement plus grave que celui qui résulterait dans le cours ordinaire d'un arrêt de travail d'une durée raisonnable. L'industrie et le public acceptent un certain niveau de préjudices et d'inconvénients comme prix à payer pour conserver la liberté de négociation dans le milieu de travail. Par conséquent, ces préjudices et inconvénients ne peuvent constituer la «préoccupation urgente et réelle» qui, selon ce que la Cour a jugé dans l'arrêt Oakes, est nécessaire pour justifier l'intervention du gouvernement. Autrement, tout arrêt de travail engendrerait une «préoccupation urgente et réelle» et l'intervention gouvernementale serait la règle plutôt que l'exception. Il doit y avoir plus que cela.

Le Juge en chef laisse entendre que le critère applicable devrait être l'étendue du préjudice économique que subiront vraisemblablement les tiers par suite de l'arrêt de travail et il qualifie les producteurs laitiers de tiers pour les fins de ce critère. Je ne suis pas convaincue que l'on puisse à bon droit considérer les producteurs laitiers comme des tiers à cette fin. Les intimés étaient des employés de Palm Dairies Ltd. et de la Dairy Producers Co-operative Ltd. La première possédait deux usines et l'autre, neuf. La Dairy Producers Co-operative Ltd., comme son nom l'indique, était la propriété de producteurs laitiers. Il m'est difficile de voir comment les propriétaires d'une société mêlée à la grève comme partie principale peuvent être considérés comme des tiers innocents pour ce qui est d'évaluer le préjudice subi par ces parties. Le Juge en chef se dit d'avis qu'il est plus facile pour le gouvernement de justifier une intervention destinée à protéger les tiers en vertu de l'article premier qu'une intervention visant à protéger les parties principales. Cela peut être exact comme proposition générale, mais pourquoi le gouvernement devrait-il être en mesure de justifier plus facilement la protection des propriétaires de la société plutôt que celle de la société elle-même? J'estime que le problème réside dans la qualification des producteurs laitiers comme étant des tiers.

De plus, le Juge en chef laisse entendre que, dans l'évaluation de l'étendue du préjudice subi par les tiers, les questions pertinentes consistent à and how focussed in its intensity. Those questions can, in my opinion, only be answered on the basis of evidence adduced in the case. They cannot be answered in the abstract. But, in my view, they become relevant only when the primary threshold of damage which is the inevitable concomitant of the work stoppage has been crossed. The government must stay its hand in order to give the process an opportunity to work. It must, in other words, distinguish between the permissible degree of harm which is the price of the system and the impermissible degree when that price becomes inordinately high.

As Bayda C.J.S. pointed out, we simply do not have a basis of solid fact in this case on which to make a judgment as to whether the government's intervention was reasonable or not. The government has simply failed to discharge its onus under s. 1 and the infringement of the respondents' freedom of association under s. 2(d) of the Charter has accordingly not been demonstrably justified.

Even, however, if I am wrong in that and the government has established that its objective in protecting the economic interests of dairy farmers was sufficiently compelling to justify overriding the workers' right to strike, the government, in my view, has failed to show that the means employed by it were closely tailored to the objective so as to ensure the least possible infringement of the right. The government, in its legislation, forbade any lock-out or strike action. It provided for compulsory arbitration. The government, in my view, should not automatically respond with a total strike ban and the institution of compulsory arbitration. In some cases, a partial strike ban will achieve the government objective of preventing harm that in the Chief Justice's words is "massive, immediate and focussed" or in my words "would be considerably greater than that which would flow in the ordinary course of things from a work stoppage of reasonable duration". In the complex area of economic harm the tailoring need not be exact but tailoring there must be. There may be cases, of course, where the government in order to prevent déterminer la gravité du préjudice subi et la mesure dans laquelle ses effets sont concentrés. À mon avis, on ne peut répondre à ces questions qu'en fonction de la preuve produite en l'espèce. Il n'est pas possible d'y répondre dans l'abstrait. J'estime toutefois qu'elles ne deviennent pertinentes qu'une fois franchi le stade primaire du préjudice qui découle inévitablement de l'arrêt de travail. Le gouvernement doit se retenir d'agir afin de donner au processus une chance de fonctionner. En d'autres termes, il doit faire la distinction entre le degré de préjudice acceptable qui est le prix du système à payer et le degré inacceptable qui se présente lorsque ce prix à payer devient excessif.

Comme le juge en chef Bayda l'a souligné, nous n'avons tout simplement pas, en l'espèce, de base factuelle solide qui nous permette de nous prononcer sur la question de savoir si l'intervention du gouvernement était raisonnable ou non. Le gouvernement ne s'est tout simplement pas acquitté de l'obligation que lui impose l'article premier, et n'a donc pas démontré que la violation de la liberté d'association des intimés visée à l'al. 2*d*) de la Charte était justifiée.

Toutefois, même à supposer que j'aie tort sur ce point et que le gouvernement a établi que l'objectif qu'il poursuivait en protégeant les intérêts économiques des producteurs laitiers était suffisamment impérieux pour justifier la suppression du droit de grève des travailleurs, j'estime que le gouvernement n'a pas démontré que les moyens auxquels il a eu recours étaient directement adaptés à cet objectif de manière à assurer que l'on porterait le moins possible atteinte à ce droit. Par la loi qu'il a adoptée, le gouvernement a interdit tout lock-out ou toute grève. Il a prescrit l'arbitrage obligatoire. À mon avis, le gouvernement ne devrait pas répondre automatiquement par une interdiction totale de faire grève et par l'imposition de l'arbitrage obligatoire. Dans certains cas, une interdiction partielle de faire grève permettra de réaliser l'objectif du gouvernement d'empêcher que ne soit causé un préjudice qui, pour reprendre les termes du Juge en chef, est «considérable, immédiat et concentré» ou qui, selon mes propres termes, «serait sensiblement plus grave que celui qui résulterait dans le cours ordinaire d'un arrêt de travail grave economic harm would have to limit the right to strike to a point where it would be rendered ineffective. In such a case, the government could and indeed would have a constitutional duty to institute compulsory arbitration. In this case, the government has not established that it had to institute a total strike ban and compulsory arbitration. The affidavits of the respondents indicate that they felt they would have an effective strike weapon if they were allowed to engage in a series of rotating strikes that would have allowed the industry to continue functioning at 85 per cent of normal capacity. The government has not contended that such a partial strike would have had unacceptable costs to dairy farmers. I do not see why an employer's total lock-out in response to a proposed partial strike should relieve the government of its duty to tailor its legislative response. If it does, the employer has readily at hand the means to escalate the economic harm to third parties so as to warrant a total strike ban in all cases. It seems to me that if the Saskatchewan Government wished to maintain an even hand between employer and employees, it could have tailored its legislative response in this case by instituting a partial ban on both strike and lock-out. This would have attained its objective while at the same time meeting the proportionality test enunciated in Oakes.

d'une durée raisonnable.» Dans le domaine complexe du préjudice économique, l'«adaptation» est obligatoire quoiqu'elle n'ait pas à être parfaite. Il va de soi qu'il peut y avoir des cas où, pour prévenir un grave préjudice économique, le gouvernement devrait limiter le droit de grève au point de le rendre inefficace. Le cas échéant, le gouvernement pourrait et, en fait, devrait en vertu de la Constitution imposer l'arbitrage obligatoire. En l'espèce, le gouvernement n'a pas démontré qu'il se devait de prescrire une interdiction totale de grève et l'arbitrage obligatoire. Il ressort des affidavits des intimés que ceux-ci ont considéré qu'ils disposeraient d'une arme efficace s'il leur était permis d'entreprendre une série de grèves tournantes qui permettraient à l'industrie de continuer de fonctionner dans une proportion de 85 pour 100 de son rendement normal. Le gouvernement n'a pas soutenu qu'une telle grève partielle aurait occasionné des coûts inacceptables aux producteurs laitiers. Je ne vois pas pourquoi l'imposition d'un lock-out total par l'employeur, suite à un projet de grève partielle, devrait dégager le gouvernement de son obligation d'adapter sa réponse législative. Le cas échéant, l'employeur dispose facilement des moyens pour intensifier le préjudice économique causé aux tiers de manière à justifier une interdiction totale dans tous les cas. Il me semble que si le gouvernement de la Saskatchewan avait voulu maintenir l'égalité entre employeur et employés, il aurait pu adapter sa réponse législative en l'espèce en décrétant une interdiction partielle à la fois de faire la grève et d'imposer un lock-out. Cela lui aurait permis d'atteindre son objectif tout en satisfaisant au critère de proportionnalité énoncé dans l'arrêt Oakes.

The second objective advanced by the government in support of the limitation on the freedom under s. 2(d) is that the dairy workers provide an essential service, the delivery of an important food product to the consumer, and that the cessation of such delivery might threaten the health of part of the population. There is no evidence to support this allegation. Milk is undoubtedly an important food product but there may be other food products which are an adequate substitute. We simply do not know. Further, as Cameron J.A. of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal observed, there is no

Le second objectif invoqué par le gouvernement à l'appui de la restriction de la liberté que prévoit l'al. 2*d*), porte que les travailleurs de l'industrie laitière fournissent un service essentiel, soit la livraison aux consommateurs d'un produit alimentaire important, et que l'arrêt de cette livraison pourrait mettre en danger la santé d'une partie de la population. Aucun élément de preuve n'a été présenté à l'appui de cet argument. Le lait est sans aucun doute un produit alimentaire important, mais il peut exister d'autres produits alimentaires pour le remplacer adéquatement. Nous ne le evidence that milk would not be imported from outside the province to supply the Saskatchewan consumer: Re Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, supra, at p. 651. No threat to the health of Saskatchewan consumers has therefore been established.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs. I agree with the Chief Justice's answer to the first constitutional question. I would answer the second constitutional question in the negative.

Appeal allowed, WILSON J. dissenting.

Solicitor for the appellants: James P. Taylor, Regina.

Solicitors for the respondents: Mitchell Taylor Romanow Ching, Saskatoon.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada: Roger Tassé, Ottawa.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General for Ontario: Archie Campbell, Toronto.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia: The Ministry of the Attorney General, Victoria.

Solicitors for the intervener the Attorney General for Alberta: McLennan Ross, Edmonton.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Manitoba: Tanner Elton, Winnipeg.

savons tout simplement pas. En outre, comme le juge Cameron de la Cour d'appel de la Saskatchewan l'a fait remarquer, il n'y aucun élément de preuve démontrant que le lait ne serait pas importé de l'extérieur de la province pour approvisionner les consommateurs de la Saskatchewan: Re Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, précité, à la p. 651. Par conséquent, on n'a établi l'existence d'aucune menace à la santé des consommateurs de la Saskatchewan.

Je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi avec dépens. Je fais mienne la réponse du Juge en chef à la première question constitutionnelle. Je suis d'avis de répondre par la négative à la seconde question constitutionnelle.

Pourvoi accueilli, le juge WILSON dissidente.

Procureur des appelants: James P. Taylor, Regina.

Procureurs des intimés: Mitchell Taylor Romanow Ching, Saskatoon.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada: Roger Tassé, Ottawa.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario: Archie Campbell, Toronto.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique: Le ministère du Procureur général, Victoria.

Procureurs de l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta: McLennan Ross, Edmonton.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général du Manitoba: Tanner Elton, Winnipeg.

Law Society of Alberta

Code of Conduct

February 20, 2020

Table of Contents

Introduction

The Law Society of Alberta participated with the Federation of Law Societies of Canada in the development of a Model Code of Conduct from 2004 to 2010. The Professional Responsibility Committee and the Benchers then undertook a thorough review to ensure that the Model Code was current and complied with Alberta law and practice. Alberta lawyers will find the format and paragraph numbering new. At the same time, the content preserves much of the commentary, cross referencing and legal referencing characteristic of the former Code of Professional Conduct that served so well as a practical guide to lawyer conduct.

The practice of law continues to evolve. That is mainly why the Law Society has adopted the Code of Conduct set out in the following pages. Interprovincial lawyer mobility, anticipated in 1995, has arrived as a reality and allows lawyers to practice in every province and territory in the country. National and regional law firms are prevalent and international firms are emerging. The establishment of uniform national ethical standards is also important to the tradition of a strong independent bar. These factors all favor the establishment of national standards governing lawyer conduct.

The Alberta Code of Professional Conduct was introduced in 1995. The drafters intended to provide Alberta lawyers with practical guidance about the rules governing ethical conduct and clear direction when exercising professional judgment about them. They succeeded admirably. The following Preface is retained from the 1995 Alberta Code because it expresses the timeless nature of lawyers' professional obligations in the unambiguous language characteristic of the whole document.

Preface

Lawyers have traditionally played a vital role in the protection and advancement of individual rights and liberties in a democratic society. Fulfillment of this role requires an understanding and appreciation by lawyers of their relationship to society and the legal system. By defining and clarifying expectations and standards of behaviour that will be applied to lawyers, the Code of Conduct is intended to serve a practical as well as a motivational function.

Two fundamental principles underlie this Code and are implicit throughout its provisions. First, a lawyer is expected to establish and maintain a reputation for integrity, the most important attribute of a member of the legal profession. Second, a lawyer's conduct should be above reproach. While the Law Society is empowered by statute to declare any conduct deserving of sanction, whether or not it is related to a lawyer's practice, personal behaviour is unlikely to be disciplined unless it is dishonourable or otherwise indicates an unsuitability to practise law. However, regardless of the possibility of formal sanction, a lawyer should observe the highest standards of conduct on both a personal and professional level so as to retain the trust, respect and confidence of colleagues and members of the public.

The legal profession is largely self-governing and is therefore impressed with special responsibilities. For example, its rules and regulations must be cast in the public interest, and its members have an obligation to seek observance of those rules on an individual and collective basis. However, the rules and regulations of the Law Society cannot exhaustively cover all situations that may confront a lawyer, who may find it necessary to also consider legislation relating to lawyers, other legislation, or general moral principles in determining an appropriate course of action.

Disciplinary assessment of a lawyer's conduct will be based on all facts and circumstances as they existed at the time of the conduct, including the willfulness and seriousness of the conduct, the existence of previous violations and any mitigating factors.

A member of the Law Society remains subject to this Code no matter where the member practises law. If a lawyer becomes a member of the bar of another jurisdiction in addition to that of Alberta, and there is an inconsistency or conflict between the rules of conduct of the two jurisdictions in a given instance, the rules of the jurisdiction in which the lawyer is practising in that matter will normally prevail. However, the Law Society continues to have jurisdiction over the lawyer. Disciplinary proceedings by another governing body may form the basis for proceedings in Alberta.

The willingness and determination of the profession to achieve widespread compliance with this Code is a more powerful and fundamental enforcement mechanism than the imposition of sanctions by the Law Society. A lawyer must therefore be vigilant with respect to the lawyer's own behaviour as well as that of colleagues. However, it is inconsistent with the spirit of this Code to use any of its provisions as an instrument of harassment or as a procedural weapon in the absence of a genuine concern respecting the interests of a client, the profession or the public.

Chapter 1 – Interpretation and Definitions

1.1 Definitions

1.1-1 In this Code, unless the context indicates otherwise,

"associate" includes:

(a) a lawyer who practises law in a law firm through an employment or other contractual relationship; and

(b) a non-lawyer employee of a multi-discipline practice providing services that support or supplement the practice of law;

"client" includes a client of a lawyer's firm, whether or not the lawyer handles the client's work, and may include a person who reasonably believes that a lawyer-client relationship exists, whether or not that is the case at law;

Commentary

[1] A lawyer-client relationship is often established without formality. For example, an express retainer or remuneration is not required for a lawyer-client relationship to arise. Also, in some circumstances, a lawyer may have legal and ethical responsibilities similar to those arising from a lawyer-client relationship. For example, a lawyer may meet with a prospective client in circumstances that give rise to a duty of confidentiality, and, even though no lawyer-client relationship is ever actually established, the lawyer may have a disqualifying conflict of interest if he or she were later to act against the prospective client. It is, therefore, in a lawyer's own interest to carefully manage the establishment of a lawyer-client relationship.

"conflict of interest" means the existence of a substantial risk that a lawyer's loyalty to or representation of a client would be materially and adversely affected by the lawyer's own interest or the lawyer's duties to another client, a former client, or a third person;

"consent" means fully informed and voluntary consent after disclosure

(a) in writing, provided that, if more than one person consents, each signs the same or a separate document recording the consent; or

(b) orally, provided that each person consenting receives a separate letter recording the consent;

"disclosure" means full and fair disclosure of all information relevant to a person's decision (including, where applicable, those matters referred to in commentary in this Code), in sufficient time for the person to make a genuine and independent decision, and the taking of reasonable steps to ensure understanding of the matters disclosed;

"law firm" includes one or more lawyers practising:

- (a) in a sole proprietorship;
- (b) in a partnership;
- (c) as a clinic operated by Legal Aid Alberta;
- (d) in a government, a Crown corporation or any other public body; or
- (e) in a corporation or other organization;
- (f) from the same premises, while expressly or impliedly holding themselves out to be practising law together and indicating a commonality of practice through physical layout of office space, firm name, letterhead, signage and business cards, reception and telephone-answering services, or the sharing of office systems and support staff;
- (g) from the same premises and indicating that their practices are independent.

"lawyer" means an active member of the Society, an inactive member of the Society, a suspended member of the Society, a student-at-law and a lawyer entitled to practise law in another jurisdiction who is entitled to practise law in Alberta. A reference to "lawyer" includes the lawyer's firm and each firm member except where expressly stated otherwise or excluded by the context;

"limited scope retainer" means an agreement for the provision of legal services for part, but not all, of a client's legal matter;

"Society" means the Law Society of Alberta;

"tribunal" includes a court, board, arbitrator, mediator, administrative agency or other body that resolves disputes, regardless of its function or the informality of its procedures.

Chapter 2 – Standards of the Legal Profession

2.1 Integrity

2.1-1 A lawyer has a duty to carry on the practice of law and discharge all responsibilities to clients, tribunals, the public and other members of the profession honourably and with integrity.

Commentary

[1] Integrity is the fundamental quality of any person who seeks to practise as a member of the legal profession. If a client has any doubt about his or her lawyer's trustworthiness, the essential element in the true lawyer-client relationship will be missing. If integrity is lacking, the lawyer's usefulness to the client and reputation within the profession will be destroyed, regardless of how competent the lawyer may be.

[2] Public confidence in the administration of justice and in the legal profession may be eroded by a lawyer's irresponsible conduct. Accordingly, a lawyer's conduct should reflect favourably on the legal profession, inspire the confidence, respect and trust of clients and of the community, and avoid even the appearance of impropriety.

[3] Dishonourable or questionable conduct on the part of a lawyer in either private life or professional practice will reflect adversely upon the integrity of the profession and the administration of justice. Whether within or outside the professional sphere, if the conduct is such that knowledge of it would be likely to impair a client's trust in the lawyer, the Society may be justified in taking disciplinary action.

[4] Generally, however, the Society will not be concerned with the purely private or extra-professional activities of a lawyer that do not bring into question the lawyer's professional integrity.

2.1-2 A lawyer has a duty to uphold the standards and reputation of the legal profession and to assist in the advancement of its goals, organizations and institutions.

Commentary

[1] Collectively, lawyers are encouraged to enhance the profession through activities such as:

(a) sharing knowledge and experience with colleagues and students informally in day-to-day practice as well as through contribution to professional journals and publications, support of law school projects and participation in panel discussions, legal education seminars, bar admission courses and university lectures;

(b) participating in legal aid and community legal services programs or providing legal services on a pro bono basis;

(c) filling elected and volunteer positions with the Society;

(d) acting as directors, officers and members of local, provincial, national and international bar associations and their various committees and sections; and

(e) acting as directors, officers and members of non-profit or charitable organizations.

Chapter 3 – Relationships to Clients

3.1 Competence

Definitions

3.1-1 In this rule

"competent lawyer" means a lawyer who has and applies relevant knowledge, skills and attributes in a manner appropriate to each matter undertaken on behalf of a client and the nature and terms of the lawyer's engagement, including:

- (a) knowing general legal principles and procedures and the substantive law and procedure for the areas of law in which the lawyer practises;
- (b) investigating facts, identifying issues, ascertaining client objectives, considering possible options and developing and advising the client on appropriate courses of action;
- (c) implementing as each matter requires, the chosen course of action through the application of appropriate skills, including:
  - (i) legal research;
  - (ii) analysis;
  - (iii) application of the law to the relevant facts;
  - (iv) writing and drafting;
  - (v) negotiation;
  - (vi) alternative dispute resolution;
  - (vii) advocacy; and
  - (viii) problem solving;
- (d) communicating with the client at all relevant stages of a matter in a timely and effective manner;
- (e) performing all functions conscientiously, diligently and in a timely and cost-effective manner;
- (f) applying intellectual capacity, judgment and deliberation to all functions;
- (g) complying in letter and spirit with all rules pertaining to the appropriate professional conduct of lawyers;

(h) recognizing limitations in one's ability to handle a matter or some aspect of it and taking steps accordingly to ensure the client is appropriately served;

(i) managing one's practice effectively;

(j) pursuing appropriate professional development to maintain and enhance legal knowledge and skills; and

(k) otherwise adapting to changing professional requirements, standards, techniques and practices.

Competence

3.1-2 A lawyer must perform all legal services undertaken on a client's behalf to the standard of a competent lawyer.

Commentary

[1] As a member of the legal profession, a lawyer is held out as knowledgeable, skilled and capable in the practice of law. Accordingly, the client is entitled to assume that the lawyer has the ability and capacity to deal adequately with all legal matters to be undertaken on the client's behalf.

[2] Competence is founded upon both ethical and legal principles. This rule addresses the ethical principles. Competence involves more than an understanding of legal principles: it involves an adequate knowledge of the practice and procedures by which such principles can be effectively applied. To accomplish this, the lawyer should keep abreast of developments in all areas of law in which the lawyer practises.

[3] In deciding whether the lawyer has employed the requisite degree of knowledge and skill in a particular matter, relevant factors will include:

(a) the complexity and specialized nature of the matter;

(b) the lawyer's general experience;

(c) the lawyer's training and experience in the field;

(d) the preparation and study the lawyer is able to give the matter; and

(e) whether it is appropriate or feasible to refer the matter to, or associate or consult with, a lawyer of established competence in the field in question.

[4] In some circumstances, expertise in a particular field of law may be required; often the necessary degree of proficiency will be that of the general practitioner.

[5] To maintain the required level of competence, a lawyer should develop an understanding of, and ability to use, technology relevant to the nature and area of the lawyer's practice and responsibilities. A lawyer should understand the benefits and risks associated with relevant technology, recognizing the lawyer's duty to protect confidential information set out in Rule 3.3.

[6] The required level of technological competence will depend on whether the use or understanding of technology is necessary to the nature and area of the lawyer's practice and responsibilities and whether the relevant technology is reasonably available to the lawyer. In determining whether technology is reasonably available, consideration should be given to factors including:

(a) the lawyer's or law firm's practice areas;

(b) the geographic locations of the lawyer's or firm's practice; and

(c) the requirements of clients.

[7] A lawyer should not undertake a matter without honestly feeling competent to handle it, or being able to become competent without undue delay, risk or expense to the client. The lawyer who proceeds on any other basis is not being honest with the client. This is an ethical consideration and is distinct from the standard of care that a tribunal would invoke for purposes of determining negligence.

[8] A lawyer must recognize a task for which the lawyer lacks competence and the disservice that would be done to the client by undertaking that task. If consulted about such a task, the lawyer should:

(a) decline to act;

(b) make reasonable efforts to assist the client to obtain competent legal representation from another lawyer;

(c) obtain the client's instructions to retain, consult or collaborate with a lawyer who is competent for that task; or

(d) obtain the client's consent for the lawyer to become competent without undue delay, risk or expense to the client.

[9] The lawyer should also recognize that competence for a particular task may require seeking advice from or collaborating with experts in scientific, accounting or other non-legal fields, and, when it is appropriate, the lawyer should not hesitate to seek the client's instructions to consult experts.

[10] Lawyers owe clients a duty of competence, regardless of whether the retainer is a full service or a limited scope retainer. When a lawyer considers whether to provide legal services under a limited scope retainer, the lawyer must consider whether the limitation is reasonable in the circumstances. For example, some matters may be too complex to offer legal services pursuant to a limited scope retainer. (See Rule 3.2-2).

[11] A lawyer should clearly specify the facts, circumstances and assumptions on which an opinion is based, particularly when the circumstances do not justify an exhaustive investigation and the resultant expense to the client. However, unless the client instructs otherwise, the lawyer should investigate the matter in sufficient detail to be able to express an opinion rather than mere comments with many qualifications. A lawyer should only express his or her legal opinion when it is genuinely held.

[12] A lawyer should be wary of providing unreasonable or over-confident assurances to the client, especially when the lawyer's employment or retainer may depend upon advising in a particular way.

[13] In addition to opinions on legal questions, a lawyer may be asked for or may be expected to give advice on non-legal matters such as the business, economic, policy or social complications involved in the question or the course the client should choose. In many instances the lawyer's experience will be such that the lawyer's views on non-legal matters will be of real benefit to the client. The lawyer who expresses views on such matters should, if necessary and to the extent necessary, point out any lack of experience or other qualification in the particular field and should clearly distinguish legal advice from other advice.

[14] In a multi-discipline practice, a lawyer must ensure that the client is made aware that the legal advice from the lawyer may be supplemented by advice or services from a non-lawyer. Advice or services from non-lawyer members of the firm unrelated to the retainer for legal services must be provided independently of and outside the scope of the legal services retainer and from a location separate from the premises of the multi-discipline practice. The provision of non-legal advice or services unrelated to the legal services retainer will also be subject to the constraints outlined in the rules/by-laws/regulations governing multi-discipline practices.

[15] The requirement of conscientious, diligent and efficient service means that a lawyer should make every effort to provide timely service to the client. If the lawyer can reasonably foresee undue delay in providing advice or services, the client should be so informed.

[16] The lawyer should refrain from conduct that may interfere with or compromise his or her capacity or motivation to provide competent legal services to the client and be aware of any factor or circumstance that may have that effect.

[17] A lawyer who is incompetent does the client a disservice, brings discredit to the profession and may bring the administration of justice into disrepute. In addition to damaging the lawyer's own reputation and practice, incompetence may also injure the lawyer's partners and associates.

Incompetence, Negligence and Mistakes

[18] This rule does not require a standard of perfection. An error or omission, even though it might be actionable for damages in negligence or contract, will not necessarily constitute a failure to maintain the standard of professional competence described by the rule. However, evidence of gross neglect in a particular matter or a pattern of neglect or mistakes in different matters may be evidence of such a failure, regardless of tort liability. While damages may be awarded for negligence, incompetence can give rise to the additional sanction of disciplinary action.

3.2 Quality of Service

Quality of Service

3.2-1 A lawyer has a duty to provide courteous, thorough and prompt service to clients. The quality of service required of a lawyer is service that is competent, timely, conscientious, diligent, efficient and civil.

Commentary

[1] This rule should be read and applied in conjunction with Rule 3.1 regarding competence.

[2] A lawyer has a duty to provide a quality of service at least equal to that which lawyers generally expect of a competent lawyer in a like situation. An ordinarily or otherwise competent lawyer may still occasionally fail to provide an adequate quality of service.

[3] A lawyer has a duty to communicate effectively with the client. What is effective will vary depending on the nature of the retainer, the needs and sophistication of the client and the need for the client to make fully informed decisions and provide instructions. A lawyer must use reasonable efforts to ensure that the client comprehends the lawyer's advice and recommendations.

[4] A lawyer should ensure that matters are attended to within a reasonable time frame. If the lawyer can reasonably foresee undue delay in providing advice or services, the lawyer has a duty to so inform the client, so that the client can make an informed choice about his or her options, such as whether to retain new counsel.

Examples of expected practices

[5] The quality of service to a client may be measured by the extent to which a lawyer maintains certain standards in practice. The following list, which is illustrative and not exhaustive, provides key examples of expected practices in this area:

(a) keeping a client reasonably informed;

(b) answering reasonable requests from a client for information;

(c) responding to a client's telephone calls and emails;

(d) keeping appointments with a client, or providing a timely explanation or apology when unable to keep such an appointment;

(e) taking appropriate steps to do something promised to a client, or informing or explaining to the client when it is not possible to do so; ensuring, where appropriate, that all instructions are in writing or confirmed in writing;

(f) answering, within a reasonable time, any communication that requires a reply;

(g) ensuring that work is done in a timely manner so that its value to the client is maintained;

(h) providing quality work and giving reasonable attention to the review of documentation to avoid delay and unnecessary costs to correct errors or omissions;

(i) maintaining office staff, facilities and equipment adequate to the lawyer's practice;

(j) informing a client of a proposal of settlement, and explaining the proposal properly;

(k) providing a client with complete and accurate relevant information about a matter;

(l) making a prompt and complete report when the work is finished or, if a final report cannot be made, providing an interim report when one might reasonably be expected;

(m) avoiding the use of intoxicants or drugs that interfere with or prejudice the lawyer's services to the client;

(n) being civil.

[6] A lawyer should meet deadlines, unless the lawyer is able to offer a reasonable explanation and ensure that no prejudice to the client will result. Whether or not a specific deadline applies, a lawyer should be prompt in handling a matter, responding to communications and reporting developments to the client. In the absence of developments, contact with the client should be maintained to the extent the client reasonably expects.

Limited Scope Retainers

3.2-2 Before undertaking a limited scope retainer the lawyer must advise the client about the nature, extent and scope of the services that the lawyer can provide and must confirm in writing to the client as soon as practicable what services will be provided.

Commentary

[1] The scope of the service to be provided should be discussed with the client, and the client's acknowledgement and understanding of the risks and limitations of the retainer should be confirmed in writing. The lawyer should clearly identify the tasks for which the lawyer and the client are each responsible. The lawyer should advise the client about related legal issues which fall outside the scope of the limited scope retainer, and advise the client of the consequences of limiting the scope of the retainer, to allow the client to have enough information on which to base a decision to limit or expand the retainer.

[2] A lawyer who is providing legal services under a limited scope retainer should be careful to avoid acting in a way that suggests that the lawyer is providing full services to the client. Modifications to the scope of the limited scope retainer, or the obligations of the client and lawyer, should be confirmed in writing. The lawyer should also consider advising the client when the lawyer's retainer has ended.

[3] Where the limited services being provided include an appearance before a tribunal a lawyer must be careful not to mislead the tribunal as to the scope of the retainer. Lawyers should consider whether disclosure of the limited nature of the retainer is required by the rules of practice governing a particular tribunal or other circumstances.

[4] In Alberta, Rule 2.27 of the Rules of Court requires lawyers to inform the court if the lawyer is retained for a limited or particular purpose.

[5] When one party is receiving legal services pursuant to a limited scope retainer, the lawyers representing all the parties in the matter should consider how communications from opposing counsel in a matter should be managed. (See Rule 7.2-9).

[6] This rule does not apply to situations in which a lawyer is providing summary advice or to initial consultations that may result in the client retaining the lawyer.

[7] Summary advice may include advice received in a brief consultation on a telephone hotline or from duty counsel, for example, or may otherwise be advice which is received during the provision of short-term legal services, described in Rule 3.4-15.

Honesty and Candour

3.2-3 When advising a client, a lawyer must be honest and candid and must inform the client of all information known to the lawyer that may affect the interests of the client in the matter.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer should disclose to the client all the circumstances of the lawyer's relations to the parties and interest in or connection with the matter, if any, that might influence whether the client selects or continues to retain the lawyer.

[2] A lawyer's duty to a client who seeks legal advice is to give the client a competent opinion based on a sufficient knowledge of the relevant facts, an adequate consideration of the applicable law and the lawyer's own experience and expertise. The advice must be open and undisguised and must clearly disclose what the lawyer honestly thinks about the merits and probable results.

[3] Occasionally, a lawyer must be firm with a client. Firmness, without rudeness, is not a violation of the rule. In communicating with the client, the lawyer may disagree with the client's perspective, or may have concerns about the client's position on a matter, and may give advice that will not please the client. This may legitimately require firm and animated discussion with the client.

Client Instructions

3.2-4 A lawyer must obtain instructions from the client on all matters not falling within the express or implied authority of the lawyer.

Commentary

[1] Assuming that there are no practical exigencies requiring a lawyer to act for a client without prior consultation, the lawyer must consider before each decision in a matter whether and to what extent the client should be consulted or informed. Even an apparently routine step that clearly falls within the lawyer's authority may warrant prior consultation, depending on circumstances such as a particular client's desire to be involved in the day to day conduct of a matter.

[2] A lawyer has an ethical obligation to put all settlement offers to the client and to obtain specific instructions with regard to making or accepting settlement offers on a client's behalf (see Rule 3.2-1). In addition, certain decisions in litigation, such as how a criminal defendant will plead, whether a client will testify, whether to waive a jury trial and whether to appeal, require prior discussion with the client. As to other, less fundamental decisions, if there is any doubt in the lawyer's mind as to whether the client should be consulted, it is most prudent to do so.

[3] If a client persistently refuses or fails to provide instructions, the lawyer is entitled to withdraw (see Rule 3.7-2). If, however, the failure to provide instructions is due to the client's disappearance or incapacity, the lawyer has additional duties to attend to before withdrawal is justified (see Rules 3.2-5 and 3.2-15 and accompanying commentaries).

[4] When acting for a corporation, on an in house basis or otherwise, a lawyer may encounter difficulty in identifying who within the corporation has authority to give instructions and receive advice on the client's behalf. In this regard, see Rule 3.2-9 and related commentary.

3.2-5 When a lawyer is unable to obtain instructions from a client because the client cannot be located, the lawyer must make reasonable efforts to locate the client.

Commentary

[1] Circumstances dictating the extent of a lawyer's efforts to locate a missing client include the facts giving rise to the inability to contact the client and importance of the issue on which instructions are sought. A wilful disappearance may mandate a less strenuous attempt at location, while the potential loss of a significant right or remedy will require greater efforts. In the latter case, the lawyer should take such steps as are reasonably necessary and in accordance with the lawyer's implied authority to preserve the right or remedy in the meantime. Once a matter moves beyond the implied authority of the lawyer and all attempts to locate the client have been unsuccessful, the lawyer may be compelled to withdraw since a representation may not be continued in the absence of proper instructions.

3.2-6 When receiving instructions from a third party on behalf of a client, a lawyer must ensure that the instructions accurately reflect the wishes of the client.

Commentary

[1] It is not inherently improper for a lawyer to accept instructions on a client's behalf from someone other than the client. For example, a client may be indisposed or unavailable and therefore unable to provide instructions directly, or a lawyer may be retained at the suggestion of another advisor, such as an accountant, with the result that at least the initial contact is made by the advisor on the client's behalf.

{2] In these circumstances a lawyer must verify that the instructions are accurate and were given freely and voluntarily by a client having the capacity to do so. The lawyer's freedom of access to the client must be unrestricted. In certain situations it may be appropriate for the lawyer to insist on meeting alone with the client (see also Rule 3.2-1 and related commentary).

[3] From time to time a lawyer is retained and paid by one party but requested to prepare a document for execution by another party. While on a technical analysis the instructing party may be the client, the facts may indicate a relationship with the other party as well that carries with it certain duties on the part of the lawyer, such as the duty to make direct contact with the other party to confirm the instructions. If, for example, a lawyer has been asked to prepare a power of attorney or a will for a relative of the person providing instructions, the possibility of coercion or undue influence requires that steps be taken to protect the interests of the relative. If that person's wishes cannot be satisfactorily verified, it is improper for the lawyer to carry out the instructions.

[4] Accepting payment from a third party – A lawyer may be paid by one person, such as an insurance company or union, while being retained to act for another person, such as an insured individual or union member, who has standing to provide instructions directly to the lawyer. In this situation, the lawyer must clarify through discussions with both parties at the outset of the representation whether the lawyer will be acting for both parties, or only for the person instructing the lawyer.

[5] If both parties are to be represented by the lawyer in the relevant matter, then the conflict of interest rules will apply, regarding multiple representations. Briefly, the lawyer must make an independent judgment whether acting for both is in the parties' best interests; both parties must consent to the terms of the arrangement after full disclosure; and the lawyer will not be permitted to keep material information confidential from either party. In the event that a dispute develops, the lawyer will be compelled to cease acting altogether unless, at the time the dispute arises, both parties consent to the lawyer's continuing to represent one of them.

[6] In some circumstances, the person responsible for payment may agree that the other person will be considered the sole client of the lawyer in that matter if (for example) the first party is paying the other's legal fees through courtesy or philanthropy or pursuant to a prepaid legal services plan. In this event, the lawyer should be satisfied that the financially responsible party understands the significance of the characterization of the other party as the sole client and, in particular, that the financially responsible party will have no right to request or receive confidential information regarding the matter.

[7] Some prepaid legal services plans do not offer subscribers a choice of counsel. A lawyer participating in such a plan must explain to the client the implications of this lack of choice at the first available opportunity (See also Rule 3.6-11 regarding prepaid legal services plans).

Language Rights

3.2-7 A lawyer should advise a client of the client's language rights, where applicable, including the right to proceed in the official language of the client's choice.

3.2-8 Where a client wishes to retain a lawyer for representation in the official language of the client's choice, the lawyer should not undertake the matter unless the lawyer is competent to provide the required services in that language or arranges for the assistance of an interpreter.

Commentary

[1] The lawyer should be aware of relevant statutory and constitutional law relating to language rights including the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s.19(1) and Part XVII of the Criminal Code regarding language rights in courts established by Parliament and in criminal proceedings. This may not include provincial superior courts or courts of appeal. The lawyer should also be aware that provincial or territorial legislation may provide additional language rights, including in relation to aboriginal languages. In Alberta, for example, the Languages Act and Regulation provide guidance on the use of French and English. The Rules of Court also provide information on translation in court proceedings.

[2] When a lawyer considers whether to provide the required services in the official language chosen by the client, the lawyer should carefully consider whether it is possible to render those services in a competent manner as required by Rule 3.1-2 and related commentary.

When the Client is an Organization

3.2-9 Although a lawyer may receive instructions from an officer, employee, agent or representative, when a lawyer is employed or retained by an organization, including a corporation, the lawyer must act for the organization in exercising his or her duties and in providing professional services.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer acting for an organization should keep in mind that the organization, as such, is the client and that a corporate client has a legal personality distinct from its shareholders, officers, directors and employees. While the organization or corporation acts and gives instructions through its officers, directors, employees, members, agents or representatives, the lawyer should ensure that it is the interests of the organization that are served and protected. Further, given that an organization depends on persons to give instructions, the lawyer should ensure that the person giving instructions for the organization is acting within that person's actual or ostensible authority.

[2] In addition to acting for the organization, a lawyer may also accept a joint retainer and act for a person associated with the organization. For example, a lawyer may advise an officer of an organization about liability insurance. In such cases the lawyer acting for an organization should be alert to the prospects of conflicts of interests and should comply with the rules about the avoidance of conflicts of interests (Rule 3.4).

Encouraging Compromise or Settlement

3.2-10 A lawyer must advise and encourage a client to compromise or settle a dispute whenever it is possible to do so on a reasonable basis and must discourage the client from commencing or continuing useless legal proceedings.

Commentary

[1] Determining whether settlement or compromise is a realistic alternative requires objective evaluation and the application of a lawyer's professional judgment and experience to the circumstances of the case. The client must then be advised of the advantages and drawbacks of settlement versus litigation. Due to the uncertainty, delay and expense inherent in the litigation process, it is often in the client's interests that a matter be settled. On the other hand, because a lawyer's role is that of advocate rather than adjudicator, going to trial is justified if the client so instructs and the matter is meritorious (see Rule 5.1-2(b)). A lawyer should not press settlement for personal reasons such as an overloaded calendar, lack of preparation, reluctance to face judge or opposing counsel in a courtroom setting, or possible financial benefit due to the terms of a fee agreement.

Threatening Criminal or Regulatory Proceedings

3.2-11 A lawyer must not, in an attempt to gain a benefit for a client, threaten, or advise a client to threaten:

(a) to initiate or proceed with a criminal or quasi-criminal charge; or

(b) to make a complaint to a regulatory authority.

Commentary

[1] It is an abuse of the court or regulatory authority's process to threaten to make or advance a complaint in order to secure the satisfaction of a private grievance. Even if a client has a legitimate entitlement to be paid money, threats to take criminal or quasi-criminal action are not appropriate.

[2] It is not improper, however, to notify the appropriate authority of criminal or quasi-criminal activities while also taking steps through the civil system. Nor is it improper for a lawyer to request that another lawyer comply with an undertaking or trust condition or other professional obligation or face being reported to the Society. The impropriety stems from threatening to use, or actually using, criminal or quasi-criminal proceedings to gain a civil advantage.

Inducement for Withdrawal of Criminal or Regulatory Proceedings

3.2-12 A lawyer must not:

(a) give or offer to give, or advise an accused or any other person to give or offer to give, any valuable consideration to another person in exchange for influencing the Crown or a regulatory authority's conduct of a criminal or quasi-criminal charge or a complaint, unless the lawyer obtains the consent of the Crown or the regulatory authority to enter into such discussions;

(b) accept or offer to accept, or advise a person to accept or offer to accept, any valuable consideration in exchange for influencing the Crown or a regulatory authority's conduct of a criminal or quasi-criminal charge or a complaint, unless the lawyer obtains the consent of the Crown or the regulatory authority to enter such discussions; or

(c) wrongfully influence any person to prevent the Crown or regulatory authority from proceeding with charges or a complaint or to cause the Crown or regulatory authority to withdraw the complaint or stay charges in a criminal or quasi-criminal proceeding.

Commentary

[1] "Regulatory authority" includes professional and other regulatory bodies.

[2] A lawyer for an accused or potential accused must never influence a complainant or potential complainant not to communicate or cooperate with the Crown. However, this rule does not prevent a lawyer for an accused or potential accused from communicating with a complainant or potential complainant to obtain factual information, arrange for restitution or an apology from an accused, or defend or settle any civil matters between the accused and the complainant. When a proposed resolution involves valuable consideration being exchanged in return for influencing the Crown or the regulatory authority not to proceed with a charge or to seek a reduced sentence or penalty, the lawyer for the accused must obtain the consent of the Crown or the regulatory authority prior to discussing such proposal with the complainant or potential complainant. Similarly, lawyers advising a complainant or potential complainant with respect to any such negotiations can do so only with the consent of the Crown or the regulatory authority.

[3] A lawyer cannot provide an assurance that the settlement of a related civil matter will result in the withdrawal of criminal or quasi-criminal charges, absent the consent of the Crown or the regulatory authority.

[4] When the complainant or potential complainant is unrepresented, the lawyer should have regard to the rules respecting unrepresented persons and make it clear that the lawyer is acting exclusively in the interests of the accused. If the complainant or potential complainant is vulnerable, the lawyer should take care not to take unfair or improper advantage of the circumstances. When communicating with an unrepresented complainant or potential complainant, it is prudent to have a witness present.

Fraud by Client or Others

3.2-13 A lawyer must never:

(a) assist in or encourage any fraud, crime, or illegal conduct,

(b) do or omit to do anything that assists in or encourages any fraud, crime, or illegal conduct by a client or others, or

(c) instruct a client or others on how to violate the law and avoid punishment.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer should be on guard against becoming the tool or dupe of an unscrupulous client, or of others, whether or not associated with the unscrupulous client.

[2] A lawyer should be alert to and avoid unwittingly becoming involved with a client or others engaged in criminal activities such as mortgage fraud or money laundering. Vigilance is required because the means for these, and other criminal activities, may be transactions for which lawyers commonly provide services such as: establishing, purchasing or selling business entities; arranging financing for the purchase or sale or operation of business entities; arranging financing for the purchase or sale of business assets; and purchasing and selling real estate.

[3] If a lawyer has suspicions or doubts about whether he or she might be assisting a client or others in dishonesty, fraud, crime or illegal conduct, the lawyer should make reasonable inquiries to obtain information about the client or others and, in the case of the client, about the subject matter and objectives of the retainer. These should include verifying who are the legal or beneficial owners of property and business entities, verifying who has the control of business entities, and clarifying the nature and purpose of a complex or unusual transaction where the purpose is not clear. The lawyer should make a record of the results of these inquiries.

[4] This rule does not apply to conduct the legality of which is supportable by a reasonable and good faith argument. A bona fide test case is not necessarily precluded by this rule and, so long as no injury to a person or violence is involved, a lawyer may properly advise and represent a client who, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, desires to challenge or test a law and the test can most effectively be made by means of a technical breach giving rise to a test case. In all situations, the lawyer should ensure that the client appreciates the consequences of bringing a test case.

[5] This rule is not intended to prevent a lawyer from fully explaining the options available to a client, including the consequences of various means of proceeding, or from representing after the fact a client accused of wrongful conduct. However, a lawyer may not act in furtherance of a client's improper objective. An example would be assisting a client to implement a transaction that is clearly a fraudulent preference. Nor may a lawyer purport to set forth alternatives without making a direct recommendation if the lawyer's silence would be construed as an indirect endorsement of an illegal action.

[6] The mere provision of legal information must be distinguished from rendering legal advice or providing active assistance to a client. If a lawyer is reasonably satisfied on a balance of probabilities that the result of advice or assistance will be to involve the lawyer in a criminal or fraudulent act, then the advice or assistance should not be given. In contrast, merely providing legal information that could be used to commit a crime or fraud is not improper since everyone has a right to know and understand the law. Indeed, a lawyer has a positive obligation to provide such information or ensure that alternative competent legal advice is available to the client. Only if there is reason to believe beyond a reasonable doubt, based on familiarity with the client or information received from other reliable sources, that a client intends to use legal information to commit a crime should a lawyer decline to provide the information sought.

Fraud when Client an Organization

3.2-14 A lawyer who is employed or retained by an organization to act in a matter in which the lawyer knows that the organization has acted, is acting or intends to act fraudulently, criminally or illegally, must do the following, in addition to his or her obligations under Rule 3.2-13:

(a) advise the person from whom the lawyer takes instructions and the chief legal officer, or both the chief legal officer and the chief executive officer, that the conduct is or would be fraudulent, criminal or illegal and should be stopped;

(b) if necessary because the person from whom the lawyer takes instructions, the chief legal officer or the chief executive officer refuses to stop the conduct, advise progressively the next highest persons or groups, including ultimately, the board of directors, the board of trustees, or the appropriate committee of the board, that the conduct is or would be fraudulent, criminal or illegal and should be stopped; and

(c) if the organization, despite the lawyer's advice, continues with or intends to pursue the unlawful conduct, withdraw from acting in the matter in accordance with Rule 3.7.

Commentary

[1] The past, present, or proposed misconduct of an organization may have harmful and serious consequences, not only for the organization and its constituency, but also for the public who rely on organizations to provide a variety of goods and services. In particular, the misconduct of publicly traded commercial and financial corporations may have serious consequences for the public at large. This rule addresses some of the professional responsibilities of a lawyer acting for an organization, including a corporation, when he or she learns that the organization has acted, is acting, or proposes to act in a way that is fraudulent, criminal or illegal. In addition to these rules, the lawyer may need to consider, for example, the rules and commentary about confidentiality (Rule 3.3).

[2] This rule speaks of conduct that is fraudulent, criminal or illegal. Such conduct includes acts of omission. Indeed, often it is the omissions of an organization, such as failing to make required disclosure or to correct inaccurate disclosures that constitute the wrongful conduct to which these rules relate. Conduct likely to result in substantial harm to the organization, as opposed to genuinely trivial misconduct by an organization, invokes these rules.

[3] In considering his or her responsibilities under this section, a lawyer should consider whether it is feasible and appropriate to give any advice in writing.

[4] A lawyer acting for an organization who learns that the organization has acted, is acting, or intends to act in an unlawful manner, may advise the chief executive officer and must advise the chief legal officer of the misconduct. If the unlawful conduct is not abandoned or stopped, the lawyer must report the matter "up the ladder" of responsibility within the organization until the matter is dealt with appropriately. If the organization, despite the lawyer's advice, continues with the unlawful conduct, the lawyer must withdraw from acting in the particular matter in accordance with Rule 3.7. In some but not all cases, withdrawal means resigning from his or her position or relationship with the organization and not simply withdrawing from acting in the particular matter.

[5] This rule recognizes that lawyers as the legal advisors to organizations are in a central position to encourage organizations to comply with the law and to advise that it is in the organization's and the public's interest that organizations do not violate the law. Lawyers acting for organizations are often in a position to advise the executive officers of the organization, not only about the technicalities of the law, but also about the public relations and public policy concerns that motivated the government or regulator to enact the law. Moreover, lawyers for organizations, particularly in-house counsel, may guide organizations to act in ways that are legal, ethical, reputable and consistent with the organization's responsibilities to its constituents and to the public.

Clients with Diminished Capacity

3.2-15 When a client's ability to make decisions is impaired because of minority or mental disability, or for some other reason, the lawyer must, as far as reasonably possible, maintain a normal lawyer and client relationship.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer and client relationship presupposes that the client has the requisite mental ability to make decisions about his or her legal affairs and to give the lawyer instructions. A client's ability to make decisions depends on such factors as age, intelligence, experience and mental and physical health and on the advice, guidance and support of others. A client's ability to make decisions may change, for better or worse, over time. A client may be mentally capable of making some decisions but not others. The key is whether the client has the ability to understand the information relative to the decision that has to be made and is able to appreciate the reasonably foreseeable consequences of the decision or lack of decision. Accordingly, when a client is, or comes to be, under a disability that impairs his or her ability to make decisions, the lawyer will have to assess whether the impairment is minor or whether it prevents the client from giving instructions or entering into binding legal relationships.

[2] A lawyer who believes a person to be incapable of giving instructions should decline to act. However, if a lawyer reasonably believes that the person has no other agent or representative and a failure to act could result in imminent and irreparable harm, the lawyer may take action on behalf of the person lacking capacity only to the extent necessary to protect the person until a legal representative can be appointed. A lawyer undertaking to so act has the same duties under these rules to the person lacking capacity as the lawyer would with any client.

[3] If a client's incapacity is discovered or arises after the solicitor-client relationship is established, the lawyer may need to take steps to have a lawfully authorized representative, such as a litigation guardian, appointed or to obtain the assistance of the Office of the Public Trustee to protect the interests of the client. Whether that should be done depends on all relevant circumstances, including the importance and urgency of any matter requiring instruction. In any event, the lawyer has an ethical obligation to ensure that the client's interests are not abandoned. Until the appointment of a legal representative occurs, the lawyer should act to preserve and protect the client's interests.

[4] In some circumstances when there is a legal representative, the lawyer may disagree with the legal representative's assessment of what is in the best interests of the client under a disability. So long as there is no lack of good faith or authority, the judgment of the legal representative should prevail. If a lawyer becomes aware of conduct or intended conduct of the legal representative that is clearly in bad faith or outside that person's authority, and contrary to the best interests of the client with diminished capacity, the lawyer may act to protect those interests. This may require reporting the misconduct to a person or institution such as a family member or the Public Trustee.

[5] When a lawyer takes protective action on behalf of a person or client lacking in capacity, the authority to disclose necessary confidential information may be implied in some circumstances: See commentary under Rule 3.3-1 (Confidentiality) for a discussion of the relevant factors. If the court or other counsel becomes involved, the lawyer should inform them of the nature of the lawyer's relationship with the person lacking capacity.

3.3 Confidentiality

Confidential Information

3.3-1 A lawyer at all times must hold in strict confidence all information concerning the business and affairs of a client acquired in the course of the professional relationship and must not divulge any such information unless:

(a) expressly or impliedly authorized by the client;

(b) required by law or a court to do so;

(c) required to deliver the information to the Society; or

(d) otherwise permitted by this rule.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer cannot render effective professional service to a client unless there is full and unreserved communication between them. At the same time, the client must feel completely secure and entitled to proceed on the basis that, without any express request or stipulation on the client's part, matters disclosed to or discussed with the lawyer will be held in strict confidence.

[2] This rule must be distinguished from the evidentiary rule of lawyer and client privilege, which is also a constitutionally protected right, concerning oral or documentary communications passing between the client and the lawyer. The ethical rule is wider and applies without regard to the nature or source of the information or the fact that others may share the knowledge.

[3] A lawyer owes the duty of confidentiality to every client without exception and whether or not the client is a continuing or casual client. The duty survives the professional relationship and continues indefinitely after the lawyer has ceased to act for the client, whether or not differences have arisen between them.

[4] A lawyer also owes a duty of confidentiality to anyone seeking advice or assistance on a matter invoking a lawyer's professional knowledge, although the lawyer may not render an account or agree to represent that person. A solicitor and client relationship is often established without formality. A lawyer should be cautious in accepting confidential information on an informal or preliminary basis, since possession of the information may prevent the lawyer from subsequently acting for another party in the same or a related matter (See Rule 3.4 Conflicts).

[5] Generally, unless the nature of the matter requires such disclosure, a lawyer should not disclose having been:

(a) retained by a person about a particular matter; or

(b) consulted by a person about a particular matter, whether or not the lawyer-client relationship has been established between them.

[6] A lawyer should take care to avoid disclosure to one client of confidential information concerning or received from another client and should decline employment that might require such disclosure. When acting for more than one party in the same matter, a lawyer must disclose to all such parties any material confidential information acquired by the lawyer in the course of the representation and relating to the matter in question. While multiple representation is generally discouraged, there are circumstances in which it is in the best interests of the parties involved (see Rule 3.4, Conflicts). A lawyer will be precluded, however, from receiving material information in connection with the matter from one client and treating it as confidential in respect of the others. This aspect of the representation must be disclosed to the clients in advance so that their consent is an informed one.

[7] When lawyers share space, the risk of advertent or inadvertent disclosure of confidential information is significant even if the lawyers involved exert efforts to insulate their respective practices. Consequently, the definition of "law firm" includes lawyers practising law from the same premises but otherwise practising law independently of one another. To comply with Rule 3.4 regarding Conflicts, lawyers in space-sharing arrangements must share certain confidential client information with each other. For example, it will be necessary to know the identities of clients of the other lawyers to determine when conflicts exist. When a conflict check shows that a person against whom one of the lawyers wishes to act was previously represented by another of the lawyers, those lawyers may need to discuss the nature of any confidential information possessed by the previous lawyer. Accordingly, the implied consent to disclosure of information referred to in Rule 3.3-1 extends to all lawyers practising in such an arrangement.

[8] A lawyer should avoid indiscreet conversations and other communications, even with the lawyer's spouse or family, about a client's affairs and should shun any gossip about such things even though the client is not named or otherwise identified. Similarly, a lawyer should not repeat any gossip or information about the client's business or affairs that is overheard or recounted to the lawyer. Apart altogether from ethical considerations or questions of good taste, indiscreet shoptalk among lawyers, if overheard by third parties able to identify the matter being discussed, could result in prejudice to the client. Moreover, the respect of the listener for lawyers and the legal profession will probably be lessened. Although the rule may not apply to facts that are public knowledge, a lawyer should guard against participating in or commenting on speculation concerning clients' affairs or business.

[9] In some situations, the authority of the client to disclose may be inferred. For example, in court proceedings some disclosure may be necessary in a pleading or other court document. Also, it is implied that a lawyer may, unless the client directs otherwise, disclose the client's affairs to partners and associates in the law firm and, to the extent necessary, to administrative staff and to others whose services are used by the lawyer. But this implied authority to disclose places the lawyer under a duty to impress upon associates, employees, students and other lawyers engaged under contract with the lawyer or with the firm of the lawyer the importance of non-disclosure (both during their employment and afterwards) and requires the lawyer to take reasonable care to prevent their disclosing or using any information that the lawyer is bound to keep in confidence.

[10] The client's authority for the lawyer to disclose confidential information to the extent necessary to protect the client's interest may also be inferred in some situations where the lawyer is taking action on behalf of the person lacking capacity to protect the person until a legal representative can be appointed. In determining whether a lawyer may disclose such information, the lawyer should consider all circumstances, including the reasonableness of the lawyer's belief the person lacks capacity, the potential harm to the client if no action is taken, and any instructions the client may have given the lawyer when capable of giving instructions about the authority to disclose information. Similar considerations apply to confidential information given to the lawyer by a person who lacks the capacity to become a client but nevertheless requires protection.

[11] A lawyer may have an obligation to disclose information under Rule 5.5-2 or 5.5-3. If client information is involved in those situations, the lawyer should be guided by the provisions of this rule.

Use of Confidential Information

3.3-2 A lawyer must not use or disclose a client's or former client's confidential information to the disadvantage of the client or former client, or for the benefit of the lawyer or a third person without the consent of the client or former client.

Commentary

[1] See Rule 3.4, Conflicts. The fiduciary relationship between a lawyer and a client forbids the lawyer or a third person from benefiting from the lawyer's use of a client's confidential information. If a lawyer engages in literary works, such as a memoir or autobiography, the lawyer is required to obtain the client's or former client's consent before disclosing confidential information.

[2] There is generally an obligation to disclose to a client all information that must be disclosed to enable the lawyer to properly carry out the representation. A lawyer must decline to act in a matter, therefore, or must withdraw from an existing representation if all of the following circumstances are present:

(a) the lawyer is in possession of confidential information of a current or former client that is material to that matter or representation;

(b) the current or former client will not consent to disclosure of the information to the other client or potential client; and

(c) it is impossible to properly carry out the representation or prospective representation without making such disclosure or, alternatively, the client or potential client in that matter is unwilling to accept legal advice based on the information without actually being privy to the information and therefore insists on disclosure.

Under these circumstances, the lawyer is unable to act in the best interests of that client and cannot represent or continue to represent the client.

Future Harm / Public Safety Exception

3.3-3 A lawyer may disclose confidential information, but must not disclose more information than is required, when the lawyer believes on reasonable grounds that an identifiable person or group is in imminent danger of death or serious bodily harm, and disclosure is necessary to prevent the death or harm.

Commentary

[1] Confidentiality and loyalty are fundamental to the relationship between a lawyer and a client because legal advice cannot be given and justice cannot be done unless clients have a large measure of freedom to discuss their affairs with their lawyers. In some very exceptional situations identified in this rule, disclosure without the client's permission might be warranted because the lawyer is satisfied that truly serious harm of the types identified is imminent and cannot otherwise be prevented. These situations will be extremely rare.

[2] Serious psychological harm may constitute serious bodily harm if it substantially interferes with the health or well-being of the individual.

[3] In assessing whether disclosure of confidential information is justified to prevent substantial harm, a lawyer should consider a number of factors, including:

(a) the seriousness of the potential injury to others if the prospective harm occurs;

(b) the likelihood that it will occur and its imminence;

(c) the apparent absence of any other feasible way to prevent the potential injury; and

(d) the circumstances under which the lawyer acquired the information of the client's intent or prospective course of action.

[4] How and when disclosure should be made under this rule will depend upon the circumstances. A lawyer who believes that disclosure may be warranted should contact the Society for ethical advice. When practicable and permitted, a judicial order may be sought for disclosure.

[5] If confidential information is disclosed under Rule 3.3-3, the lawyer should prepare a written note as soon as possible, which should include:

(a) the date and time of the communication in which the disclosure is made;

(b) the grounds in support of the lawyer's decision to communicate the information, including the harm intended to be prevented, the identity of the person who prompted communication of the information as well as the identity of the person or group of persons exposed to the harm; and

(c) the content of the communication, the method of communication used and the identity of the person to whom the communication was made.

Disclosure of Confidential Information by Lawyers

3.3-4 If it is alleged that a lawyer or the lawyer's associates or employees:

(a) have committed a criminal offence involving a client's affairs;

(b) are civilly liable with respect to a matter involving a client's affairs;

(c) have committed acts of professional negligence; or

(d) have engaged in acts of professional misconduct or conduct unbecoming a lawyer;

the lawyer may disclose confidential information in order to defend against the allegations, but must not disclose more information than is required.

3.3-5 A lawyer may disclose confidential information in order to establish or collect the lawyer's fees, but must not disclose more information than is required.

3.3-6 A lawyer may disclose confidential information to another lawyer to secure legal or ethical advice about the lawyer's proposed conduct.

3.3-7 A lawyer may disclose confidential information to the extent reasonably necessary to detect and resolve conflicts of interest arising from a lawyer's proposed transfer to a new law firm, or from a proposed law firm merger or acquisition, but only if disclosure does not otherwise prejudice the client.

Commentary

[1] Lawyers in different firms may need to disclose limited client information to each other to detect and resolve conflicts of interest, such as when a lawyer is considering an association with another firm, two or more firms are considering a merger, or a lawyer is considering the purchase of a law practice. (see Rules 3.4-6 to 3.4-11.)

[2] Disclosure of client information would only be made once substantive discussions regarding the new relationship have occurred. The exchange of information needs to be done in a manner consistent with the requirement to protect client confidentiality and privilege and to avoid any prejudice to the client. It ordinarily would include no more than the names of the persons and entities involved in a matter. Depending on the circumstances, it may include a brief summary of the general issues involved, and information about whether the representation has come to an end.

[3] The disclosure should be made to as few lawyers at the new law firm as possible, ideally to one lawyer of the new firm, such as a designated conflicts lawyer. The information should always be disclosed only to the extent reasonably necessary to detect and resolve conflicts of interest that might arise from the possible new relationship.

[4] As the disclosure is made on the basis that it is solely for the use of checking conflicts where lawyers are transferring between firms and for establishing reasonable measures to protect confidential client information, the new law firm should agree with the transferring lawyer that it will:

(a) limit access to the disclosed information;

(b) not use the information for any purpose other than detecting and resolving conflicts; and

(c) return, destroy, or store in a secure and confidential manner the information provided once appropriate measures are established to protect client confidentiality.

[5] Lawyers must be sensitive to the disclosure of information which may prejudice the client. For example:

- a corporate client may be seeking advice on a corporate takeover that has not been publicly announced;
- a person may consult a lawyer about the possibility of divorce before the person's intentions are known to the person's spouse;
- a person may consult a lawyer about a criminal investigation that has not led to charges being laid.

3.4 Conflicts

Duty to Avoid Conflicts of Interest

3.4-1 A lawyer must not act or continue to act for a client where there is a conflict of interest, except as permitted under this Code.

Commentary

[1] A conflict of interest exists when there is a substantial risk that a lawyer's loyalty to or representation of a client would be materially and adversely affected by the lawyer's own interest or the lawyer's duties to another client, a former client, or a third person. A substantial risk is one that is significant and, while not certain or probable, is more than a mere possibility. A client's interests may be prejudiced unless the lawyer's advice, judgment and action on the client's behalf are free from conflicts of interest.

[2] A lawyer must examine whether a conflict of interest exists not only from the inception of the retainer but throughout its duration, as new circumstances or information may establish or reveal a conflict of interest.

[3] The disqualification of a lawyer may mean the disqualification of all lawyers in the law firm, due to the definition of "law firm" and "lawyer" in this Code. The definition of a law firm also includes practitioners who practise with other lawyers in space-sharing or other arrangements.

The Fiduciary Relationship, the Duty of Loyalty and Conflicting Interests

[4] Lawyers' duties to former clients are primarily concerned with protecting confidential information. Duties to current clients are more extensive, and are based on a broad fiduciary duty, which prevails regardless of whether there is a risk of disclosure of confidential information.

[5] The lawyer-client relationship is a fiduciary relationship. Lawyers accordingly owe a duty of loyalty to current clients, which includes the following:

- the duty not to disclose confidential information;
- the duty to avoid conflicting interests;
- the duty of commitment to the client's cause; and
- the duty of candour with a client on matters relevant to the retainer.

The Role of the Court and Law Societies

[6] These rules set out ethical standards to which all members of the profession must adhere. The courts have a separate supervisory role over court proceedings. In that role, the courts apply fiduciary principles developed by the courts to govern lawyers' relationships with their clients, to ensure the proper administration of justice. A breach of the rules on conflicts of interest may lead to sanction by a law society even where a court may decline to order disqualification as a remedy.

Consent and Disclosure

[7] Except for representing opposing parties in a dispute (see Rule 3.4-2), these rules allow a lawyer to continue to act in a matter even when in a conflict of interest, if the clients consent. The lawyer must also be satisfied that the lawyer is able to proceed without a material and adverse effect on the client.

[8] As defined in these rules, “consent” means fully informed and voluntary consent after disclosure. Disclosure may be made orally or in writing, and the consent should be confirmed in writing.

[9] “Disclosure” means full and fair disclosure of all information relevant to a person’s decision, in sufficient time for the person to make a genuine and independent decision, and the taking of reasonable steps to ensure understanding of the matters disclosed. A lawyer therefore should inform the client of the relevant circumstances and the reasonably foreseeable ways that a conflict of interest could adversely affect the client interests. This would include the lawyer's relations to the parties and any interest in connection with the matter.

[10] This rule does not require that a lawyer advise a client to obtain independent legal advice about the conflict of interest. In some cases, however, the lawyer should recommend such advice, especially if the client is vulnerable or not sophisticated.

Express Consent

[11] Express consent is required in the case of conflicts involving multiple retainers, former clients, and transferring lawyers, and in the case of lawyers’ personal interests or relationships coming into conflict with the interests of clients. Disclosure is an essential requirement to obtaining a client’s consent. The lawyer must inform the client about all matters relevant to evaluating the conflict. Where it is not possible to provide the client with disclosure because of the confidentiality of the information of another client, the lawyer must decline to act.

Implied Consent

[12] In cases involving the simultaneous representation of current clients, consent may either be express or implied. Implied consent is applicable in only exceptional cases. It may be appropriate to imply consent when acting for government agencies, chartered banks and other entities that might be considered sophisticated and frequent consumers of legal services from a variety of law firms. The matters must be unrelated, and the lawyer must not possess confidential information from one client that could affect the other client.

[13] The nature of the client is not a sufficient basis upon which to imply consent. The terms of the retainer, the relationship between the lawyer and client, and the unrelated matters involved must be considered. There must be a reasonable basis upon which a lawyer may objectively conclude that the client commonly accepts that its lawyers may act against it.

[14] Where legal services are either highly specialized or are scarce, consent to act for another current client may be implied, depending on the circumstances.

Advance Consent

[15] Consent may be obtained in advance of a conflict of interest arising, provided the consent is sufficiently comprehensive to contemplate the subsequent conflict, and there has been no change of circumstances that would render the initial consent invalid. The client must be able to understand the risks and consequences of providing the advance consent.

[16] While not required, in some circumstances it may be advisable to recommend that the client obtain independent legal advice before deciding whether to provide advance consent. Advance consent must be recorded in writing or contained in the retainer agreement.

Disputes

3.4-2 A lawyer must not represent opposing parties in a dispute.

Commentary

[1] The existence of a dispute precludes joint representation, not only because it is impossible to properly advocate more than one side of a matter, but because the administration of justice would be brought into disrepute.

[2] It is sometimes difficult to determine whether a dispute exists. While a litigation matter qualifies as a dispute from the outset, parties who appear to have differing interests or who disagree are not necessarily engaged in a dispute. The parties may wish to resolve the disagreement by consent, in which case a lawyer may be requested to act as a facilitator in providing information for their consideration. At some point, however, a conflict or potential conflict may develop into a dispute. At that time, the lawyer would be compelled by Rule 3.4-1 to cease acting for more than one party and perhaps to withdraw altogether.

[3] In determining whether a dispute exists, a lawyer should have regard for the following factors:

- the degree of hostility, aggression and "posturing";
- the importance of the matters not yet resolved;
- the intransigence of one or more of the parties; and
- whether one or more of the parties wishes the lawyer to assume the role of advocate for that party's position.

[4] If clients have consented to a joint retainer, a lawyer is not necessarily precluded from advising clients on non-contentious matters, even if a dispute has arisen between them. When in doubt, a lawyer should cease acting.

Mediation or Arbitration

[5] This rule does not prevent a lawyer from mediating or arbitrating a dispute between clients or former clients where:

(a) the parties consent;

(b) it is in the parties' best interests that the lawyer act as mediator or arbitrator; and

(c) the parties acknowledge that the lawyer will not be representing either party and that no confidentiality will apply to material information in the lawyer's possession.

Current Clients

3.4-3 A lawyer must not represent one client whose legal interests are directly adverse to the immediate legal interests of another client, even if the matters are unrelated, unless both clients consent.

Commentary

[1] This rule mirrors the bright line rule articulated by the Supreme Court of Canada.

[2] The lawyer-client relationship may be irreparably damaged where the lawyer's representation of one client is directly adverse to another client's immediate interests. For example, one client may legitimately fear that the lawyer will not pursue the representation out of deference to the other client, and an existing client may legitimately feel betrayed by the lawyer's representation of a client with adverse legal interests.

[3] A client is a current client if the lawyer is currently acting for the client, and may be a current client despite there being no matters on which the lawyer is currently acting. In determining whether a client is a current client, notwithstanding that the lawyer has no current files, the lawyer must take into consideration all the circumstances of the lawyer-client relationship, including, where relevant:

- the duration of the relationship;
- the terms of the past retainer or retainers;
- the length of time since the last representation was completed or the last representation assigned; and
- whether the client uses other lawyers for the same type of work.

[4] When determining if one client's legal interests are directly adverse to the immediate legal interests of another current client, a lawyer must consider the following factors:

- the immediacy of the legal interests;
- whether the legal interests are directly adverse;
- whether the issue is substantive or procedural;

- the temporal relationship between the matters;
- the significance of the issue to the immediate and long-term interests of the clients involved; and
- the clients' reasonable expectations in retaining the lawyer for the particular matter or representation.

[5] The bright line rule cannot be used to support tactical abuses. For example, it is inappropriate for a lawyer to raise a conflict of interest in order to disqualify an opposing lawyer for an improper purpose, or to inconvenience an opposing client.

[6] This rule will not apply in circumstances where it is unreasonable for a client to expect that its law firm will not act against it in unrelated matters. In exceptional cases, a client's consent that a lawyer may act against it may be implied. (See commentary to Rule 3.4-1)

[7] A lawyer's duty of candour requires that a lawyer inform a client about any factors relevant to the lawyer's ability to provide effective representation. If the lawyer is accepting a retainer that requires the lawyer to act against an existing client, the lawyer should disclose this information to the client even if the lawyer believes there is no conflict of interest.

[8] A lawyer's duty of commitment to the client's cause prevents the lawyer from summarily and unexpectedly dropping that client to circumvent conflict of interest rules. The client may legitimately feel betrayed if the lawyer ceases to act for the client in order to avoid a conflict of interest with another more lucrative or attractive client.

Concurrent Clients

3.4-4 (a) An individual lawyer or a law firm may act for concurrent clients with competing business or economic interests, provided that the lawyer or law firm treats information received from each client as confidential and does not disclose it to other clients;

(b) Where concurrent clients wish to retain a law firm in respect of the same business opportunity, the law firm must:

(i) disclose that it is acting for other business competitors and the risks associated with concurrent representation;

(ii) provide the client with the opportunity to seek independent legal advice;

(iii) ensure that each client is represented by different lawyers in the law firm;

(iv) implement measures to protect confidential information;

(v) withdraw from the representation of all clients in the event a dispute arises that cannot be resolved, in relation to the subject matter of the concurrent representation.

Commentary

[1] Concurrent retainers are distinct from joint retainers, which are the subject of Rule 3.4-5. For the purposes of these rules, concurrent retainers arise when a lawyer or firm simultaneously represents different clients in separate matters. There is no sharing of confidential information, and the concurrent clients are not associated. In contrast, joint representation involves simultaneous representation of multiple clients in the same matter, and involves sharing of confidential information and shared instructions from the clients.

[2] Conflict of interest rules do not preclude law firms and individual lawyers from concurrently representing different clients who are economic or business competitors and whose legal interests are not directly adverse. Lawyers are obliged at all times to ensure that they maintain confidentiality regarding the information of each client. Competing commercial interests of clients will not present a conflict when they do not impair a lawyer's ability to properly represent the legal interests of each client. Whether or not a real risk of impairment exists will be a question of fact.

[3] In a litigation practice, competing commercial interests become relevant when there is a legal dispute between clients, in which case Rules 3.4-2 and 3.4-3 will apply.

[4] In corporate and commercial practice, a conflict of interest will arise when commercial competitors simultaneously seek to retain the same lawyer or law firm with regard to the same corporate or business opportunity. Where the subject matter of each independent retainer is the same, the same lawyer may not act for each concurrent client. A law firm may, however, represent concurrent clients in this situation if each client is represented by different lawyers and the existence of concurrent retainers is disclosed to the clients. Lawyers are not required to disclose the identities of other concurrent clients. Reasonable measures will be required to protect confidential client information and the details of the implementation of the measures should be disclosed to the clients (See commentary to Rule 3.4-10).

[5] Concurrent clients must be fully informed of the risks and understand that, if a dispute arises between them which cannot be resolved, the lawyers must withdraw, resulting in potential additional costs. Clients should be given the opportunity to seek independent legal advice regarding the advisability of the concurrent retainer, and whether the concurrent representation is in the best interests of the clients. The law firm should assess whether there is a real risk that the firm will not be able to properly represent the legal interests of each client.

Joint Retainers

3.4-5 Before a lawyer acts for more than one client in the same matter, the lawyer must:

(a) obtain the consent of the clients following disclosure of the advantages and disadvantages of a joint retainer;

(b) ensure the joint retainer is in the best interests of each client;

(c) advise each client that no information received in connection with the matter from one client can be treated as confidential so far as any of the others are concerned; and

(d) advise each client that, if a conflict develops that cannot be resolved, the lawyer cannot continue to act for both or all of them and may have to withdraw completely.

Commentary

Identifying Conflicts

[1] A joint retainer must be approached by a lawyer with caution, particularly in situations involving conflicting interests, rather than a potential conflict. It will generally be more difficult for a lawyer to justify acting in a situation involving actual conflicting interests. In each case, the lawyer must assess the likelihood of being able to demonstrate that each client received representation equal to that which would have been rendered by independent counsel.

[2] A lawyer should examine whether a conflict of interest exists, not only from the outset, but also throughout the duration of a retainer, because new circumstances or information may establish or reveal a conflict of interest.

[3] In appropriate circumstances, lawyers may act for clients who have conflicting interests or have a potential conflict. Clients may have conflicting interests where they have differing interests but there is no actual dispute. Examples include vendor and purchaser, mortgagor and mortgagee (see special notes below), insured and insurer, estranged spouses, and lessor and lessee.

[4] A potential conflict exists when clients are aligned in interest and there is no dispute among them in fact, but the relationship or circumstances are such that there is a possibility of differences developing. Examples are co-plaintiffs; co-defendants; co-insured; co-accused; shareholders entering into a unanimous shareholder agreement; spouses granting a mortgage to secure a loan; common guarantors; beneficiaries under a will; and a trustee in bankruptcy or court appointed receiver/manager and the secured creditor who had the trustee or receiver/manager appointed. This list is not exhaustive.

Assessing When the Joint Representation is in the Best Interests of the Parties

[5] Many lawyers prefer not to act for more than one party in a transaction. From the client's perspective, however, this preference may interfere with the right to choose counsel and may appear to generate unwarranted costs, hostility and complexity. In addition, another lawyer having the requisite expertise or experience may not be readily available, especially in smaller communities. Situations will therefore arise in which it is clearly in the best interests of the parties that a lawyer represents more than one of them in the same matter.

[6] In determining whether it is in the best interests of the parties that a lawyer act for more than one party where there is no dispute but where there is a conflict or potential conflict, the lawyer must consider all relevant factors, including but not limited to:

- the complexity of the matter;
- whether there are terms yet to be negotiated and the complexity and contentiousness of those terms;
- whether considerable extra cost, delay, hostility or inconvenience would result from using more than one lawyer;
- the availability of another lawyer of comparable skill;
- the degree to which the lawyer is familiar with the parties' affairs;
- the probability that the conflict or potential conflict will ripen into a dispute due to the respective positions or personalities of the parties, the history of their relationship or other factors;
- the likely effect of a dispute on the parties;
- whether it may be inferred from the relative positions or circumstances of the parties (such as a long-standing previous relationship of one party with the lawyer) that the lawyer would be motivated to favour the interests of one party over another; and
- the ability of the parties to make informed, independent decisions.

[7] The requirement that the joint representation be in the clients' best interests will not be fulfilled unless the lawyer has made an independent evaluation and has concluded that this is the case. It is insufficient to rely on the clients' assessment in this regard.

[8] Although the parties to a particular matter may expressly request joint representation, there are circumstances in which a lawyer may not agree. Even if all the parties consent, a lawyer should avoid acting for more than one client when it is likely that a dispute between them will arise or that their interests, rights or obligations will diverge as the matter progresses. For example, it is not advisable to represent opposing arm's-length parties in complex commercial transactions involving unique, heavily negotiated terms. In these situations, the risks of retaining a single lawyer outweigh the advantages.

[9] If a lawyer proposes to act for a corporation and one or more of its shareholders, directors, managers, officers or employees, the lawyer must be satisfied that the dual representation is a true reflection of the will and desire of the corporation as a separate entity. Having met all preliminary requirements, a lawyer acting in a conflict or potential conflict situation must represent each party's interests to the fullest extent. The fact of joint representation will not provide a justification for failing to fulfill the duties and responsibilities owed by the lawyer to each client.

Informed Consent to Joint Representation

[10] If a lawyer determines that joint representation is permissible, then the consent of the parties must be obtained. Consent will be valid only if the lawyer has provided disclosure of the advantages and disadvantages of, first, retaining one lawyer and, second, retaining independent counsel for each party. Disclosure must include the fact that no material information received in connection with the matter from one party can be treated as confidential so far as any of the other parties is concerned. In addition, the lawyer must stipulate that, if a dispute develops, the lawyer will be compelled to cease acting altogether unless, at the time the dispute develops, all parties consent to the lawyer continuing to represent one of them. Advance consent may be ineffective since the party granting the consent may not at that time be in possession of all relevant information (see commentary to Rule 3.4-1). Lawyers must disclose any relationships with the parties and any interest in or connection with the matter, if applicable.

[11] While it is not mandatory that either disclosure or consent in connection with joint representation be in writing, the lawyer will have the onus of establishing that disclosure was provided and that consent was granted. Therefore, it is advisable to document the communication between the lawyer and client and to obtain written confirmation from the client.

[12] Rule 3.4-5 does not require that a lawyer advise the client to obtain independent legal advice about a conflicting interest. In some cases, especially when the client is not sophisticated or is vulnerable, the lawyer should recommend independent legal advice. If a lawyer has a continuing relationship with a client for whom the lawyer acts regularly, before the lawyer accepts joint employment for that client and another client in a matter, the lawyer should advise the other client of the continuing relationship and recommend that the client obtain independent legal advice about the joint retainer.

Joint Representation of Lenders and Borrowers

[13] In appropriate circumstances, a lawyer may act for or otherwise represent both lender and borrower in a mortgage or loan transaction. Consent must be obtained from both clients at the outset of the retainer.

[14] When a lawyer acts for both the borrower and the lender in a mortgage or loan transaction, the lawyer must disclose to the borrower and the lender, before the advance or release of the mortgage or loan funds, all information that is material to the transaction. What is material is to be determined objectively. The duty to disclose arises even if the lender or the borrower does not ask for the specific information.

[15] A lender’s acknowledgement of, and consent to, the terms of and consent to the joint retainer is usually confirmed in the documentation of the transaction, such as mortgage loan instructions, and the consent is generally acknowledged by a lender when the lawyer is requested by it to act.

Joint Retainer for Drafting Wills

[16] A lawyer who receives instructions from spouses or domestic partners (including, in Alberta, adult interdependent partners) to prepare one or more wills for them based on their shared understanding of what is to be in each will should comply with this rule. It is important for the lawyer to ensure that the spouses or domestic partners understand the consequences of giving conflicting instructions during the course of the joint retainer for the preparation of the wills, and that any information or instructions provided to counsel by one client will be shared with the other spouse or domestic partner.

[17] If subsequently only one spouse or domestic partner communicates new instructions, such as instructions to change or revoke a will:

a) the subsequent communication must be treated as a request for a new retainer and not as part of the joint retainer;

b) in accordance with Rule 3.3, the lawyer is obliged to hold all information related to the subsequent communication in strict confidence and not disclose it to the other spouse or domestic partner;

c) the lawyer has a duty to decline the new retainer, unless:

(i) the spouses or domestic partners have annulled their marriage, divorced, permanently ended their conjugal relationship or permanently ended their close personal relationship, as the case may be;

(ii) the other spouse or domestic partner has died; or

(iii) the other spouse or domestic partner has been informed of the subsequent communication and agreed to the lawyer acting on the new instructions.

Single Client in Multiple Roles

[18] Special considerations apply when a lawyer is representing one client acting in two possibly conflicting roles. For example, a lawyer acting for an estate when the executor is also a beneficiary must be sensitive to divergence of the obligations and interests of the executor in those two capacities. Such divergence could occur if the executor is a surviving spouse who is the beneficiary of only part of the estate. The individual may wish to apply to the court to receive a greater share of the estate. This course of action is, however, contrary to the interests of other beneficiaries and inconsistent with the neutral role of executor. The lawyer would accordingly be obliged to refer the executor elsewhere with respect to the application for relief which the individual is pursuing in a personal capacity.

Acting Against Former Clients

3.4-6 Unless the former client consents, a lawyer must not act against a former client:

(a) in the same matter,

(b) in any related matter, or

(c) except as provided by Rule 3.4-7, in any other matter if the lawyer has relevant confidential information arising from the representation of the former client that may prejudice that client.

Commentary

[1] This rule protects clients from the misuse of confidential information and prohibits a lawyer from attacking the legal work done during the retainer, or from undermining the client's position on a matter that was central to the retainer. It is not improper for a lawyer to act against a former client in a fresh and independent matter wholly unrelated to any work the lawyer has previously done for that client. A new matter is wholly unrelated if no confidential information from the prior retainer is relevant to the new matter and the new matter will not undermine the work done by the lawyer for the client in the prior retainer.

[2] A person who has consulted a lawyer in the lawyer's professional capacity may be considered a former client for the purposes of this rule even though the lawyer did not agree to represent that person or did not render an account to that person (see commentary below regarding "Prospective Client").

Confidential Information

[3] "Confidential information" means all information concerning a client's business, interests and affairs acquired in the course of the lawyer-client relationship. A lawyer's knowledge of personal characteristics or corporate policies that are notably unusual or unique to a client may bar an adverse representation if such knowledge could potentially be used to the client's disadvantage. For example, a lawyer might know that a former client will not under any circumstances proceed to trial or appear as a witness. However, a lawyer's awareness that a client has a characteristic common to many people (such as a general aversion to testifying) or a fairly typical corporate policy (such as a propensity to settle rather than proceed to litigation) will not generally preclude the lawyer from acting against that client.

[4] A lawyer's duty not to use confidential information to the disadvantage of a former client continues indefinitely. However, the passage of time may mitigate the effect of a lawyer's possession of particular confidential information, and may permit the lawyer to act against a former client when the information no longer has the potential to prejudice the former client.

Prospective Client

[5] A prospective client is a person who discloses confidential information to a lawyer for the purpose of retaining the lawyer. A lawyer must maintain the confidentiality of information received from a prospective client.

[6] Before performing a conflict check, a lawyer should endeavour not to receive more information than is necessary to carry out the conflict check. As soon as a conflict becomes evident the lawyer must decline the representation and refuse to receive further information, unless the conflict is resolved by the consent of the existing client and the prospective client or the approval of a tribunal. If the lawyer declines the representation, the information disclosed by the prospective client, including the fact that the client approached the firm, must not be disclosed to those who may act against the prospective client. The firm may act or continue to act contrary to the interests of the prospective client in relation to the proposed retainer if the lawyer takes adequate steps to ensure that:

(a) the confidential information is not disclosed to other firm members representing clients adverse to the prospective client, and

(b) firm members who have the confidential information will not be involved in any retainer that is related to the matter for which the prospective client sought to retain the firm.

[7] The adequacy of the measures taken to prevent disclosure of the information will depend on the circumstances of the case, and may include destroying, sealing or returning to the prospective client notes and correspondence and deleting or password protecting computer files on which any such information may be recorded.

3.4-7 When a lawyer has acted for a former client and obtained confidential information relevant to a new matter, another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm ("the other lawyer") may act in the new matter against the former client if:

(a) the former client consents to the other lawyer acting; or

(b) the law firm establishes that it is in the interests of justice that the other lawyer act in the new matter, having regard to all relevant circumstances, including:

(i) the adequacy and timing of the measures taken to ensure that there has been, and will be, no disclosure of the former client's confidential information to any other member or employee of the law firm, or any person whose services the lawyer or law firm has retained in the new matter;

(ii) the extent of prejudice to any party;

(iii) the good faith of the parties; and

(iv) the availability of suitable alternative counsel.

Commentary

[1] The guidelines at the end of the commentary in Rule 3.4-10 regarding lawyer transfers between firms provide valuable guidance for the protection of confidential information in the cases where, having regard to all of the relevant circumstances, it is appropriate for the lawyer's partner or associate to act against the former client.

Conflicts from Transfer Between Law Firms

3.4-8 Rules 3.4-9 and 3.4-10 apply when a lawyer transfers from one law firm ("former law firm") to another ("new law firm"), and either the transferring lawyer or the new law firm is aware at the time of the transfer or later discovers that:

- (a) the new law firm represents a client in a matter that is the same as, or related to, a matter in which the former law firm represents or represented its client ("former client");
- (b) the interests of those clients in that matter conflict.

3.4-9 If the transferring lawyer possesses relevant confidential information respecting the former client that may prejudice the former client if disclosed to a member of the new law firm, the new law firm must cease representation of its client in that matter unless:

- (a) the former client consents to the new law firm's continued representation of its client; or
- (b) the new law firm establishes that it is in the interests of justice that it act in the matter, having regard to all relevant circumstances, including:
  - (i) the adequacy and timing of the measures taken to ensure that no disclosure of the former client's confidential information to any member of the new law firm will occur;
  - (ii) the extent of prejudice to any party;
  - (iii) the good faith of the parties; and
  - (iv) the availability of suitable alternative counsel.

3.4-10 If the transferring lawyer does not possess relevant confidential information that could prejudice the former client, the transferring lawyer must not, unless the former client consents:

(a) participate in the new law firm's representation of its client in the relevant matter or disclose any confidential information respecting the former client; or

(b) discuss with any member of the new law firm the new law firm's representation of its client or the former law firm's representation of the former client, except as permitted by Rule 3.3-7.

Commentary

[1] The purpose of the rules regarding transferring lawyers is to deal with actual knowledge. Imputed knowledge may not give rise to disqualification if the law firm can demonstrate compliance with these rules and the implementation of effective ethical screens.

[2] In these rules, "client" bears the same meaning as in Chapter 1, and includes anyone to whom a lawyer owes a duty of confidentiality, even if no lawyer-client relationship exists between them.

[3] "Confidential information" means information concerning a client's business, interests and affairs which is not generally known to the public and which has been acquired in the course of the lawyer-client relationship.

[4] A "matter" means a case or client file, but does not include general "know-how" and, in the case of a government lawyer, does not include policy advice unless the advice relates to a particular matter.

[5] The duties imposed by this rule concerning confidential information should be distinguished from the general ethical duty to hold in strict confidence all information concerning the business and affairs of the client acquired in the course of the professional relationship, which duty applies without regard to the nature or source of the information or to the fact that others may share the knowledge.

Lawyers and Support Staff

[6] This rule is intended to regulate lawyers and students-at-law who transfer between law firms. There is also a general duty on lawyers to exercise due diligence in the supervision of non-lawyer staff to ensure that they comply with the rule and with the duty not to disclose confidential information of clients of the lawyer's firm and confidential information of clients of other law firms in which the person has worked.

Government Employees and In-house Counsel

[7] The definition of "law firm" includes one or more lawyers practising in a government, a Crown corporation, any other public body or a corporation. Thus, the rule applies to lawyers transferring to or from government service and into or out of an in-house counsel position, but does not extend to purely internal transfers in which, after transfer, the employer remains the same.

Law Firms with Multiple Offices

[8] This rule treats as one "law firm" such entities as the various legal services units of a government, a corporation with separate regional legal departments, an interjurisdictional law firm and a legal aid program with many community law offices. It is easier to create more effective ethical screens when the law firm's offices are remote from one another or are managed independently. The law firm should disclose the reasonable measures taken to ensure protection of confidential information when seeking the former client's consent.

Other Matters

[9] When a new law firm considers hiring a lawyer from another law firm, the transferring lawyer and the new law firm need to determine, before the transfer, whether any conflicts of interest will be created. In determining whether the transferring lawyer possesses confidential information, both the transferring lawyer and the new law firm must be very careful, during any interview of a potential transferring lawyer, or other recruitment process, to ensure that they do not disclose confidential information.

[10] If the new law firm applies to a tribunal under Rule 3.4-9 for a determination that it may continue to act, it bears the onus of establishing that it has met the requirements of Rule 3.4-9(b).

Reasonable Measures to Ensure Non-disclosure of Confidential Information

[11] The new law firm should implement reasonable measures to ensure that no disclosure of the former client's confidential information will be made to any member of the new law firm:

(a) when the transferring lawyer actually possesses confidential information respecting a former client that may prejudice the former client if disclosed to a member of the new law firm, and

(b) when the new law firm is not certain whether the transferring lawyer actually possesses such confidential information.

[12] It is not possible to offer a set of "reasonable measures" that will suffice in every case. Instead, the new law firm that seeks to implement reasonable measures must exercise professional judgment in determining what steps must be taken.

[13] In the case of law firms with multiple offices, the degree of autonomy possessed by each office will be a factor in determining what constitutes "reasonable measures." For example, the various legal services units of a government, a corporation with separate regional legal departments, an interjurisdictional law firm, or a legal aid program may be able to demonstrate that, because of its institutional structure, reporting relationships, function, nature of work, and geography, relatively fewer "measures" are necessary to prevent the disclosure of confidential information. If it can be shown that, because of factors such as the above, lawyers in separate units, offices or departments do not "work together" with other lawyers in other units, offices or departments, this will be taken into account in the determination of what screening measures are "reasonable."

[14] The following guidelines are intended as a checklist of relevant factors to be considered. Adoption of only some of the guidelines may be adequate in some cases, while adoption of them all may not be sufficient in others.

1. The transferring lawyer should have no involvement in the new law firm's representation of its client.
2. The transferring lawyer should not discuss the current matter or any information relating to the representation of the former client (the two may be identical) with anyone else in the new law firm.
3. No member of the new law firm should discuss the current matter or the previous representation with the transferring lawyer.
4. The current matter should be discussed only within the limited group that is working on the matter.
5. The files of the current client, including computer files, should be physically segregated from the new law firm's regular filing system, specifically identified, and accessible only to those lawyers and support staff in the new law firm who are working on the matter or who require access for other specifically identified and approved reasons.
6. No member of the new law firm should show the transferring lawyer any documents relating to the current representation.
7. The measures taken by the new law firm to prevent the disclosure of confidential information should be stated in a written policy explained to all lawyers and support staff within the firm, supported by an admonition that violation of the policy will result in sanctions, up to and including dismissal.
8. Appropriate law firm members should provide undertakings setting out that they have adhered to and will continue to adhere to all elements of the firm's policy.
9. If the former client, or a lawyer representing the former client, requests further information regarding the protection of confidential information, the former client should be advised of the measures adopted by the new law firm to ensure that there will be no disclosure of confidential information. An appropriate response may include the provision of an affidavit or statutory declaration, confirming that the transferring lawyer possesses no confidential information or, alternatively, that a transferring lawyer possessing actual confidential information has not disclosed the former client's confidential information to other members of the new firm.
10. The transferring lawyer's office or work station and that of the lawyer's support staff should be located away from the offices or work stations of lawyers and support staff working on the matter.
11. The transferring lawyer should use associates and support staff different from those working on the current matter.

12. In the case of law firms with multiple offices, consideration should be given to referring conduct of the matter to counsel in another office.

Merged Firms

3.4-11 When two or more firms have been representing different parties in a matter and the firms merge during the course of the matter, the following rules apply:

(a) If the matter constitutes a dispute, the merged firm must not continue acting for opposing parties to the dispute.

(b) If the matter constitutes a potential or actual conflicting interest, the merged firm may continue acting for more than one party only in compliance with Rule 3.4-5.

(c) Whether the matter constitutes a dispute or a potential or actual conflicting interest, the merged firm may continue acting for one of the parties only if all parties consent.

Commentary

[1] A merger is distinguishable from lawyer movement between firms because knowledge of confidential information will be imputed to the merged firm when two or more firms merge. It may be impossible for the merged firm to represent more than one client in a matter. In evaluating the best interests of the clients, the firm should consider additional factors such as the stage of the matter at the time of merger. If the matter has not progressed very far and it would not be unduly prejudicial or costly for the clients to obtain other counsel, the merged firm may be wise to refer all parties to other firms.

[2] If, however, the firm wishes to send one or more clients elsewhere while continuing to act for another of the clients (whether the matter constitutes a dispute, or a potential or actual conflict), all parties must consent.

Conflict with Lawyer's Own Interests

3.4-12 A lawyer must not act when there is a conflict of interest between lawyer and client, unless the client consents and it is in the client's best interests that the lawyer act.

Commentary

[1] If a lawyer's own loyalty, interest, or belief would impair the lawyer's ability to carry out a representation, the lawyer may not act. If the conflicting interest of the lawyer does not impair the lawyer's objectivity, the lawyer should nonetheless decline to act unless the representation is in the client's best interests. In making this judgment, the lawyer must evaluate all relevant factors. It is insufficient to rely on the client's assessment. The client must consent to the representation after disclosure by the lawyer of the nature of the conflicting interest and the advantages of independent representation. The lawyer has the onus to establish disclosure to and consent from the client. It is therefore advisable that these matters be confirmed in writing.

[2] In addition, a lawyer's professional objectivity in a matter may be threatened or destroyed by circumstances personal to the lawyer. A conflict may arise due to a family or other close relationship, an outside activity, or a strong belief or viewpoint. Another example is a mental state created or exacerbated by a particular representation, such as feelings of enmity towards a colleague acting for an opposing party. A lawyer's objectivity may also be affected when the lawyer unduly favours the client's position, since the result may be overly optimistic advice or an unrealistic recommendation.

[3] In all of these circumstances, a lawyer must recognize when it is not in the client's best interests to be represented by the lawyer.

Doing Business with a Client

3.4-13 A lawyer must not enter into a transaction with a client who does not have independent legal representation unless the transaction is fair and reasonable to the client and the client consents to the transaction.

Commentary

[1] This rule applies to any transaction with a client, including:

(a) lending or borrowing money (see related commentary below);

(b) buying or selling property;

(c) accepting a gift, including a testamentary gift (see related commentary below);

(d) giving or acquiring ownership, security or other pecuniary interest in a company or other entity;

(e) recommending an investment; and

(f) entering into a common business venture.

General Principles

[2] The relationship between lawyer and client is a fiduciary one, and no conflict between the lawyer's own interest and the lawyer's duty to the client is permitted. When entering a transaction with a client who does not otherwise have independent legal representation, the lawyer faces a potential conflict whether acting only on his own behalf or on behalf of both himself and the client in relation to the transaction.

[3] Independent legal representation is distinguishable from independent legal advice. Independent legal representation is a retainer in which the client has a separate lawyer acting for the client in the transaction. Independent legal advice is a retainer in which the client does not wish to have full independent legal representation but receives advice about the legal aspects of the transaction and its advisability.

[4] When the client does not have separate independent legal representation in the transaction, the lawyer has the onus of demonstrating that:

- the transaction was fair and reasonable to the client;
- the transaction was not disadvantageous to the client;
- the client was fully informed;
- the client consented to the transaction; and
- the client had independent legal advice, or was not disadvantaged by its absence.

[5] For the purposes of this rule and commentary, the reference to a "lawyer" includes an associate or partner of the lawyer, related persons (as defined below), and a trust or estate in which the lawyer has a beneficial interest or for which the lawyer acts as a trustee or in a similar capacity.

[6] In this rule, "related persons" means individuals connected to the lawyer by a blood relationship, marriage or common-law partnership or adoption, and includes a corporation owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the lawyer, or other related persons as described, either individually or in combination with one another.

[7] A conflict may also arise if a related person transacts business with the lawyer's client. There is no conflict, however, if the client is entering a transaction with a publicly traded corporation or entity in which the lawyer has an interest.

[8] The lawyer must act in good faith and make full disclosure to the client of material facts relevant to the transaction. The lawyer must also disclose and explain the nature of any actual or potential conflict of interest to the client. If the lawyer does not choose to make disclosure of material facts or a conflict of interest, or cannot do so without breaching confidentiality, the lawyer must not proceed with the transaction.

[9] The client must be advised of the advantages of retaining independent counsel. The nature of the matter may require that the client have independent legal representation. At a minimum, the lawyer must recommend that the client seek independent legal advice. If the client elects to waive independent legal advice, the lawyer must still make an independent assessment of whether he or she is able to proceed, considering the nature of the transaction. All discussions with the client should be clearly documented and confirmed in writing.

Payment of Fees

[10] The remuneration paid to a lawyer by a client for the legal work undertaken by the lawyer for the client does not give rise to a conflict of interest.

[11] Where a client proposes to pay for legal services by transferring an interest in a corporation, property, investment or other enterprise, the lawyer must, at a minimum, recommend that the client receive independent legal advice.

[12] See also “Gifts and Bequests”, below, regarding fees paid to lawyers for the administration of an estate.

Lending and Borrowing

[13] A lawyer must not borrow money from a client unless:

- the client is a lending institution whose business includes lending money to members of the public, or
- the client is a related person and the lawyer is able to discharge the onus of proving that the client’s interests were fully protected by independent legal advice.

[14] If a lawyer lends money to a client, before agreeing to make the loan, the lawyer must disclose and explain the nature of the conflicting interest to the client, recommend that the client receive independent legal representation, and obtain the client’s consent.

[15] A lawyer must not personally guarantee, or otherwise provide security for, any indebtedness in respect of which a client is a borrower or lender unless:

- the lender is providing funds solely for the lawyer or a related person,
- the transaction is for the benefit of a non-profit or charitable institution, and the lawyer is a member or supporter of such institution, either individually or together with others, or
- the lawyer has entered into a business venture with a client and a lender requires personal guarantees from all participants in the venture as a matter of course and the lawyer has otherwise complied with these rules.

Gifts and Bequests

[16] A "transaction" includes the acceptance of a gift or bequest. A lawyer is not entitled to make a profit from clients other than through fair professional remuneration. If a gift or bequest from a client appears to be unearned or disproportionately substantial, it is prima facie not "fair and reasonable" to the client as required by this rule and a presumption of undue influence is raised. A lawyer must refuse to accept a gift that is other than nominal unless the client has received independent legal advice.

[17] A lawyer may prepare an instrument giving the lawyer or another firm member a gift or benefit from a client, including a testamentary gift, where the client is a family member of the lawyer or another firm member. A lawyer must otherwise refuse to draft an instrument effecting a gift or bequest to the lawyer or any related person or entity.

[18] A lawyer may draft a client's will to include a clause directing that the executor retain the lawyer's services in the administration of the client's estate, but only if the client expressly instructs the lawyer to do so. Express instructions from the client are also required if the will contains a clause dealing with the lawyer's fees, whether the lawyer is acting as executor, the estate's lawyer, or both.

Compassionate Loans – Alberta

[19] Lawyers sometimes find themselves in situations where their clients have claims but are in dire financial circumstances and request a loan (which for these purposes includes a cash advance on prospective recovery) from the lawyer, with little or no prospect of repayment other than from the proceeds of the case. Because of the inequality of the bargaining positions of the lawyer and the client in these situations, and the inevitable appearance that the lawyer is taking advantage of the client, a lawyer must not make a loan to such a client other than on a no-interest, no-charges basis; however, it may be appropriate for a lawyer to make a compassionate loan to such a client, to be repaid out of the proceeds of the case or otherwise. A compassionate loan is one made for the purpose of relieving the client's personal or financial distress and which carries no interest or other charges, reflecting the fact that the loan is intended as a compassionate gesture and not as a commercial transaction.

[20] A lawyer must not make a compassionate loan if, as a result of the lawyer's expectation of recovering fees, disbursements, and the loan from the proceeds of the case, the lawyer has a financial interest in the case that is so disproportionate that the lawyer's objectivity will be impaired. After making a compassionate loan, a lawyer's objectivity or judgment may be adversely affected by a reassessment of the case. In that event, the lawyer must cease to act.

[21] This commentary applies to the conduct of a lawyer personally or that of related persons, including any arrangement pursuant to which the lawyer benefits directly or indirectly, such as, for example, a referral by a lawyer to a lender who is a member of the lawyer's immediate family or a lender controlled by a member of the lawyer's immediate family.

Conflicts Arising from Relationships with Others

3.4-14 A lawyer must not personally represent a party to a dispute when a family member is acting for an opposing party and, unless all parties consent, a lawyer must not personally represent a party to a matter when a family member is representing another party to the matter and those parties are in a conflict or potential conflict situation.

Commentary

[1] If a relationship exists that does not, pursuant to this rule, prevent a lawyer from acting in a matter but where doing so may raise a reasonable apprehension of impropriety, the lawyer must disclose the relationship to the client (see also Rule 5.1-3 - avoidance of apprehension of bias when appearing before a tribunal).

[2] For the purposes of this rule, "family member" means the spouse, child, sibling, parent, grandchild or grandparent of a lawyer, and any person who is a member of the lawyer's household.

[3] This rule applies only to the lawyer having the relationship in question and not to other members of the lawyer's firm.

[4] A close familial relationship is inconsistent with the adversarial nature of legal representation in a dispute. In contrast, the absence of a dispute may permit related lawyers to act provided that the lawyer's objectivity is not impaired. If, however, the situation constitutes a conflict or potential conflict, the consent of all parties must be obtained.

[5] A lawyer may have a close relationship with a person not qualifying as a family member. That relationship may nonetheless be relevant to a particular representation. For example, a lawyer may be married to the secretary of opposing counsel; lawyers acting on opposing sides of a matter may be cousins or close friends; or opposing counsel may be a member of a small firm in which the lawyer's spouse practises. In these and similar situations, the relationship must be disclosed to the client.

Pro Bono Service – Alberta

3.4-15 (a) A lawyer engaged in the provision of short-term legal services through a non-profit legal services provider, without any expectation that the lawyer will provide continuing representation in the matter:

(i) May provide legal services, unless the lawyer is aware that the clients' interests are directly adverse to the immediate interests of another current client of the individual lawyer, the lawyer's firm or the non-profit legal services provider; and

(ii) May provide legal services, unless the lawyer is aware that the lawyer or the lawyer's firm may be disqualified from acting due to the possession of confidential information which could be used to the disadvantage of a current or former client of the lawyer, the lawyer's firm, or the non-profit legal services provider.

(b) In the event a lawyer provides short-term legal services through a non-profit legal services provider, other lawyers within the lawyer's firm or providing services through the non-profit legal services provider may undertake or continue the representation of other clients with interests adverse to the client being represented for a short-term or limited purpose, provided that adequate screening measures are taken to prevent disclosure or involvement by the lawyer providing short-term legal services.

Commentary

[1] This rule provides guidance in managing conflicts of interest for lawyers volunteering in a pro bono setting. Improving access to justice is an important goal of the legal profession. Lawyers have a duty to facilitate access to justice: Rule 4.1-1. Also, lawyers have a duty to participate in pro bono activities: Rule 2.1-2. This objective should be balanced with all other factors in determining whether a lawyer should be disqualified from a representation because of a conflict of interest.

[2] For the purposes of this rule, the term "non-profit legal services provider" means volunteer pro bono and non-profit legal services organizations, including Legal Aid Alberta. These non-profit legal services providers have established programs through which lawyers provide short-term legal services.

[3] "Short-term legal services" means advice or representation of a summary nature provided by a lawyer to a pro bono client under the auspices of a non-profit organization with the expectation by the lawyer and the pro bono client that the lawyer will not provide continuing representation in the matter. It is in the interests of the public, the legal profession and the judicial system that lawyers be available to individuals through these organizations. Although a lawyer-client relationship is established in such a limited consultation, there is no expectation that the lawyer's representation of the pro bono client will continue beyond it. Such programs or services are normally offered in circumstances which make it difficult to systematically identify conflicts of interest, despite the best efforts and existing practices of non-profit legal services organizations. Further, the limited nature of the legal services being provided significantly reduces the risk of conflicts of interest with other matters being handled by the consulting lawyer's firm.

[4] Accordingly, the rule requires compliance with the usual rules which govern conflicts of interest only if the consulting lawyer has actual knowledge that he or she may be disqualified as the result of a potential or actual conflict. Such a conflict may involve a lawyer's relationship between an existing or former client and the consulting lawyer, the lawyer's firm or the non-profit legal services provider. In most cases, it is expected that the existence of a potential conflict will be identified through the conflict identification processes employed by non-profit legal services organizations or by the individual lawyer who may identify a conflict before or at the time of meeting with the pro bono client receiving the short-term legal services.

[5] The personal disqualification of a lawyer providing legal services through a non-profit legal services provider shall not be imputed to other participating lawyers. If, however, the lawyer intends to represent the pro bono client on an ongoing basis after commencing the short-term limited retainer, the other rules governing conflicts of interest will apply.

[6] The confidentiality of information obtained by a lawyer providing short-term legal services pursuant to this rule must be maintained. If not, a lawyer's firm, or other lawyers providing services under the auspices of the non-profit legal services provider, will not be able to act for other clients where there is a conflict with the pro bono client. Without restricting the scope of screening measures which may be appropriate, the following are examples of some measures which may be taken to ensure confidentiality:

- The lawyer who provided the short-term legal services shall have no involvement in the representation of another client whose interests conflict with those of the pro bono client, and shall not have any discussions with the lawyers representing the other client.
- Discussions involving the relevant matter should take place only with the limited group of firm members working on the other client's matter.
- The relevant files may be specifically identified and physically segregated and access to them limited only to those working on the file or who require access for specifically identified or approved reasons.
- It would also be advisable to issue a written memo to all lawyers and support staff, explaining the measures which have been undertaken.
- See Rule 3.4-10, paragraph 14, guidelines for screening, for additional suggestions.

[7] Provided this rule has been complied with, the lawyer providing short-term legal services does not require consent of the pro bono client or another client whose interests are in conflict with the pro bono client. However, if the lawyer is or becomes aware of a conflict, then it may not be waived by consent. In that case, the lawyer shall not provide short-term legal services.

[8] When offering short-term legal services, lawyers should also assess whether the pro bono client may require additional legal services, beyond a limited consultation. In the event that such additional services are required or advisable, the lawyer should explain the limited nature of the consultation and encourage or assist the pro bono client to seek further legal assistance.

3.5 Preservation of Clients' Property

Preservation of Clients' Property

3.5-1 (a) In this rule, "property" includes a client's money, securities as defined in the Alberta Securities Act, original documents such as wills, title deeds, minute books, licences, certificates and the like, and all other papers such as client's correspondence, files, reports, invoices and other such documents, as well as personal property including precious and semi-precious metals, jewellery and the like.

(b) A lawyer must:

(i) observe all relevant rules and law, including the duties of a professional fiduciary, about the preservation of a client's property entrusted to a lawyer; and

(ii) care for a client's property as a careful and prudent owner would when dealing with like property.

Commentary

[1] The duties concerning safekeeping, preserving, and accounting for clients' money and other property are set out in the Rules of the Law Society, Rules 119-119.46.

[2] These duties are closely related to those regarding confidential information. A lawyer is responsible for maintaining the safety and confidentiality of the files of the client in the possession of the lawyer and should take all reasonable steps to ensure the privacy and safekeeping of a client's confidential information. A lawyer should keep the client's papers and other property out of sight as well as out of reach of those not entitled to see them.

[3] Subject to any rights of lien, the lawyer should promptly return a client's property to the client on request or at the conclusion of the lawyer's retainer.

[4] If the lawyer withdraws from representing a client, the lawyer is required to comply with Rule 3.7 (Withdrawal from Representation).

Notification of Receipt of Property

3.5-2 A lawyer must promptly notify a client of the receipt of any money or other property of the client, unless satisfied that the client is aware that they have come into the lawyer's custody.

Identifying Clients' Property

3.5-3 A lawyer must clearly label and identify clients' property and place it in safekeeping distinguishable from the lawyer's own property.

3.5-4 A lawyer must maintain such records as necessary to identify clients' property that is in the lawyer's custody.

Accounting and Delivery

3.5-5 A lawyer must account promptly for clients' property that is in the lawyer's custody and deliver it to the order of the client on request or, if appropriate, at the conclusion of the retainer.

Commentary

[1] Money held in trust by a lawyer to the credit of a client may not be applied to fees incurred by the client unless an account has been rendered to the client. This rule permits the use of trust money held to the credit of a client to pay an outstanding account not only in the matter in respect of which the trust money was received, but in any previous matter handled by the lawyer for the same client. This rule is not, however, intended to be an exhaustive statement of the considerations that apply to the payment of a lawyer's account from trust. The handling of trust money generally is governed by the Rules of the Law Society. Those Rules must also be complied with in the application of trust money to fees earned by a lawyer.

3.5-6 If a lawyer is unsure of the proper person to receive a client's property, the lawyer must apply to a tribunal of competent jurisdiction for direction.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer should be alert to the duty to claim on behalf of a client any privilege in respect of property seized or attempted to be seized by an external authority or in respect of third party claims made against the property. In this regard, the lawyer should be familiar with the nature of the client's common law privilege and with such relevant constitutional and statutory provisions as those found in the Income Tax Act (Canada), the Charter and the Criminal Code.

[2] The duties of a lawyer with respect to the handling of client property that is evidence of a crime are complex and may impose additional duties beyond those described in this rule (See Rule 5.1-10 and Commentary).

3.6 Fees and Disbursements

Reasonable Fees and Disbursements

3.6-1 A lawyer must not charge or accept a fee or disbursement, including interest or other charges, unless it is fair and reasonable and has been disclosed in a timely fashion.

Commentary

[1] What is a fair and reasonable fee depends on such factors as:

(a) the time and effort required and spent;

(b) the difficulty of the matter and the importance of the matter to the client;

(c) whether special skill or service has been required and provided;

(d) the results obtained;

(e) fees authorized by statute or regulation;

(f) special circumstances, such as the postponement of payment, uncertainty of reward, or urgency;

(g) the likelihood, if made known to the client, that acceptance of the retainer will result in the lawyer's inability to accept other employment;

(h) any relevant agreement between the lawyer and the client;

(i) the experience and ability of the lawyer;

(j) any estimate or range of fees given by the lawyer; and

(k) the client's prior consent to the fee.

[2] The fiduciary relationship between lawyer and client requires full disclosure in all financial dealings between them and prohibits the acceptance by the lawyer of any hidden fees. No fee, extra fees, reward, costs, commission, interest, rebate, agency or forwarding allowance, or other compensation related to professional employment may be taken by the lawyer from anyone other than the client without full disclosure to and the consent of the client or, where the lawyer's fees are being paid by someone other than the client, such as a legal aid agency, a borrower, or a personal representative, without the consent of such agency or other person.

[3] A lawyer should provide to the client in writing, before or within a reasonable time after commencing a representation, as much information regarding fees and disbursements, and interest, as is reasonable and practical in the circumstances, including the basis on which fees will be determined.

[4] A lawyer should be ready to explain the basis of the fees and disbursement charged to the client. This is particularly important concerning fee charges or disbursements that the client might not reasonably be expected to anticipate. When something unusual or unforeseen occurs that may substantially affect the amount of a fee or disbursement, the lawyer should give to the client an immediate explanation. A lawyer should confirm with the client in writing the substance of all fee discussions that occur as a matter progresses, and a lawyer may revise an initial estimate of fees and disbursements.

Contingent Fees and Contingent Fee Agreements

3.6-2 Subject to Rule 3.6-1, a lawyer may enter into a written agreement in accordance with governing legislation that provides that the lawyer's fee is contingent, in whole or in part, on the outcome of the matter for which the lawyer's services are to be provided.

Commentary

[1] In determining the appropriate percentage or other basis of a contingency fee, a lawyer and client should consider a number of factors, including the likelihood of success, the nature and complexity of the claim, the expense and risk of pursuing it and the amount of the expected recovery. Party-and-party costs received by a lawyer are the property of the client and should therefore be accounted for to the client in accordance with the Alberta Rules of Court, Rule 10.7. The test is whether the fee, in all of the circumstances, is fair and reasonable.

[2] Although a lawyer is generally permitted to terminate the professional relationship with a client and withdraw services if there is justifiable cause as set out in Rule 3.7, special circumstances apply when the retainer is pursuant to a contingency agreement. In such circumstances, the lawyer has impliedly undertaken the risk of not being paid in the event the suit is unsuccessful. Accordingly, a lawyer cannot withdraw from representation for reasons other than those set out in Rule 3.7-5 (Obligatory Withdrawal) unless the written contingency contract specifically states that the lawyer has a right to do so and sets out the circumstances under which this may occur.

Statement of Account

3.6-3 In a statement of an account delivered to a client, a lawyer must clearly and separately detail the amounts charged as fees and disbursements.

Commentary

[1] The two main categories of charges on a statement of account are fees and disbursements. A lawyer may charge as disbursements only those amounts that have been paid or are required to be paid to a third party by the lawyer on a client's behalf. However, a subcategory entitled "Other Charges" may be included under the fees heading if a lawyer wishes to separately itemize charges such as paralegal, word processing or computer costs that are not disbursements, provided that the client has agreed to such costs.

[2] Subject to any special agreement with the client, a final account should be rendered within a reasonable time after completion of the services.

[3] See the Alberta Rules of Court, Rule 10.2, respecting the content of lawyers' accounts.

[4] Party-and-party costs received by a lawyer are the property of the client and should therefore be accounted for to the client. See the Commentary to Rule 3.6-2 respecting contingency matters.

Joint Retainer

3.6-4 If a lawyer acts for two or more clients in the same matter, the lawyer must divide the fees and disbursements equitably between them, unless there is an agreement by the clients otherwise.

Division of Fees and Referral Fees

3.6-5 If there is consent from the client, fees for a matter may be divided between lawyers who are not in the same firm, provided that the fees are divided in proportion to the work done and the responsibilities assumed.

3.6-6 If a lawyer refers a matter to another lawyer because of the expertise and ability of the other lawyer to handle the matter, and the referral was not made because of a conflict of interest, the referring lawyer may accept, and the other lawyer may pay, a referral fee, provided that:

(a) the fee is reasonable and does not increase the total amount of the fee charged to the client; and

(b) the client is informed and consents.

3.6-7 A lawyer must not:

(a) in connection with the referral of clients, directly or indirectly share, split, or divide his or her fees with any person who is not a lawyer; or

(b) give any financial or other reward for the referral of clients or client matters to any person who is not a lawyer.

Commentary

[1] This rule prohibits lawyers from entering into arrangements to compensate or reward non-lawyers for the referral of clients. It does not prevent a lawyer from engaging in promotional activities involving reasonable expenditures on promotional items or activities that might result in the referral of clients generally by a non-lawyer. Accordingly, this rule does not prohibit a lawyer from:

(a) making an arrangement respecting the purchase and sale of a law practice when the consideration payable includes a percentage of revenues generated from the practice sold;

(b) entering into a lease under which a landlord directly or indirectly shares in the fees or revenues generated by the law practice;

(c) paying an employee for services, other than for referring clients, based on the revenue of the lawyer's firm or practice; or

(d) occasionally entertaining potential referral sources by purchasing meals, providing tickets to, or attending at, sporting or other activities or sponsoring client functions.

[2] Lawyers may pay non-lawyers for direct and reasonable advertising costs (including a lawyer referral service), and are also allowed to compensate employees and other persons for general marketing and public relations services, whether by salary, profit sharing, bonus or otherwise, provided the compensation is not directly related to a specific client matter.

Exception for Multi-discipline Practices and Inter-jurisdictional Law Firms

3.6-8 Rule 3.6-7 does not apply to:

(a) multi-discipline practices of lawyer and non-lawyer partners if the partnership agreement provides for the sharing of fees, cash flows or profits among the members of the firm; and

(b) sharing of fees, cash flows or profits by lawyers who are members of an interjurisdictional law firm.

Commentary

[1] An affiliation is different from a multi-disciplinary practice established in accordance with the rules, regulations or by-laws under the governing legislation, or an interjurisdictional law firm, however structured. An affiliation is subject to Rule 3.6-7. In particular, an affiliated entity is not permitted to share in the lawyer's revenues, cash flows or profits, either directly or indirectly through excessive inter-firm charges, for example, by charging inter-firm expenses above their fair market value.

Payment and Appropriation of Funds

3.6-9 A lawyer must not appropriate any client funds held in trust or otherwise under the lawyer's control for or on account of fees, except as permitted by the governing legislation.

Commentary

[1] The rule is not intended to be an exhaustive statement of the considerations that apply to payment of a lawyer's account from trust. The handling of trust money is generally governed by the Rules of the Law Society.

[2] Refusing to reimburse any portion of advance fees for work that has not been carried out when the contract of professional services with the client has terminated is a breach of the obligation to act with integrity.

3.6-10 If the amount of fees or disbursements charged by a lawyer is reduced on a review or assessment, the lawyer must repay the money to the client as soon as is practicable.

Prepaid Legal Services Plan

3.6-11 A lawyer who accepts a client referred by a prepaid legal services plan must advise the client in writing of:

(a) the scope of work to be undertaken by the lawyer under the plan; and

(b) the extent to which a fee or disbursement will be payable by the client to the lawyer.

3.7 Withdrawal from Representation

Withdrawal from Representation

3.7-1 A lawyer must not withdraw from representation of a client except for good cause and on reasonable notice to the client.

Commentary

[1] Although the client has the right to terminate the lawyer-client relationship at will, a lawyer does not enjoy the same freedom of action. Having undertaken the representation of a client, the lawyer should complete the task as ably as possible unless there is justifiable cause for terminating the relationship. It is inappropriate for a lawyer to withdraw on capricious or arbitrary grounds.

[2] An essential element of reasonable notice is notification to the client, unless the client cannot be located after reasonable efforts. No hard and fast rules can be laid down as to what constitutes reasonable notice before withdrawal and how quickly a lawyer may cease acting after notification will depend on all relevant circumstances. When the matter is covered by statutory provisions or the Rules of Court, these will govern. In other situations, the governing principle is that the lawyer should protect the client's interests to the best of the lawyer's ability and should not desert the client at a critical stage of a matter or at a time when withdrawal would put the client in a position of disadvantage or peril. As a general rule, the client should be given sufficient time to retain and instruct replacement counsel. Nor should withdrawal or an intention to withdraw be permitted to waste court time or prevent other counsel from reallocating time or resources scheduled for the matter in question. See Rule 3.7-6, Manner of Withdrawal.

[3] Every effort should be made to ensure that withdrawal occurs at an appropriate time in the proceedings in keeping with the lawyer's obligations. The court, opposing parties and others directly affected should also be notified of the withdrawal.

Optional Withdrawal

3.7-2 If there has been a serious loss of confidence between the lawyer and the client, the lawyer may withdraw.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer may have a justifiable cause for withdrawal in circumstances indicating a loss of confidence, for example, if a lawyer is deceived by the client, the client refuses to accept and act upon the lawyer's advice on a significant point, a client is persistently unreasonable or uncooperative in a material respect, or the lawyer is facing difficulty in obtaining adequate instructions from the client. However, the lawyer should not use the threat of withdrawal as a device to force a hasty decision by the client on a difficult question.

Non-payment of Fees

3.7-3 If, after reasonable notice, the client fails to provide a retainer or funds on account of disbursements or fees, a lawyer may withdraw unless serious prejudice to the client would result.

Commentary

[1] When the lawyer withdraws because the client has not paid the lawyer's fee, the lawyer should ensure that there is sufficient time for the client to obtain the services of another lawyer and for that other lawyer to prepare adequately for trial. Also see the commentary to Rule 3.7-4.

Withdrawal from Criminal Proceedings

3.7-4 If a lawyer has agreed to act in a criminal case and the interval between a withdrawal and the trial of the case is sufficient to enable the client to obtain another lawyer and to allow such other lawyer adequate time for preparation, the lawyer who has agreed to act may withdraw because the client has not paid the agreed fee or for other adequate cause provided that the lawyer:

(a) notifies the client, in writing, that the lawyer is withdrawing because the fees have not been paid or for other adequate cause;

(b) accounts to the client for any money received on account of fees and disbursements;

(c) notifies Crown counsel that the lawyer is no longer acting; and

(d) complies with the applicable Rules of Court.

Commentary

[1] In Alberta, when a lawyer seeks to withdraw in criminal proceedings the usual practice is to apply for leave in open court.

[2] A lawyer who has withdrawn, or intends to withdraw, because of conflict with the client should not indicate in the notice addressed to the court or Crown counsel the cause of the conflict or make reference to any matter that would violate the privilege that exists between lawyer and client. The notice should merely state that the lawyer is no longer acting and has withdrawn. If the court requests that the lawyer provide reasons for withdrawal, then the lawyer may indicate that there are "ethical reasons" or an inability to obtain proper instructions, making the least possible disclosure of privileged information. In certain circumstances, the court may refuse to allow a lawyer to withdraw for non-payment of fees.

Obligatory Withdrawal

3.7-5 A lawyer must withdraw if:

(a) discharged by a client;

(b) a client persists in instructing the lawyer to act contrary to professional ethics; or

(c) the lawyer is not competent to continue to handle a matter.

Manner of Withdrawal

3.7-6 When a lawyer withdraws, the lawyer must try to minimize expense and avoid prejudice to the client and must do all that can reasonably be done to facilitate the orderly transfer of the matter to the successor lawyer.

3.7-7 On discharge or withdrawal, a lawyer must:

(a) notify the client in writing, stating:

(i) the fact that the lawyer has withdrawn;

(ii) the reasons, if any, for the withdrawal; and

(iii) in the case of litigation, that the client should expect that the hearing or trial will proceed on the date scheduled and that the client should retain new counsel promptly;

(b) subject to the lawyer's right to a lien, deliver to or to the order of the client all papers and property to which the client is entitled;

(c) subject to any applicable trust conditions, give the client all relevant information in connection with the case or matter;

(d) account for all funds of the client then held or previously dealt with, including the refunding of any remuneration not earned during the representation;

(e) promptly render an account for outstanding fees and disbursements;

(f) co-operate with the successor lawyer in the transfer of the file so as to minimize expense and avoid prejudice to the client; and

(g) comply with the applicable Rules of Court.

Commentary

[1] If the lawyer who is discharged or withdraws is a member of a firm, the client should be notified that the lawyer and the firm are no longer acting for the client.

[2] If the question of a right of lien for unpaid fees and disbursements arises on the discharge or withdrawal of the lawyer, the lawyer should have due regard to the effect of its enforcement on the client's position. Generally speaking, a lawyer should not enforce a lien if to do so would prejudice materially a client's position in any uncompleted matter. Material prejudice is more than mere inconvenience to the client. A lawyer should not enforce a solicitor's lien for non-payment if the client is prepared to enter into an arrangement that reasonably assures the lawyer of payment in due course. When a matter is being transferred to other counsel, the transferring lawyer may request that the receiving lawyer undertake to pay an outstanding account from the money ultimately recovered by that lawyer. Where the matter in question is subject to a contingency agreement, the lawyers may agree to divide the contingent fee on the basis of an apportionment of total effort required to effect recovery.

[3] The obligation to deliver papers and property is subject to a lawyer's right of lien. In the event of conflicting claims to such papers or property, the lawyer should make every effort to have the claimants settle the dispute.

[4] Co-operation with the successor lawyer will normally include providing any memoranda of fact and law that have been prepared by the lawyer in connection with the matter, but confidential information not clearly related to the matter should not be divulged without the written consent of the client.

[5] Subject to Rule 3.4 (Conflicts of Interest) and Rule 3.3 (Confidentiality), a lawyer acting for several clients in a case or matter who ceases to act for one or more of them should co-operate with the successor lawyer or lawyers and should seek to avoid any unseemly rivalry, whether real or apparent.

Duty of Successor Lawyer

3.7-8 Before agreeing to represent a client, a successor lawyer must be satisfied that the former lawyer has withdrawn or has been discharged by the client.

Commentary

[1] It is quite proper for the successor lawyer to urge the client to settle or take reasonable steps toward settling or securing any outstanding account of the former lawyer, especially if the latter withdrew for good cause or was capriciously discharged. But, if a trial or hearing is in progress or imminent, or if the client would otherwise be prejudiced, the existence of an outstanding account should not be allowed to interfere with the successor lawyer acting for the client.

Leaving a Law Firm

3.7-9 When a lawyer leaves a law firm, the lawyer and the law firm must:

(a) ensure that clients who have current matters for which the departing lawyer has conduct or substantial involvement are given reasonable notice that the lawyer is departing and are advised of their options for retaining counsel; and

(b) take reasonable steps to obtain the instructions of each affected client as to who they will retain.

Commentary

[1] When a lawyer leaves a firm to practise elsewhere, it may result in the termination of the lawyer-client relationship between that lawyer and a client.

[2] The departing lawyer should provide reasonable notice of the lawyer's departure to the firm, in advance of any notice of the departure to clients.

[3] The client's interests are paramount. Clients must be free to decide whom to retain as counsel, without undue influence or pressure by the lawyer or the firm. The client should be provided with sufficient information to make an informed decision about whether to (a) continue with the departing lawyer, (b) remain with the firm, or (c) retain new counsel.

[4] The lawyer and the law firm should cooperate to identify the clients who should receive notice of the lawyer's departure and to agree on the contents of a neutrally-worded letter which provides notice of the departure and sets forth the three available options listed in paragraph [3]. The firm should provide notice of the lawyer's departure to the affected clients, which include those who have current matters for which the departing lawyer has conduct or in which the departing lawyer has had substantial involvement. In the absence of agreement, either the departing lawyer and the law firm may provide the notification. In some cases, the departure of the lawyer may be relevant to the handling of a client's file. The firm may have an obligation to notify the client of the lawyer's departure, even if the firm and departing lawyer agree that the client will not be provided with a letter in which the client is asked to choose one of the three options above,

[5] If a client contacts a law firm to request a departed lawyer's contact information, the law firm should provide the professional contact information where reasonably possible. The firm and the departing lawyer should agree that clients may be contacted by the other party, where appropriate. Should a client actively seek advice or information, the response of the lawyer contacted must be professional, neutral in tone, and consistent with the client's best interests.

[6] Where a client chooses to remain with the departing lawyer, the instructions referred to in the rule should include written authorizations for the transfer of files and client property. The lawyer and firm must come to a mutually acceptable arrangement respecting work in progress and disbursements outstanding on files that are to be transferred with the lawyer. In all cases, the situation should be managed in a way that minimizes expense and avoids prejudice to the client.

[7] When a client chooses to remain with the firm, the firm should consider whether it is reasonable in the circumstances to charge the client for time expended by another firm member to become familiar with the file.

[8] The principles outlined in this rule and commentary will apply to the dissolution of a law firm. When a law firm is dissolved, it usually results in the termination of the lawyer-client relationship between a particular client and one or more of the lawyers in the firm. The client should be notified of the dissolution and provided with sufficient information to decide who to retain as counsel. The lawyers who are no longer retained by the client should try to minimize expense and avoid prejudice to the client.

[9] See also rules 3.7-6 to 3.7-8 and related commentary regarding enforcement of a solicitor's lien and the duties of former and successor counsel.

[10] Rule 3.7-9 does not apply to a lawyer leaving (a) a government, a Crown corporation or any other public body or (b) a corporation or other organization for which the lawyer is employed as in house counsel.

Chapter 4 – Marketing of Legal Services

4.1 Making Legal Services Available

Making Legal Services Available

4.1-1 A lawyer must make legal services available to the public efficiently and conveniently and, subject to rule 4.1-2, may offer legal services to a prospective client by any means.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer may assist in making legal services available by participating in the Legal Aid Plan and lawyer referral services and by engaging in programs of public information, education or advice concerning legal matters.

[2] As a matter of access to justice, it is in keeping with the best traditions of the legal profession to provide services pro bono and to reduce or waive a fee when there is hardship or poverty or the client or prospective client would otherwise be deprived of adequate legal advice or representation. The Society encourages lawyers to provide public interest legal services and to support organizations that provide services to persons of limited means.

[3] A lawyer who knows or has reasonable grounds to believe that a client is entitled to Legal Aid should advise the client of the right to apply for Legal Aid, unless the circumstances indicate that the client has waived or does not need such assistance.

Right to Decline Representation

[4] A lawyer has a general right to decline a particular representation (except when assigned as counsel by a tribunal), but it is a right to be exercised prudently, particularly if the probable result would be to make it difficult for a person to obtain legal advice or representation. Generally, a lawyer should not exercise the right merely because a person seeking legal services or that person's cause is unpopular or notorious, or because powerful interests or allegations of misconduct or malfeasance are involved, or because of the lawyer's private opinion about the guilt of the accused. A lawyer declining representation should assist in obtaining the services of another lawyer qualified in the particular field and able to act. When a lawyer offers assistance to a client or prospective client in finding another lawyer, the assistance should be given willingly and, except where a referral fee is permitted by Rule 3.6-6, without charge.

Restrictions

4.1-2 In offering legal services, a lawyer must not use means that:

(a) are false or misleading;

(b) amount to coercion, duress, or harassment;

(c) take advantage of a person who is vulnerable or who has suffered a traumatic experience and has not yet recovered; or

(d) otherwise bring the profession or the administration of justice into disrepute.

Commentary

[1] A person who is vulnerable or who has suffered a traumatic experience and has not recovered may need the professional assistance of a lawyer, and this rule does not prevent a lawyer from offering assistance to such a person. A lawyer is permitted to provide assistance to a person if a close relative or personal friend of the person contacts the lawyer for this purpose, and to offer assistance to a person with whom the lawyer has a close family or professional relationship. The rule prohibits the lawyer from using unconscionable, exploitive or other means that bring the profession or the administration of justice into disrepute.

4.1-3 A lawyer must not advertise that the lawyer will make loans to clients, whether such loans are characterized as loans or cash advances with respect to claims.

Commentary

[1] This rule applies to the conduct of a lawyer personally or in relation to entities either related to or controlled by a lawyer.

4.2 Marketing

Marketing of Professional Services

4.2-1 A lawyer may market professional services, provided that the marketing is:

(a) demonstrably true, accurate and verifiable;

(b) neither misleading, confusing or deceptive, nor likely to mislead, confuse or deceive;

(c) in the best interests of the public and consistent with a high standard of professionalism.

Commentary

[1] Examples of marketing that may contravene this rule include:

(a) stating an amount of money that the lawyer has recovered for a client or referring to the lawyer's degree of success in past cases, unless such statement is accompanied by a further statement that past results are not necessarily indicative of future results and that the amount recovered and other litigation outcomes will vary according to the facts in individual cases;

(b) suggesting qualitative superiority to other lawyers;

(c) raising expectations unjustifiably;

(d) suggesting or implying the lawyer is aggressive;

(e) disparaging or demeaning other persons, groups, organizations or institutions;

(f) taking advantage of a vulnerable person or group; and

(g) using testimonials or endorsements that contain emotional appeals.

Advertising of Fees

4.2-2 A lawyer may advertise fees charged for legal services provided that:

(a) the advertising is reasonably precise as to the services offered for each fee quoted;

(b) the advertising states whether other amounts, such as disbursements and taxes, will be charged in addition to the fee; and

(c) the lawyer strictly adheres to the advertised fee in every applicable case.

4.3 Advertising Nature of Practice

4.3-1 A lawyer must not advertise that the lawyer is a specialist in a specified field unless the lawyer has been so certified by the Society.

Commentary

[1] Lawyers' advertisements may be designed to provide information to assist a potential client to choose a lawyer who has the appropriate skills and knowledge for the client's particular legal matter.

[2] A lawyer who is not a certified specialist is not permitted to use any designation from which a person might reasonably conclude that the lawyer is a certified specialist. A claim that a lawyer is a specialist or expert, or specializes in an area of law, implies that the lawyer has met some objective standard or criteria of expertise, presumably established or recognized by a Law Society. In the absence of Law Society recognition or a certification process, an assertion by a lawyer that the lawyer is a specialist or expert is misleading and improper.

[3] If a firm practises in more than one jurisdiction, some of which certify or recognize specialization, an advertisement by such a firm that makes reference to the status of a firm member as a specialist or expert, in media circulated concurrently in the Province of Alberta and the certifying jurisdiction, does not offend this rule if the certifying authority or organization is identified.

[4] A lawyer may advertise areas of practice, including preferred areas of practice or a restriction to a certain area of law. An advertisement may also include a description of the lawyer's or law firm's proficiency or experience in an area of law. In all cases, the representations made must be accurate (that is, demonstrably true) and must not be misleading.

4.4 Firm Names

4.4-1 Law firms are permitted to use trade names, initials, logos, symbols, or the names of individuals or their professional corporations, provided that they are not misleading or confusing, and are otherwise consistent with these rules.

Commentary

[1] Firm names must accurately represent the firm and the work carried out by firm members. A firm name may consist of:

(a) the names of one or more individual lawyers;

(b) the names of one or more professional corporations;

(c) the names of existing or former partners or associates;

(d) a trade name; or

(e) any combination of (a), (b), (c) and (d).

[2] The firm must be able to: (a) demonstrate sufficient connection or relationship with the name(s) included, and (b) use such qualifying words as necessary to ensure that a potential consumer of the firm's services understands it is a law firm and is not engaged in some other business. A law firm name must not include the name of any individual or other entity not entitled to practise law in Canada or any other jurisdiction. The firm name may include the name(s) of individuals currently or formerly entitled to practice law in Canada and in jurisdictions other than Canada. If using a trade name, the name should include such phrases as “Law”, “Law Firm”, “Lawyer”, or “Barristers and Solicitors”, so that it is clear that the activity of the firm is the practice of law.

[3] The inclusion in a firm name of a person or entity not currently licensed or eligible to deliver legal services in Alberta, or a person who is no longer alive, does not constitute a representation that the named person or entity is available in the firm to deliver legal services.

[4] A trade name must be carefully selected to avoid any misconception on the part of the public. For example, "University Legal Clinic" would be unacceptable because it implies a connection with another institution. A geographical trade name is improper if it leads a reasonable person to erroneously conclude that the law office is a public agency, or is the only law office available in that area or locality, or if the name misleads the public in another respect. A trade name which includes a reference to the lawyer’s area(s) of practice is allowed, as long as it is not misleading or confusing.

[5] The name of a firm member who has become a judge may continue to be in the firm name (but not in the listing of names on the letterhead); however, no firm member may appear before that judge so long as the judge's name forms part of the firm name. This prohibition is necessary to preserve the appearance of justice and propriety (see Rule 5.1-3 and related commentary).

[6] The use by a sole practitioner of the phrase "and Company" or "and Associates" after the lawyer's surname is misleading.

Limited liability partnership

[7] A limited liability partnership, in addition to complying with the name regulations under the Partnership Act (Alberta), must ensure that any trade name used by the partnership clearly indicates the limited liability status of its partners.

Names listed on letterhead

[8] Names listed on letterhead must accurately represent the status of the individual(s) named. For example:

(a) the status of an inactive or former member must be clearly indicated;

(b) the names of extraprovincial lawyers associated with the firm must be so described, together with the jurisdictions in which they are authorized to practice;

(c) the position or status of persons who are not lawyers (such as office manager, in house accountants, students at law and patent and trade mark agents) employed by the firm, must be clearly stated.

[9] The status of a person whose name appears in the firm name only and is not listed on the letterhead does not require specification.

Chapter 5 – Relationship to the Administration of Justice

5.1 The Lawyer as Advocate

Advocacy

5.1-1 When acting as an advocate, a lawyer must represent the client resolutely and honourably within the limits of the law, while treating the tribunal with candour, fairness, courtesy and respect.

Commentary

[1] In adversarial proceedings, the lawyer has a duty to the client to raise fearlessly every issue, advance every argument and ask every question, however distasteful, that the lawyer thinks will help the client's case and to endeavour to obtain for the client the benefit of every remedy and defence authorized by law. The lawyer must discharge this duty by fair and honourable means, without illegality and in a manner that is consistent with the lawyer's duty to treat the tribunal with candour, fairness, courtesy and respect and in a way that promotes the parties' right to a fair hearing in which justice can be done. Maintaining dignity, decorum and courtesy in the courtroom is not an empty formality because, unless order is maintained, rights cannot be protected.

[2] This rule applies to the lawyer as advocate, and therefore extends not only to court proceedings but also to appearances and proceedings before boards, administrative tribunals, arbitrators, mediators and others who resolve disputes, regardless of their function or the informality of their procedures.

[3] The lawyer's function as advocate is openly and necessarily partisan. Accordingly, the lawyer is not obliged (except as required by law or under these rules and subject to the duties of a prosecutor set out below) to assist an adversary or advance matters harmful to the client's case.

[4] In adversarial proceedings that will likely affect the health, welfare or security of a child, a lawyer should advise the client to take into account the best interests of the child, if this can be done without prejudicing the legitimate interests of the client.

[5] A lawyer should refrain from expressing the lawyer's personal opinions on the facts in evidence of a client's case to a court or tribunal.

[6] A lawyer must not communicate with a tribunal respecting a matter unless the other parties to the matter, or their counsel, are present or have had reasonable prior notice, or unless the circumstances are exceptional and are disclosed fully and completely to the court.

[7] When a lawyer is required by law to notify one or more parties of a step taken or to be taken in a matter, the lawyer must notify all parties to the matter. Although certain steps appear to involve only certain parties and not others, the interests of one or more of the other parties may be affected in a manner not immediately evident.

[8] When opposing interests are not represented, for example, in without notice or uncontested matters or in other situations in which the full proof and argument inherent in the adversarial system cannot be achieved, the lawyer must take particular care to be accurate, candid and comprehensive in presenting the client's case so as to ensure that the tribunal is not misled. This situation creates an obligation on the lawyer present to prevent a manifestly unjust result by disclosing all material facts known to the lawyer that the lawyer reasonably believes are necessary to an informed decision.

[9] The lawyer should never waive or abandon the client's legal rights, such as an available defence under a statute of limitations, without the client's informed consent.

[10] In civil proceedings, a lawyer should avoid and discourage the client from resorting to frivolous or vexatious objections, attempts to gain advantage from slips or oversights not going to the merits or tactics that will merely delay or harass the other side. Such practices can readily bring the administration of justice and the legal profession into disrepute.

Duty as Defence Counsel

[11] When defending an accused person, a lawyer's duty is to protect the client as far as possible from being convicted, except by a tribunal of competent jurisdiction and upon legal evidence sufficient to support a conviction for the offence with which the client is charged. Accordingly, and notwithstanding the lawyer's private opinion on credibility or the merits, a lawyer may properly rely on any evidence or defences, including so-called technicalities, not known to be false or fraudulent.

[12] Admissions made by the accused to a lawyer may impose strict limitations on the conduct of the defence, and the accused should be made aware of this. For example, if the accused clearly admits to the lawyer the factual and mental elements necessary to constitute the offence, the lawyer, if convinced that the admissions are true and voluntary, may properly take objection to the jurisdiction of the court, the form of the indictment or the admissibility or sufficiency of the evidence, but must not suggest that some other person committed the offence or call any evidence that, by reason of the admissions, the lawyer believes to be false. Nor may the lawyer set up an affirmative case inconsistent with such admissions, for example, by calling evidence in support of an alibi intended to show that the accused could not have done or, in fact, has not done the act. Such admissions will also impose a limit on the extent to which the lawyer may attack the evidence for the prosecution. The lawyer is entitled to test the evidence given by each individual witness for the prosecution and argue that the evidence taken as a whole is insufficient to amount to proof that the accused is guilty of the offence charged, but the lawyer should go no further than that.

5.1-2 When acting as an advocate, a lawyer must not:

(a) abuse the process of the tribunal by instituting or prosecuting proceedings that, although legal in themselves, are clearly motivated by malice on the part of the client and are brought solely for the purpose of injuring the other party;

(b) take any step in the representation of a client that is clearly without merit;

(c) unreasonably delay the process of the tribunal;

(d) knowingly assist or permit a client to do anything that the lawyer considers to be dishonest or dishonourable;

(e) appear before a judicial officer when the lawyer, the lawyer's associates or the client have business or personal relationships with the officer that give rise to or might reasonably appear to give rise to pressure, influence or inducement affecting the impartiality of the officer, unless all parties consent and it is in the interests of justice;

(f) endeavour or allow anyone else to endeavour, directly or indirectly, to influence the decision or action of a tribunal or any of its officials in any case or matter by any means other than open persuasion as an advocate;

(g) knowingly attempt to deceive a tribunal or influence the course of justice by offering false evidence, misstating facts or law, presenting or relying upon a false or deceptive affidavit, suppressing what ought to be disclosed or otherwise assisting in any fraud, crime or illegal conduct;

(h) knowingly misstate the contents of a document, the testimony of a witness, the substance of an argument or the provisions of a statute or like authority;

(i) knowingly assert as true a fact when its truth cannot reasonably be supported by the evidence or as a matter of which notice may be taken by the tribunal;

(j) introduce or otherwise bring to the tribunal's attention facts or evidence that the lawyer knows to be inadmissible;

(k) make suggestions to a witness recklessly or knowing them to be false;

(l) permit or participate in a payment or other benefit to a witness in excess of reasonable compensation;

(m) counsel a witness to give evidence that is untruthful or misleading;

(n) deliberately refrain from informing a tribunal of any relevant adverse authority that the lawyer considers to be directly on point and that has not been mentioned by another party;

(o) improperly dissuade a witness from communicating with other parties or from giving evidence, or advise a witness to be absent;

(p) knowingly permit a witness or party to be presented in a false or misleading way or to impersonate another;

(q) discuss the testimony of a witness with a person excluded by the tribunal during such testimony;

(r) knowingly misrepresent the client's position in the litigation or the issues to be determined in the litigation;

(s) needlessly abuse, hector or harass a witness;

(t) when representing a complainant or potential complainant, attempt to gain a benefit for the complainant by threatening the laying of a criminal or quasi-criminal charge or complaint to a regulatory authority or by offering to seek or to procure the withdrawal of a criminal or quasi-criminal charge or complaint to a regulatory authority;

(u) needlessly inconvenience a witness; or

(v) appear before a court or tribunal while under the influence of alcohol or a drug or when it may be reasonably foreseen that the lawyer will be unable for any reason to provide competent services.

Commentary

[1] In civil proceedings, a lawyer has a duty not to mislead the tribunal about the position of the client in the adversarial process. Thus, a lawyer representing a party to litigation who has made or is party to an agreement made before or during the trial by which a plaintiff is guaranteed recovery by one or more parties, notwithstanding the judgment of the court, should immediately reveal the existence and particulars of the agreement to the court and to all parties to the proceedings.

[2] Relevant adverse authority: A decision is relevant where it refers to any point of law on which the case in question might turn. Relevance does not include cases that have merely some resemblance to the case before the court on the facts; it "means cases which decide a point of law" on which the current case depends. With respect to the lawyer's obligation to discover the relevant law, the duty does not extend to searching out unreported cases. The lawyer does have an obligation to bring to the court's attention cases of which the lawyer has knowledge and, as well, the lawyer cannot discharge this duty by not bothering to determine whether there is a relevant authority.

Lawyers are not obliged to bring forward facts that the other side has omitted to bring to the court's attention. They are not obliged to make the other side's case. They are, simply, obliged to make sure that the court has before it all relevant legal authority, whether helpful or not.

[3] A lawyer representing an accused or potential accused may communicate with a complainant or potential complainant, for example, to obtain factual information, to arrange for restitution or an apology from the accused, or to defend or settle any civil claims between the accused and the complainant. However, when the complainant or potential complainant is vulnerable, the lawyer must take care not to take unfair or improper advantage of the circumstances. If the complainant or potential complainant is unrepresented, the lawyer should be governed by the rules about unrepresented persons and make it clear that the lawyer is acting exclusively in the interests of the accused or potential accused. When communicating with an unrepresented complainant or potential complainant, it is prudent to have a witness present.

[4] It is an abuse of the court's process to threaten to bring an action or to offer to seek withdrawal of a criminal charge in order to gain a benefit. See also Rules 3.2-11 to 3.2-12 and accompanying commentary.

[5] When examining a witness, a lawyer may pursue any hypothesis that is honestly advanced on the strength of reasonable inference, experience or intuition.

5.1-3 Except with the consent of all parties, a lawyer must not appear before a judge or a tribunal when the lawyer's past or present relationship with the judge or the tribunal would create a reasonable apprehension of bias.

Commentary

[1] The term "lawyer" is used in the sense of the individual lawyer. Most relationships contemplated by the Rule are sufficiently personal that others in the lawyer's firm should not be tainted by association. On the other hand, circumstances are conceivable in which it would be unwise for a partner or associate of the lawyer having the relationship to appear before the judge or tribunal in question.

[2] Impartiality is an essential element of judicial proceedings, from a substantive viewpoint and also in terms of society's perception of the justice system. Accordingly, lawyers have an ethical obligation to contribute to the fact and appearance of impartiality.

[3] The first aspect of the Rule is the relationship between a lawyer and an individual judge. The Rule clearly prohibits a lawyer from appearing before a judge who is a relative or with whom the lawyer has a business relationship. Other close or intimate relationships may also bar a lawyer from appearing, depending on the circumstances.

[4] With respect to a judge who was formerly with the lawyer's firm, the propriety of such an appearance will be governed by factors such as the length of time the judge has been on the bench and the nature and import of the judicial proceeding.

[5] A second aspect of the Rule is the relationship between a lawyer and the tribunal. Relationships that may create a reasonable apprehension of bias include the following:

(a) A firm member may be a member of a tribunal, council or other official body. While the lawyer is generally prevented from appearing before the body itself, it is normally permissible to appear before a committee of the body if the firm member is not a member of that committee.

(b) A lawyer may at one time have had an association with a court, tribunal, council or other official body, as an employee or in the role of judge or adjudicator. The lawyer's subsequent appearance before the body as counsel may be improper because of actual or perceived collegiality with the current adjudicators, or because of a suspected "reverse bias" that could operate to the detriment of the lawyer's client. The passage of time will in most cases mitigate these considerations, two years being a standard benchmark. Other factors may also be present that are not mitigated by the passage of time. Whether there is an apprehension of bias in a particular case must therefore be determined by reference to all relevant circumstances.

[6] In some instances, the other parties to a matter may consent to a lawyer's appearance before a judge or tribunal despite a past or present relationship, or the lawyer may have concluded on a consideration of all relevant factors that such an appearance is not improper. Nonetheless, an appropriately impartial atmosphere must be maintained during the proceeding, which will not be the case if the lawyer displays undue familiarity in discussions or dealings with the judge or tribunal.

Duty as Prosecutor

5.1-4 When acting as a prosecutor, a lawyer must act for the public and the administration of justice resolutely and honourably within the limits of the law while treating the tribunal with candour, fairness, courtesy and respect.

Commentary

[1] When engaged as a prosecutor, the lawyer’s primary duty is not to seek to convict but to see that justice is done through a fair trial on the merits. The prosecutor exercises a public function involving much discretion and power and must act fairly and dispassionately. To the extent required by law and accepted practice, the prosecutor should not do anything that might prevent the accused from being represented by counsel or communicating with counsel and should make timely disclosure to defence counsel or directly to an unrepresented accused of all relevant and known facts and witnesses, whether tending to show guilt or innocence.

Disclosure of Error or Omission

5.1-5 (a) A lawyer must not mislead a tribunal nor assist a client or witness to do so.

(b) Upon becoming aware that a tribunal is under a misapprehension as a result of submissions made by the lawyer or evidence given by the lawyer's client or witness, a lawyer must, subject to Rule 3.3 (Confidentiality), immediately correct the misapprehension.

Commentary

[1] If a client desires that a course be taken that would involve a breach of this rule, the lawyer must refuse and do everything reasonably possible to prevent it. If that cannot be done, the lawyer should, subject to Rule 3.7 (Withdrawal from Representation), withdraw or seek leave to do so.

[2] It is an obvious contravention of the rule for an advocate to lie to a tribunal. The rule applies as well, however, to an indirect misrepresentation. For example, a lawyer may not respond to a question from a tribunal in a technically correct manner that creates a deliberately misleading impression.

[3] On the other hand, a lawyer is not required to inform a tribunal of facts that should have been brought forth by opposing counsel. If it becomes apparent that the tribunal is uninformed or misinformed on a factual matter through no fault of the lawyer or the lawyer's client or witness, a lawyer is justified in remaining silent.

[4] A lawyer has a duty to correct a misapprehension arising from an honest mistake on the part of counsel or from perjury by the lawyer's client or witness. It may be a sufficient discharge of this duty to merely advise the tribunal not to rely on the impugned information.

[5] The principle applies not only to statements that were untrue at the time they were made, but to those that were true when made but have subsequently become inaccurate due to a change in circumstance. For example, it may have been represented that a personal injury plaintiff is permanently disabled. If, prior to judgment, the plaintiff's condition undergoes material improvement, the lawyer must, subject to confidentiality, convey this information to the court.

[6] Even if a matter has been judicially determined, the discovery of an error that may reasonably be viewed as having materially affected the outcome may oblige a lawyer to advise opposing counsel of the error. This may be the case notwithstanding that the appeal period has expired, since another remedy may be available to redress the mistake in whole or in part.

[7] Briefly, if correction of the misrepresentation requires disclosure of confidential information, the lawyer must seek the client's consent to such disclosure. If the client withholds consent, the lawyer is obliged to withdraw.

Courtesy

5.1-6 A lawyer must be courteous and civil and act in good faith to the tribunal and all persons with whom the lawyer has dealings.

Commentary

[1] Legal contempt of court and the professional obligation outlined here are not identical, and a consistent pattern of rude, provocative or disruptive conduct by a lawyer, even though unpunished as contempt, may constitute professional misconduct.

Undertakings

5.1-7 A lawyer must strictly and scrupulously fulfil any undertakings given and honour any trust conditions accepted in the course of litigation.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer should also be guided by the provisions of Rule 7.2-14 (Undertakings and Trust Conditions).

Agreement on Guilty Plea

5.1-8 A lawyer for an accused or potential accused may enter into an agreement with the prosecutor about a guilty plea if, following investigation,

- (a) the lawyer advises his or her client about the prospects for an acquittal or finding of guilt;
- (b) the lawyer advises the client of the implications and possible consequences of a guilty plea and particularly of the sentencing authority and discretion of the court, including the fact that the court is not bound by any agreement about a guilty plea;
- (c) the client voluntarily is prepared to admit the necessary factual and mental elements of the offence charged; and
- (d) the client voluntarily instructs the lawyer to enter into an agreement as to a guilty plea.

Commentary

[1] The public interest in the proper administration of justice should not be sacrificed in the interest of expediency.

Handling Evidence

5.1-9 A lawyer must not counsel or participate in:

(a) the obtaining of evidence or information by illegal means;

(b) the falsification of evidence; or

(c) the destruction of property having potential evidentiary value or the alteration of property so as to affect its evidentiary value.

Commentary

[1] Lawyers must uphold the law and refrain from conduct that might weaken respect for the law or interfere with its fair administration. A lawyer must therefore seek to maintain the integrity of evidence and its availability through appropriate procedures to opposing parties.

[2] Paragraph (a) of Rule 5.1-9 prohibits a lawyer's involvement in the obtaining of evidence or information in a civil or criminal matter by means that are contrary to law, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Criminal Code.

[3] The word "property" in paragraph (c) includes electronic information. Paragraph (c) is not intended to interfere with the testing of evidence as contemplated by the Rules of Court.

Incriminating Physical Evidence

5.1-10 A lawyer must not counsel or participate in the concealment, destruction or alteration of incriminating physical evidence or otherwise act so as to obstruct or attempt to obstruct the course of justice.

Commentary

[1] In this rule, "evidence" does not depend upon admissibility before a tribunal or upon the existence of criminal charges. It includes documents, electronic information, objects or substances relevant to a crime, criminal investigation or a criminal prosecution. It does not include documents or communications that are solicitor-client privileged or that the lawyer reasonably believes are otherwise available to the authorities.

[2] This rule does not apply where a lawyer is in possession of evidence tending to establish the innocence of a client, such as evidence relevant to an alibi. However, a lawyer must exercise prudent judgment in determining whether such evidence is wholly exculpatory, and therefore falls outside of the application of this rule. For example, if the evidence is both incriminating and exculpatory, improperly dealing with it may result in a breach of the rule and also expose a lawyer to criminal charges.

[3] A lawyer is never required to take or keep possession of incriminating physical evidence or to disclose its mere existence. A lawyer in possession of incriminating physical evidence should carefully consider his or her options. These options include, as soon as reasonably possible:

(a) delivering the evidence to law enforcement authorities or the prosecution, either directly or anonymously;

(b) delivering the evidence to the tribunal in the relevant proceeding, which may also include seeking the direction of the tribunal to facilitate access by the prosecution or defence for testing or examination; or

(c) disclosing the existence of the evidence to the prosecution and, if necessary, preparing to argue before a tribunal the appropriate uses, disposition or admissibility of it.

[4] A lawyer should balance the duty of loyalty and confidentiality owed to the client with the duties owed to the administration of justice. When a lawyer discloses or delivers incriminating physical evidence to law enforcement authorities or the prosecution, the lawyer has a duty to protect client confidentiality, including the client's identity, and to preserve solicitor-client privilege. This may be accomplished by the lawyer retaining independent counsel, who is not informed of the identity of the client and who is instructed not to disclose the identity of the instructing lawyer, to disclose or deliver the evidence. A lawyer cannot merely continue to keep possession of the incriminating physical evidence.

[5] A lawyer has no obligation to assist the authorities in gathering physical evidence of crime but cannot act or advise anyone to hinder an investigation or a prosecution. The lawyer's advice to a client that the client has the right to refuse to divulge the location of physical evidence does not constitute hindering an investigation. A lawyer who becomes aware of the existence of incriminating physical evidence or declines to take possession of it must not counsel or participate in its concealment, destruction or alteration.

[6] A lawyer may determine that non-destructive testing, examination or copying of documentary or electronic information is needed. A lawyer should ensure that there is no concealment, destruction or any alteration of the evidence and should exercise caution in this area. For example, opening or copying an electronic document may alter it. A lawyer who has decided to copy, test or examine evidence before delivery or disclosure should do so without delay.

5.2 The Lawyer as Witness

Submission of Evidence

5.2-1 A lawyer who appears as advocate must not testify or submit his or her own affidavit evidence before the tribunal unless permitted to do so by law, the tribunal, the Rules of Court or the rules of procedure of the tribunal, or unless the matter is purely formal or uncontroverted.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer should not express personal opinions or beliefs or assert as a fact anything that is properly subject to legal proof, cross-examination or challenge. The lawyer should not, in effect, appear as an unsworn witness or put the lawyer's own credibility in issue. The lawyer who is a necessary witness should testify and entrust the conduct of the case to another lawyer. There are no restrictions on the advocate's right to cross-examine another lawyer, however, and the lawyer who does appear as a witness should not expect or receive special treatment because of professional status.

Appeals

5.2-2 A lawyer who is a witness in proceedings must not appear as advocate in any appeal from the decision in those proceedings, unless the matter about which he or she testified is purely formal or uncontroverted.

5.3 Interviewing Witnesses

Interviewing Witnesses

5.3-1 A lawyer may seek information from any potential witness, provided that:

(a) before doing so, the lawyer discloses the lawyer's interest in the matter;

(b) the lawyer does not encourage the witness to suppress evidence or to refrain from providing information to other parties in the matter; and

(c) the lawyer observes rules 7.2-8 through 7.2-11 on communicating with represented parties.

Commentary

[1] There is generally no property in a witness. To achieve the truth-seeking goal of the justice system, any person having information relevant to a proceeding must be free to impart it voluntarily and in the absence of improper influence. The rule does not, however, prevent a lawyer from responding in the negative if a witness specifically asks if it is mandatory to talk to opposing parties.

[2] A lawyer may advise a witness to refrain from providing relevant information to an opposing party if the witness is:

(a) The lawyer's client. It is not only permissible but expected that a lawyer will not allow a client to discuss the merits of a case with an opponent except in the presence or with the consent of the lawyer.

(b) A witness having a close connection and identification of interests with the client. A witness such as a spouse or child of the client may be so closely connected with the client that it would be contrary to that person's legitimate interests to discuss the case with opposing parties. It is also possible that the witness may be the client's agent for the purposes of instructing and consulting with counsel and the agent's discussions with counsel may be privileged. In these circumstances, it is permissible to advise the witness against engaging in such discussions.

(c) The client's expert witness. As an expert witness usually receives confidential information of the client, it would be inappropriate for that witness to communicate freely with all parties. In addition, an expert's report will likely be privileged as part of the solicitor's brief. With respect to an expert, such as an attending doctor, who can be characterized as both an ordinary and an expert witness, opposing counsel is entitled to question the witness on matters not subject to privilege. Such questioning should be conducted only on notice to the lawyer concerned due to the risk of improper disclosure, intentional or otherwise. A lawyer must be aware of the legal and procedural rules of the relevant jurisdiction which govern contact with expert witnesses, including the application of litigation and solicitor-client privilege. There may also be different limitations on the ability to contact an expert depending on the area of practice.

5.4 Communication with Witnesses Giving Evidence

Communication with Witnesses Giving Evidence

5.4-1 A lawyer must not influence a witness or potential witness to give evidence that is false, misleading or evasive.

5.4-2 A lawyer involved in a proceeding must not obstruct an examination or cross-examination in any manner.

Commentary

General Principles

[1] The ethical duty against improperly influencing a witness or a potential witness applies at all stages of a proceeding, including while preparing a witness to give evidence or to make a statement, and during testimony under oath or affirmation. It also applies to the preparation of sworn written evidence and "will say" statements for use in any proceeding. The role of an advocate is to assist the witness in bringing forth the evidence in a manner that ensures fair and accurate comprehension by the tribunal and opposing parties.

[2] A lawyer may prepare a witness, for questioning and for appearances before tribunals, by discussing courtroom and questioning procedures and the issues in the case, reviewing facts, refreshing memory, and by discussing admissions, choice of words and demeanour. It is, however, improper to direct or encourage a witness to misstate or misrepresent the facts or to give evidence that is intentionally evasive or vague.

Communicating with Witnesses Under Oath or Affirmation

[3] During any witness testimony under oath or affirmation, a lawyer should not engage in conduct designed to improperly influence the witness' evidence.

[4] The ability of a lawyer to communicate with a witness at a specific stage of a proceeding will be influenced by the practice, procedures or directions of the relevant tribunal, and may be modified by agreement of counsel with the approval of the tribunal. Lawyers should become familiar with the rules and practices of the relevant tribunal governing communication with witnesses during examination-in-chief and cross-examination, and prior to or during re-examination.

[6] A lawyer may communicate with a witness during examination-in-chief. However, there may be local exceptions to this practice.

[7] It is generally accepted that a lawyer is not permitted to communicate with the witness during cross-examination except with leave of the tribunal or with the agreement of counsel. The opportunity to conduct a full-ranging and uninterrupted cross-examination is fundamental to the adversarial system. It is counterbalanced by an opposing advocate's ability to ensure clarity of testimony through initial briefing, direct examination and re-examination of that lawyer's witnesses.

There is therefore no justification for obstruction of cross-examination by unreasonable interruptions, repeated objections to proper questions, attempts to have the witness change or tailor evidence, or other similar conduct while the examination is ongoing.

[8] A lawyer should seek approval from the tribunal before speaking with a witness after cross-examination and before re-examination.

Questioning and Other Examinations

[9] Rule 5.4 also applies to questioning, including all examinations under oath or affirmation that are not before a tribunal. Lawyers should scrupulously avoid any attempts to influence witness testimony, particularly as the tribunal is unable to directly monitor compliance. This rule is not intended to prevent discussions or consultations that are necessary to fulfil undertakings given during such examinations.

5.5 Relations with Jurors

Communications before Trial

5.5-1 When acting as an advocate before the trial of a case, a lawyer must not communicate with or cause another to communicate with anyone that the lawyer knows to be a member of the jury panel for that trial.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer may investigate a prospective juror to ascertain any basis for challenge, provided that the lawyer does not directly or indirectly communicate with the prospective juror or with any member of the prospective juror's family. But a lawyer should not conduct or cause another, by financial support or otherwise, to conduct a vexatious or harassing investigation of either a member of the jury panel or a juror.

[2] A lawyer should be aware of the provisions of the Jury Act (Alberta), setting out that certain communications by or with jurors and potential jurors may amount to contempt of court.

Disclosure of Information

5.5-2 Unless the judge and opposing counsel have previously been made aware of the information, a lawyer acting as an advocate must disclose to them any information of which the lawyer is aware that a juror or prospective juror:

- (a) has or may have an interest, direct or indirect, in the outcome of the case;
- (b) is acquainted with or connected in any manner with the presiding judge, any counsel or any litigant; or
- (c) is acquainted with or connected in any manner with any person who has appeared or who is expected to appear as a witness.

5.5-3 A lawyer must promptly disclose to the court any information that the lawyer reasonably believes discloses improper conduct by a member of a jury panel or by a juror.

Communication during Trial

5.5-4 Except as permitted by law, a lawyer acting as an advocate must not communicate with or cause another to communicate with any member of the jury during a trial of the case.

5.5-5 A lawyer who is not connected with a case before the court must not communicate with or cause another to communicate with any member of the jury about the case.

5.5-6 A lawyer must not have any discussion after trial with a member of the jury about its deliberations.

Commentary

[1] The restrictions on communications with a juror or potential juror should also apply to communications with or investigations of members of his or her family.

5.6 The Lawyer and the Administration of Justice

Encouraging Respect for the Administration of Justice

5.6-1 A lawyer must encourage public respect for and try to improve the administration of justice.

Commentary

[1] The obligation outlined in the rule is not restricted to the lawyer's professional activities but is a general responsibility resulting from the lawyer's position in the community. A lawyer's responsibilities are greater than those of a private citizen. A lawyer should take care not to weaken or destroy public confidence in legal institutions or authorities by irresponsible allegations. The lawyer in public life should be particularly careful in this regard because the mere fact of being a lawyer will lend weight and credibility to public statements. Yet, for the same reason, a lawyer should not hesitate to speak out against an injustice.

[2] Admission to and continuance in the practice of law implies, on the part of a lawyer, a basic commitment to the concept of equal justice for all within an open, ordered and impartial system. However, judicial institutions will not function effectively unless they command the respect of the public, and, because of changes in human affairs and imperfections in human institutions, constant efforts must be made to improve the administration of justice and thereby maintain public respect for it.

[3] Criticizing Tribunals – Proceedings and decisions of courts and tribunals are properly subject to scrutiny and criticism by all members of the public, including lawyers, but judges and members of tribunals are often prohibited by law or custom from defending themselves. Their inability to do so imposes special responsibilities upon lawyers. First, a lawyer should avoid criticism that is petty, intemperate or unsupported by a bona fide belief in its real merit, since, in the eyes of the public, professional knowledge lends weight to the lawyer's judgments or criticism. Second, if a lawyer has been involved in the proceedings, there is the risk that any criticism may be, or may appear to be, partisan rather than objective. Third, when a tribunal is the object of unjust criticism, a lawyer, as a participant in the administration of justice, is uniquely able to, and should, support the tribunal, both because its members cannot defend themselves and because, in doing so, the lawyer contributes to greater public understanding of, and therefore respect for, the legal system.

[4] A lawyer, by training, opportunity and experience, is in a position to observe the workings and discover the strengths and weaknesses of laws, legal institutions and public authorities. A lawyer should, therefore, lead in seeking improvements in the legal system, but any criticisms and proposals should be bona fide and reasoned.

Seeking Legislative or Administrative Changes

5.6-2 A lawyer who seeks legislative or administrative changes must disclose the interest being advanced, whether the lawyer's interest, the client's interest or the public interest.

Commentary

[1] The lawyer may advocate legislative or administrative changes on behalf of a client although not personally agreeing with them, but the lawyer who purports to act in the public interest should espouse only those changes that the lawyer conscientiously believes to be in the public interest.

5.7 Lawyers and Mediators

Role of Mediator

5.7-1 A lawyer who acts as a mediator must, at the outset of the mediation, ensure that the parties to it understand fully that:

(a) the lawyer is not acting as a lawyer for either party but, as mediator, is acting to assist the parties to resolve the matters in issue; and

(b) although communications pertaining to and arising out of the mediation process may be covered by some other common law privilege, they will not be covered by solicitor-client privilege.

Commentary

[1] In acting as a mediator, generally a lawyer should not give legal advice, as opposed to legal information, to the parties during the mediation process. This does not preclude the mediator from giving direction on the consequences if the mediation fails.

[2] Generally, neither the lawyer-mediator nor a partner or associate of the lawyer-mediator should render legal representation or give legal advice to either party to the mediation, bearing in mind the provisions of Rule 3.4 (Conflicts) and its commentaries and the common law authorities.

[3] If the parties have not already done so, a lawyer-mediator generally should suggest that they seek the advice of separate counsel before and during the mediation process, and encourage them to do so.

[4] If, in the mediation process, the lawyer-mediator prepares a draft contract for the consideration of the parties, the lawyer-mediator should expressly advise and encourage them to seek separate independent legal representation concerning the draft contract.

Chapter 6 – Relationship to Students, Employees, and Others

6.1 Supervision

Direct Supervision Required

6.1-1 A lawyer has complete professional responsibility for all business entrusted to him or her and must directly supervise staff and assistants to whom the lawyer delegates particular tasks and functions.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer may permit a non-lawyer to act only under the supervision of a lawyer, so long as the lawyer maintains a direct relationship with the client. The extent of supervision will depend on the type of legal matter, including the degree of standardization and repetitiveness of the matter, and the experience of the non-lawyer generally and with regard to the matter in question. The burden rests on the lawyer to educate a non-lawyer concerning the duties that the lawyer assigns to the non-lawyer and then to supervise the manner in which such duties are carried out. A lawyer should review the non-lawyer's work at sufficiently frequent intervals to enable the lawyer to ensure its proper and timely completion.

[2] A lawyer who practises alone or operates a branch or part time office should ensure that

(a) all matters requiring a lawyer's professional skill and judgment are dealt with by a lawyer qualified to do the work; and

(b) no unauthorized persons give legal advice, whether in the lawyer's name or otherwise.

[3] If a non-lawyer has received specialized training or education and is competent to do independent work under the general supervision of a lawyer, a lawyer may delegate work to the non-lawyer.

Application

6.1-2 In this rule, a non-lawyer does not include a student-at-law.

Delegation

6.1-3 A lawyer must not permit a non-lawyer to:

(a) accept cases on behalf of the lawyer, except that a non-lawyer may receive instructions from established clients if the supervising lawyer approves before any work commences;

(b) give legal advice;

(c) exercise judgment in giving or accepting undertakings or accept trust conditions, except at the direction of and under the supervision of a lawyer responsible for the legal matter, providing that, in any communications, the fact that the person giving or accepting the undertaking or accepting the trust condition is a non-lawyer is disclosed, the capacity of the person is indicated and the lawyer who is responsible for the legal matter is identified;

(d) act finally without reference to the lawyer in matters involving professional legal judgment;

(e) be held out as a lawyer;

(f) appear in court or actively participate in formal legal proceedings on behalf of a client except as set forth above, in a supporting role to the lawyer appearing in such proceedings or authorized by law or the Rules of Court;

(g) be remunerated on a sliding scale related to the earnings of the lawyer, unless the non-lawyer is an employee of the lawyer;

(h) conduct negotiations with third parties, other than routine negotiations if the client consents and the results of the negotiation are approved by the supervising lawyer before action is taken;

(i) take instructions from clients, unless the supervising lawyer has directed the client to the non-lawyer for that purpose and the instructions are relayed to the lawyer as soon as reasonably possible;

(j) sign correspondence containing a legal opinion;

(k) sign correspondence, unless

- (i) it is of a routine administrative nature,
- (ii) the non-lawyer has been specifically directed to sign the correspondence by a supervising lawyer,
- (iii) the fact the person is a non-lawyer is disclosed, and

(iv) the capacity in which the person signs the correspondence is indicated;

(l) forward to a client or third party any documents, other than routine, standard form documents, except with the lawyer's knowledge and direction;

(m) perform any of the duties that only lawyers may perform or do things that lawyers themselves may not do; or

(n) set fees.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer is responsible for any undertaking given or accepted and any trust condition accepted by a non-lawyer acting under his or her supervision.

[2] A lawyer should ensure that the non-lawyer is identified as such when communicating orally or in writing with clients, lawyers or public officials or with the public generally, whether within or outside the offices of the law firm of employment.

[3] In all matters using a system for the electronic submission or registration of documents, whether or not the system contains the electronic signature of the lawyer, a lawyer who approves the electronic registration of documents by a non-lawyer is responsible for the content of any document.

Suspended or Disbarred Lawyers

6.1-4 Without the express approval of the lawyer's governing body, a lawyer must not retain, use the services of, partner or associate with or employ in any capacity having to do with the practice of law any person who, in any jurisdiction, has been disbarred, struck off the rolls, suspended, undertaken not to practise or who has been involved in disciplinary action and been permitted to resign and has not been reinstated or readmitted.

Commentary

[1] Lawyers should also refer to the Alberta Legal Profession Act regarding the employment of suspended or disbarred lawyers.

Electronic Registration of Documents

6.1-5 A lawyer who has personalized encrypted electronic access to any system for the electronic submission or registration of documents must not

(a) permit others, including a non-lawyer employee, to use such access; or

(b) disclose his or her password or access phrase or number to others.

6.1-6 When a non-lawyer employed by a lawyer has personalized encrypted electronic access to any system for the electronic submission or registration of documents or electronic searching of private or confidential information, the lawyer must ensure that the non-lawyer does not

(a) permit others to use such access; or

(b) disclose his or her password or access phrase or number to others.

Commentary

[1] The implementation of systems for the electronic submission or registration of documents imposes special responsibilities on lawyers and others using the system. The integrity and security of the system is achieved, in part, by its maintaining a record of those using the system for any transactions. Statements professing compliance with law without registration of supporting documents may be made only by lawyers in good standing. It is, therefore, important that lawyers maintain and ensure the security and the exclusively personal use of the personalized access code, diskettes, etc., used to access the system and the personalized password, access phrase or number.

[2] When it is permissible for a lawyer to delegate responsibilities to a non-lawyer who has such access, the lawyer should ensure that the non-lawyer maintains and understands the importance of maintaining the security of the system.

6.2 Students

Recruitment and Engagement Procedures

6.2-1 A lawyer must observe any procedures of the Society about the recruitment and engagement of articling or law students.

Duties of Principal

6.2-2 A lawyer acting as a principal to a student must provide the student with meaningful training and exposure to and involvement in work that will provide the student with knowledge and experience of the practical aspects of the law, together with an appreciation of the traditions and ethics of the profession.

Commentary

[1] A principal or supervising lawyer is responsible for the actions of students acting under his or her direction. In Alberta, articling students are subject to the authority of the Society and bound by all of the provisions of the Code and the Rules of the Law Society. Consequently, they are subject to discipline by the Society for breaches and misconduct.

Duties of Articling Student

6.2-3 An articling student must act in good faith in fulfilling and discharging all the commitments and obligations arising from the articling experience.

6.3 Harassment and Discrimination

6.3-1 The principles of human rights laws and related case law apply to the interpretation of this rule.

6.3-2 A term used in this rule that is defined in human rights legislation has the same meaning as in the legislation.

6.3-3 A lawyer must not sexually harass any person.

6.3-4 A lawyer must not engage in any other form of harassment of any person.

6.3-5 A lawyer must not discriminate against any person.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer has a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Canada, its provinces and territories and, specifically, to honour the obligations enumerated in human rights laws.

Chapter 7 – Relationship to the Society and Other Lawyers

7.1 Responsibility to The Society and The Profession Generally

Communications from the Society

7.1-1 A lawyer must reply promptly and completely to any communication from the Society.

Meeting Financial Obligations

7.1-2 A lawyer must promptly meet financial obligations in relation to his or her practice, including payment of the deductible under a professional liability insurance policy, when called upon to do so.

Commentary

[1] In order to maintain the honour of the Bar, lawyers have a professional duty (quite apart from any legal liability) to meet financial obligations incurred, assumed or undertaken on behalf of clients, unless, before incurring such an obligation, the lawyer clearly indicates in writing that the obligation is not to be a personal one.

[2] When a lawyer retains a consultant, expert or other professional, the lawyer should clarify the terms of the retainer in writing, including specifying the fees, the nature of the services to be provided and the person responsible for payment. If the lawyer is not responsible for the payment of the fees, the lawyer should help in making satisfactory arrangements for payment if it is reasonably possible to do so.

[3] If there is a change of lawyer, the lawyer who originally retained a consultant, expert or other professional should advise him or her about the change and provide the name, address, telephone number, fax number and email address of the new lawyer.

Duty to Report

7.1-3 Unless to do so would be unlawful or would involve a breach of solicitor-client privilege, a lawyer must report to the Society:

(a) the misappropriation or misapplication of trust money;

(b) the abandonment of a law practice;

(c) participation in criminal activity related to a lawyer's practice;

(d) conduct that raises a substantial question as to another lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or competency as a lawyer;

(e) conduct that raises a substantial question about a lawyer's capacity to provide professional services; and

(f) any situation in which a lawyer's clients are likely to be materially prejudiced.

Commentary

[1] Unless a lawyer who departs from proper professional conduct is checked at an early stage, loss or damage to clients or others may ensue. Evidence of minor breaches may, on investigation, disclose a more serious situation or may indicate the commencement of a course of conduct that may lead to serious breaches in the future. It is, therefore, proper (unless it is privileged or otherwise unlawful) for a lawyer to report to the Society any instance involving a breach of these rules. If a lawyer is in any doubt whether a report should be made, the lawyer should consider seeking the advice of the Society directly or indirectly (for example, through another lawyer). In all cases, the report must be made without malice or ulterior motive.

[2] Nothing in this rule is meant to interfere with the lawyer-client relationship.

[3] Instances of conduct described in this rule can arise from a variety of causes, including addictions or physical, mental or emotional conditions or disorders. Lawyers who face such challenges should be encouraged by other lawyers to seek assistance as early as possible.

[4] The Society supports the ASSIST Program in Alberta and similar agencies in their commitment to the provision of counselling on a confidential basis. Therefore, a lawyer who is making a bona fide effort to have another lawyer seek help for such problems is not required to report to the Society non-criminal conduct of that lawyer that would otherwise have to be reported under the rule. However, the lawyer must advise the Society if there are reasonable grounds to believe that the other lawyer is encouraging or will engage in conduct that is criminal or is likely to harm any person or of any other conduct under the rule if the lawyer refuses or fails to seek help.

Encouraging Client to Report Misconduct

7.1-4 A lawyer must encourage a client who has a claim or complaint of serious misconduct against a lawyer to report the facts to the Society as soon as reasonably practicable.

Commentary

[1] In determining whether the matter involves “serious misconduct”, refer to Rule 7.1-3 and the related commentary.

7.2 Responsibility to Lawyers and Others

Courtesy and Good Faith

7.2-1 A lawyer must be courteous and civil and act in good faith with all persons with whom the lawyer has dealings in the course of his or her practice.

Commentary

[1] The public interest demands that matters entrusted to a lawyer be dealt with effectively and expeditiously, and fair and courteous dealing on the part of each lawyer engaged in a matter will contribute materially to this end. The lawyer who behaves otherwise does a disservice to the client, and neglect of the rule will impair the ability of lawyers to perform their functions properly.

[2] Any ill feeling that may exist or be engendered between clients, particularly during litigation, should never be allowed to influence lawyers in their conduct and demeanour toward each other or the parties. The presence of personal animosity between lawyers involved in a matter may cause their judgment to be clouded by emotional factors and hinder the proper resolution of the matter. Personal remarks or personally abusive tactics interfere with the orderly administration of justice and have no place in our legal system.

[3] A lawyer should avoid ill-considered or uninformed criticism of the competence, conduct, advice or charges of other lawyers, but should be prepared, when requested, to advise and represent a client in a complaint involving another lawyer.

[4] A lawyer should agree to reasonable requests concerning trial dates, adjournments, the waiver of procedural formalities and similar matters that do not prejudice the rights of the client.

7.2-2 A lawyer must not lie to or mislead another lawyer.

Commentary

[1] This rule expresses an obvious aspect of integrity and a fundamental principle. In no situation, including negotiation, is a lawyer entitled to deliberately mislead a colleague. When a lawyer (in response to a question, for example) is prevented by rules of confidentiality from actively disclosing the truth, a falsehood is not justified. The lawyer has other alternatives, such as declining to answer. If this approach would in itself be misleading, the lawyer must seek the client's consent to such disclosure of confidential information as is necessary to prevent the other lawyer from being misled. The concept of "misleading" includes creating a misconception through oral or written statements, other communications, actions or conduct, failure to act, or silence (See Rule 7.2-5, Correcting Misinformation).

7.2-3 A lawyer must avoid sharp practice and must not take advantage of or act without fair warning upon slips, irregularities or mistakes on the part of other lawyers not going to the merits or involving the sacrifice of a client's rights.

Commentary

[1] This rule is directed at sharp practice. It becomes operative when two elements are present: an obvious mistake by opposing counsel, and a benefit flowing from that mistake to which the lawyer's client is clearly not entitled.

[2] A clerical or arithmetical error is an example of an obvious mistake. However, an act or omission by another lawyer that appears questionable but that may have involved a conscious exercise of judgment is not a mistake of the kind contemplated by this rule. For example, an opponent's acceptance of an apparently unfavourable contract or settlement offer, or the failure of a Crown prosecutor to raise the criminal record of an accused, may have been the result of careful consideration, including factors of which the lawyer is not aware.

[3] A client has no legal entitlement to a benefit created solely through error. Consequently, it is improper for a lawyer to knowingly proceed on the basis of an incorrect statement of adjustments or a transfer that misdescribes the property intended to be bought and sold. The benefit that would be obtained by the client is unwarranted and without independent legal support.

[4] On the other hand, a defendant in a lawsuit has a legal right to insist that proceedings be brought within a certain period of time. Accordingly, while the missing of a limitation date by plaintiff's counsel may be an obvious mistake, the defendant's lawyer does not violate this rule by allowing the limitation period to expire.

7.2-4 A lawyer must not use any device to record a conversation between the lawyer and a client or another lawyer, even if lawful, without first informing the other person of the intention to do so.

Correcting Misinformation

7.2-5 If a lawyer becomes aware during the course of a representation that:

- (a) the lawyer has inadvertently misled an opposing party, or
- (b) the client, or someone allied with the client or the client's matter, has misled an opposing party, intentionally or otherwise, or
- (c) the lawyer or the client, or someone allied with the client or the client's matter, has made a material representation to an opposing party that was accurate when made but has since become inaccurate, then, subject to confidentiality, the lawyer must immediately correct the resulting misapprehension on the part of the opposing party.

Commentary

"Subject to confidentiality" (see Rule 3.3, Confidentiality)

[1] Briefly, if correction of the misrepresentation requires disclosure of confidential information, the lawyer must seek the client's consent to such disclosure. If the client withholds consent, the lawyer is obliged to withdraw. The terminology used in this rule is to be broadly interpreted. A lawyer may have provided technically accurate information that is rendered misleading by the withholding of other information; in such a case, there is an obligation to correct the situation. In paragraph (c), the concept of an inaccurate representation is not limited to a misrepresentation that would be actionable at law.

[2] See Rule 5.1-5, in respect of correcting misinformation in advocacy settings.

Communications

7.2-6 A lawyer must not, in the course of a professional practice, send correspondence or otherwise communicate to a client, another lawyer or any other person in a manner that is abusive, offensive, or otherwise inconsistent with the proper tone of a professional communication from a lawyer.

7.2-7 A lawyer must answer with reasonable promptness all professional letters and communications from other lawyers that require an answer, and a lawyer must be punctual in fulfilling all commitments.

7.2-8 Subject to Rules 7.2-9 and 7.2-10, if a person is represented by a lawyer in respect of a matter, another lawyer must not, except through or with the consent of the person's lawyer:

(a) approach, communicate or deal with the person on the matter; or

(b) attempt to negotiate or compromise the matter directly with the person.

7.2-9 Where a person is represented by a lawyer under a limited scope retainer on a matter, another lawyer may, without the consent of the lawyer providing the limited scope legal services, approach, communicate or deal with the person directly on the matter unless the lawyer has been given written notice of the nature of the legal services being provided under the limited scope retainer and the approach, communication or dealing falls within the scope of that retainer.

7.2-10 A lawyer who is not otherwise interested in a matter may give a second opinion to a person who is represented by another lawyer with respect to that matter.

Commentary

[1] Rule 7.2-8 applies to communications with any person, whether or not a party to a formal adjudicative proceeding, contract or negotiation, who is represented by a lawyer concerning the matter to which the communication relates. A lawyer may communicate with a represented person concerning matters outside the representation. Lawyers should be careful about email communications. For example, if a lawyer copies the client with an email sent to the opposing lawyer, then a response using "Reply to All" may result in an unintended communication by the opposing lawyer with the client. This rule does not prevent parties to a matter from communicating directly with each other.

[2] The prohibition on communications with a represented person applies only where the lawyer knows that the person is represented in the matter to be discussed. This means that the lawyer has actual knowledge of the fact of the representation, but actual knowledge may be inferred from the circumstances. This inference may arise when there is substantial reason to believe that the person with whom communication is sought is represented in the matter to be discussed. Thus, a lawyer cannot evade the requirement of obtaining the consent of the other lawyer by ignoring the obvious.

[3] Where notice as described in Rule 7.2-9 has been provided to a lawyer for an opposing party, the opposing lawyer is required to communicate with the person's lawyer, but only to the extent of the limited representation as identified by the lawyer. The opposing lawyer may communicate with the person on matters outside of the limited scope retainer.

[4] Rule 7.2-10 deals with circumstances in which a client may wish to obtain a second opinion from another lawyer. While a lawyer should not hesitate to provide a second opinion, the obligation to be competent and to render competent services requires that the opinion be based on sufficient information. In the case of a second opinion, such information may include facts that can be obtained only through consultation with the first lawyer involved. The lawyer should advise the client accordingly and, if necessary, consult the first lawyer unless the client instructs otherwise.

[5] In appropriate circumstances, a lawyer must assist the client in obtaining a second opinion if requested by a client. The lawyer providing the initial advice should respond in a cooperative and positive manner. For example, sufficient information must be provided to the other lawyer upon request to render the second opinion an informed one. A lawyer is not obliged to assist in obtaining a second opinion when the client is attempting to coerce the formulation of a favourable opinion or is acting unreasonably in another respect. However, the obligation to be cooperative and to review objectively and in good faith any second opinion obtained is unaffected.

7.2-11 A lawyer retained to act on a matter involving a corporate or other organization represented by a lawyer must not approach an officer or employee of the organization:

(a) who has the authority to bind the organization;

(b) who supervises, directs or regularly consults with the organization's lawyer; or

(c) whose own interests are directly at stake in the representation, in respect of that matter, unless the lawyer representing the organization consents or the contact is otherwise authorized or required by law.

Commentary

[1] This rule applies to corporations and other organizations. "Other organizations" include partnerships, limited partnerships, associations, unions, unincorporated groups, government departments and agencies, tribunals, regulatory bodies and sole proprietorships. This rule prohibits a lawyer representing another person or entity from communicating about the matter in question with persons likely involved in the decision-making process for a corporation or other organization. If an agent or employee of the organization is represented in the matter by a lawyer, the consent of that lawyer to the communication will be sufficient for purposes of this rule. A lawyer may communicate with employees or agents concerning matters outside the representation.

[2] A lawyer representing a corporation or other organization may also be retained to represent employees of the corporation or organization. In such circumstances, the lawyer must comply with the requirements of Rule 3.4 (Conflicts). A lawyer must not represent that he or she acts for an employee of a client, unless the requirements of Rule 3.4 have been complied with, and must not be retained by an employee solely for the purpose of sheltering factual information from another party.

7.2-12 When a lawyer deals on a client's behalf with an unrepresented person, the lawyer must:

(a) advise the unrepresented person to obtain independent legal representation;

(b) take care to see that the unrepresented person is not proceeding under the impression that his or her interests will be protected by the lawyer; and

(c) make it clear to the unrepresented person that the lawyer is acting exclusively in the interests of the client.

Commentary

[1] If an unrepresented person requests the lawyer to advise or act in the matter, the lawyer should be governed by the considerations outlined in this rule about joint retainers.

[2] When dealing in a professional capacity with a non-lawyer representing another person, or with a person not represented by counsel, a lawyer has the same general duties of honesty, courtesy and good faith that are owed to professional colleagues.

[3] The reference in this rule to unrepresented party is not intended to include professional advisors or persons having special qualifications who are retained for the purposes of negotiation, such as insurance adjusters and bank managers.

[4] The lengths to which a lawyer must go in ensuring a party's understanding of these matters will depend on all relevant factors, including the party's sophistication and relationship to the lawyer's client and the nature of the matter.

Inadvertent Communications

7.2-13 A lawyer who comes into possession of a privileged communication of an opposing party must not make use of it and must immediately advise the opposing lawyer or opposing party.

Commentary

[1] Lawyers may receive privileged communications from opposing counsel or parties through inadvertence. On occasion, lawyers receive privileged communications of opposing parties as the result of the impropriety of their own clients or from third party informants.

[2] Immediately upon realizing that the communication is a privileged communication of another party, the lawyer shall not continue to read the communication and must bring it to the attention of opposing counsel, then return or destroy it, without copies having been made. Knowledge that a communication is not intended for the lawyer receiving it will be imputed if, under the circumstances, it would have been unreasonable for the lawyer to come to any other conclusion.

[3] A lawyer who innocently reads all or a portion of a privileged communication before becoming aware of its nature must advise opposing counsel of the lawyer’s possession of the communication and the extent to which the communication has been reviewed.

[4] In the event there is a genuine dispute over the nature of the communication, it shall be permissible for the receiving lawyer to secure the communication, pending resolution of the dispute. The issue of whether or to what extent the communication may be copied or its contents disclosed or used must be resolved by agreement or by the court. In the meantime, it is improper to use the communication or disclose its contents in any manner.

[5] This rule does not otherwise address the legal duties of a lawyer who has inadvertently or inappropriately received privileged communications or the remedies available to the party who seeks to assert privilege over the communication.

Undertakings and Trust Conditions

7.2-14 A lawyer must not give an undertaking that cannot be fulfilled and must fulfil every undertaking given and honour every trust condition once accepted.

Commentary

[1] Undertakings should be written or confirmed in writing and should be absolutely unambiguous in their terms. If a lawyer giving an undertaking does not intend to accept personal responsibility, this should be stated clearly in the undertaking itself. In the absence of such a statement, the person to whom the undertaking is given is entitled to expect that the lawyer giving it will honour it personally. The use of such words as "on behalf of my client" or "on behalf of the vendor" does not relieve the lawyer giving the undertaking of personal responsibility.

[2] Trust conditions should be clear, unambiguous and explicit and should state the time within which the conditions must be met. Trust conditions should be imposed in writing and communicated to the other party at the time the property is delivered. Use of the trust property constitutes acceptance and an obligation on the accepting lawyer that the lawyer must honour personally. The lawyer who delivers property without any trust condition cannot retroactively impose trust conditions on the use of that property by the other party.

[3] The lawyer should not impose or accept trust conditions that are unreasonable, nor accept trust conditions that cannot be fulfilled personally. When a lawyer accepts property subject to trust conditions, the lawyer must fully comply with such conditions, even if the conditions subsequently appear unreasonable. It is improper for a lawyer to ignore or breach a trust condition he or she has accepted on the basis that the condition is not in accordance with the contractual obligations of the clients. It is also improper to unilaterally impose cross conditions respecting one's compliance with the original trust conditions.

[4] If a lawyer is unable or unwilling to honour a trust condition imposed by someone else, the subject of the trust condition should be immediately returned to the person imposing the trust condition, unless its terms can be forthwith amended in writing on a mutually agreeable basis.

[5] Trust conditions can be varied with the consent of the person imposing them. Any variation should be confirmed in writing. Clients or others are not entitled to require a variation of trust conditions without the consent of the lawyer who has imposed the conditions and the lawyer who has accepted them.

[6] Any trust condition that is accepted is binding upon a lawyer, whether imposed by another lawyer or by a lay person. A lawyer may seek to impose trust conditions upon a non-lawyer, whether an individual or a corporation or other organization, but great caution should be exercised in so doing since such conditions would be enforceable only through the courts as a matter of contract law and not by reason of the ethical obligations that exist between lawyers.

[7] A lawyer should treat money or property that, on a reasonable construction, is subject to trust conditions or an undertaking in accordance with these rules.

7.3 Outside Interests and The Practice Of Law

Maintaining Professional Integrity and Judgment

7.3-1 A lawyer who engages in another profession, business or occupation concurrently with the practice of law must not allow such outside interest to jeopardize the lawyer's professional integrity, independence or competence.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer must not carry on, manage or be involved in any outside interest in such a way that makes it difficult to distinguish in which capacity the lawyer is acting in a particular transaction, or that would give rise to a conflict of interest or duty to a client.

[2] When acting or dealing in respect of a transaction involving an outside interest, the lawyer should be mindful of potential conflicts and the applicable standards referred to in the conflicts rule and disclose any personal interest.

[3] Whether the activity in question is entirely unrelated to the practice of law or overlaps with the practice to some extent, the profession through the Society must maintain an interest in its nature and the manner in which it is conducted. While the Society's primary concern is with conduct that calls into question a lawyer's suitability to practise law or that reflects poorly on the profession, lawyers should aspire to the highest standards of behaviour at all times and not just when acting as lawyers. Membership in a professional body is often considered evidence of good character in itself. Consequently, society's expectations of lawyers will be high, and the behaviour of an individual lawyer may affect generally held opinions of the profession and the legal system.

7.3-2 A lawyer must not allow involvement in an outside interest to impair the exercise of the lawyer's independent judgment on behalf of a client.

Commentary

[1] The term "outside interest" covers the widest possible range of activities and includes activities that may overlap or be connected with the practice of law such as engaging in the mortgage business, acting as a director of a client corporation or writing on legal subjects, as well as activities not so connected, such as a career in business, politics, broadcasting or the performing arts. In each case, the question of whether and to what extent the lawyer may be permitted to engage in the outside interest will be subject to any applicable law or rule of the Society.

[2] When the outside interest is not related to the legal services being performed for clients, ethical considerations will usually not arise unless the lawyer's conduct might bring the lawyer or the profession into disrepute or impair the lawyer's competence, such as if the outside interest might occupy so much time that clients' interests would suffer because of inattention or lack of preparation.

7.4 The Lawyer in Public Office

Standard of Conduct

7.4-1 A lawyer who holds public office must, in the discharge of official duties, adhere to standards of conduct as high as those required of a lawyer engaged in the practice of law.

Commentary

[1] The rule applies to a lawyer who is elected or appointed to a legislative or administrative office at any level of government, regardless of whether the lawyer attained the office because of professional qualifications. Because such a lawyer is in the public eye, the legal profession can more readily be brought into disrepute by a failure to observe its ethical standards.

[2] Generally, the Society is not concerned with the way in which a lawyer holding public office carries out official responsibilities, but conduct in office that reflects adversely upon the lawyer's integrity or professional competence may be the subject of disciplinary action.

[3] Lawyers holding public office are also subject to the provisions of Rule 3.4 (Conflicts) when they apply.

7.5 Public Appearances and Public Statements

Communication with the Public

7.5-1 Provided that there is no infringement of the lawyer's obligations to the client, the profession, the courts, or the administration of justice, a lawyer may communicate information to the media and may make public appearances and statements.

Commentary

[1] Lawyers in their public appearances and public statements should conduct themselves in the same manner as they do with their clients, their fellow practitioners, the courts, and tribunals. Dealings with news media are simply an extension of the lawyer's conduct in a professional capacity. The mere fact that a lawyer's appearance is outside of a courtroom, a tribunal or the lawyer's office does not excuse conduct that would otherwise be considered improper.

[2] A lawyer's duty to the client demands that, before making a public statement concerning the client's affairs, the lawyer must first be satisfied that any communication is in the best interests of the client and authorized within the scope of the retainer.

[3] Public communications about a client's affairs should not be used for the purpose of publicizing the lawyer and should be free from any suggestion that a lawyer's real purpose is self-promotion or self-aggrandizement.

[4] Given the variety of cases that can arise in the legal system, particularly in civil, criminal and administrative proceedings, it is impossible to set down guidelines that would anticipate every possible circumstance. Circumstances arise in which the lawyer should have no contact with news media, but there are other cases in which the lawyer should contact the news media to properly serve the client.

[5] Lawyers are often involved in non-legal activities involving contact with the media to publicize such matters as fund-raising, expansion of hospitals or universities and programs of public institutions or political organizations. They sometimes act as spokespersons for organizations that, in turn, represent particular racial, religious or other special interest groups. This is a well-established and completely proper role for lawyers to play in view of the obvious contribution that it makes to the community.

[6] Lawyers are often called upon to comment publicly on the effectiveness of existing statutory or legal remedies or the effect of particular legislation or decided cases, or to offer an opinion about cases that have been instituted or are about to be instituted. This, too, is an important role the lawyer can play to assist the public in understanding legal issues.

[7] Lawyers should be aware that, when they make a public appearance or give a statement, they ordinarily have no control over any editing that may follow or the context in which the appearance or statement may be used or under what headline it may appear.

Interference with Right to Fair Trial or Hearing

7.5-2 A lawyer must not communicate information to the media or make public statements about a matter before a tribunal if the lawyer knows or ought to know that the information or statement will have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing a party's right to a fair trial or hearing.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer having any contact with the media is subject to the sub judice rule and should be aware of it. The rule is designed to ensure the fairness of the trial process to the parties involved. It may amount to contempt of court to publish a statement before or during a trial which may tend to prejudice a fair trial.

[2] Fair trials and hearings are fundamental to a free and democratic society. It is important that the public, including the media, be informed about cases before courts and tribunals. The administration of justice benefits from public scrutiny. It is also important that a person's, particularly an accused person's, right to a fair trial or hearing not be impaired by inappropriate public statements made before the case has concluded.

7.6 Preventing Unauthorized Practice

Preventing Unauthorized Practice

7.6-1 A lawyer must assist in preventing the unauthorized practice of law.

Commentary

[1] Statutory provisions against the practice of law by unauthorized persons are for the protection of the public. Unauthorized persons may have technical or personal ability, but they are immune from control, from regulation and, in the case of misconduct, from discipline by the Society. Moreover, the client of a lawyer who is authorized to practise has the protection and benefit of the lawyer-client privilege, the lawyer's duty of confidentiality, the professional standard of care that the law requires of lawyers, and the authority that the courts exercise over them. Other safeguards include mandatory professional liability insurance, the assessment of lawyers' bills, regulation of the handling of trust money and the maintenance of compensation funds.

[2] See, generally, the Legal Profession Act of Alberta, sections 102 – 111.

7.7 Errors and Omissions

Informing Client of Errors or Omission

7.7-1 When, in connection with a matter for which a lawyer is responsible, a lawyer discovers a material error or omission that is or may be damaging to the client regardless of whether it is capable of rectification, the lawyer must:

(a) promptly inform the client of the error or omission;

(b) recommend that the client obtain independent legal advice concerning the matter, including any rights the client may have arising from the error or omission; and

(c) advise the client of the possibility that, in the circumstances, the lawyer may no longer be able to act for the client.

Commentary

[1] A lawyer has an ethical and fiduciary duty to disclose a material error or omission to a client. The duty to inform clients of material errors or omissions is separate and distinct from the duty to report all claims and potential claims to the insurer. For example, while a lawyer is contractually required to report to the insurer any circumstance that could reasonably be expected to give rise to a claim, however unmeritorious, the ethical duty to inform a client of an error arises when the error is material and likely to affect the client's interests.

[2] When a lawyer becomes aware of an error or omission that may affect a client's interests, the lawyer must be candid and inform the client of the relevant facts which gave rise to the error or omission. This duty arises whether or not the error is capable of rectification. The lawyer should not make any statements about the lawyer's own negligence or admit liability, as an admission of liability may cause the insurer to deny insurance coverage.

[3] A lawyer should recommend that a client seek independent advice regarding the nature of the error, whether the error is capable of rectification and whether the client may have any remedies against the lawyer.

[4] If the mistake has created a problem for the client, the lawyer must advise the client to consider retaining other counsel. There may be circumstances when, at the client's request and in consultation with the insurer, it is appropriate for the lawyer to continue acting. The lawyer should recommend that the client seek independent advice before the lawyer continues to represent the client.

Notice of Claim

7.7-2 A lawyer must give prompt notice to an insurer or other indemnitor of any circumstance that may give rise to a claim so that the client's protection from that source will not be prejudiced.

Commentary

[1] In Alberta, under the lawyer's compulsory professional liability insurance policy, a lawyer is contractually required to give written notice to the insurer as soon as practicable after the lawyer becomes aware of any actual or alleged error, or of any circumstances that could reasonably be expected to give rise to a claim. The duty to report arises even if the claim does not appear to have merit.

[2] The duty to notify the insurer of a potential claim is also an ethical duty which is imposed on the lawyer to protect clients, as the failure to report a claim may prejudice coverage. In addition, a lawyer should not attempt to take corrective action without notifying or consulting the insurer, and should not admit negligence or liability for damages. The insurer may deny coverage if the lawyer takes steps which prejudice the insurer's ability to successfully engage repair counsel or to otherwise defend the lawyer.

COURT FILE NO.	2203-04046
COURT	COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH OF ALBERTA
JUDICIAL CENTRE	EDMONTON
APPLICANTS	C.M, LITIGATION GUARDIAN FOR A.B., S.A., LITIGATION GUARDIAN FOR F.S. C.H., LITIGATION GUARDIAN FOR G.H., A.B. LITIGATION GUARDIAN FOR J.K., R.L., LITIGATION GUARDIAN FOR L.M., and ALBERTA FEDERATION OF LABOUR
RESPONDENT	HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT OF ALBERTA
DOCUMENT	AMENDED AMENDED CERTIFIED RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS

Clerk's Stamp

JUDICIAL CENTRE OF EDMONTON
FILED DIGITALLY
2203 04046
Jul 12, 2022
3:34 PM
CLERK OF THE COURT

ADDRESS FOR SERVICE AND CONTACT INFORMATION OF PARTY FILING THIS DOCUMENT	McLENNAN ROSS LLP #600 McLennan Ross Building 12220 Stony Plain Road Edmonton, AB T5N 3Y4	Lawyer: Gary Zimmermann Telephone: 780.482.9208 Fax: 780.733.9709 Email: gary.zimmermann@mross.com File No.: 20220908

1. Please find attached:

   (a) The decision or written record of the act that is the subject of the originating application for judicial review;

      i. The Record of Decision – CMOH Order 08-2022 ("Decision").

   (b) The reasons given for the decision or act;

      i. Unable to provide for reasons given in paragraph 2 below.

   (c) The document starting the proceeding;

      i. Unable to provide for reasons given in paragraph 2 below.

   (d) The evidence and exhibits filed with us; and

      i. Unable to provide for reasons given in paragraph 2 below.

   (e) Anything else in our possession relevant to the decision or act, namely

      i. See attached Schedule "A".

2. The following are parts of the notice to obtain record of proceedings that cannot be fully complied with and the reasons why:

Paragraph 1(b): The reasons given for the decision or act.	No reasons were given because the exercise of the authority to make a CMOH Order is a delegated legislative function given to medical officers of health, which includes the CMOH, under the Public Health Act.
Paragraph 1(c): The document starting the proceeding.	There is no such document. There is no commencement document that initiates a proceeding that results in the issuance of a CMOH Order. There is in fact no proceeding. Rather, section 29(2.1) of the Public Health Act sets out the conditions that must exist in order for the medical officer of health (which includes the CMOH) to take further action.
Paragraph 1(d): The evidence and exhibits filed.	None exist because the process does not allow for it. Although Dr. Hinshaw and her staff, along with staff from Health's Emergency Operations Centre, continually monitor and evaluate emerging scientific data regarding COVID-19 in Alberta, across Canada as well as around the globe to help inform policy options for CMOH Orders, evidence and exhibits are not filed with the CMOH as part of the decision-making process.
Paragraph 1(e): Power-Point presentation to Executive Council with information regarding the ongoing COVID-19 Pandemic.	^ Pursuant to the July 4, 2022 Decision of the Honourable Justice G.S Dunlop ordering disclosure, the Power-Point presentation has been filed with this Amended Amended Certified Record of Proceedings.
Paragraph 1(e): The Official Record of Decision consisting of Cabinet meeting minutes arising from the February 8, 2022 meeting where ongoing public health orders were discussed and considered.	^ Pursuant to the July 4, 2022 Decision of the Honourable Justice G.S Dunlop ordering disclosure, the Official Record of Decision has been filed with this Amended Amended Certified Record of Proceedings.
Paragraph 1(e)	As noted, Dr. Hinshaw and her staff, along with staff from Health's Emergency Operations Centre, continually monitor and evaluate emerging scientific data regarding COVID-19 in Alberta, across Canada as well as around the globe to help inform policy options for CMOH Orders. It is not possible to reconstruct every record that may have been reviewed prior to the Decision being made. However, Dr. Hinshaw and her staff have made best efforts to identify and provide the documents and information that were most critical and directly relevant to the Decision.

3. I certify that I have attached all records as required by Rule 3.19(1).

Name of person who certifies this record: Dr. Deena Hinshaw

Position: Alberta's Chief Medical Officer of Health

Signature:

Schedule "A"

Tab	Date	Description
1	As of January 31, 2022	Jurisdictional scan of masking requirements in other Canadian provinces and territories as well as other countries
2	February 2022	Guidance for Schools (K-12) and School Buses
3	January 10, 2022	CMOH Order 02-2022
4	February 2, 2022	CMOH Order 04-2022
5	February 7, 2022	Alberta COVID-19 Immunization Program Report (Information as of February 7, 2022)
6	February 7, 2022	Memo from Premier's Office Staff to Premier Kenney Re: Student Masking in School. Copy provided to Dr. Hinshaw.
7	February 7, 2022	COVID-19 – COVID and Schools.
8	February 7, 2022	Email from Scott Fulmer to Dr. Hinshaw and others Re: School Masking Evidence Summary.
9	February 8, 2022	COVID-19 Situation Update – Epidemiology and Surveillance.
10	February 8, 2022	Documents from Alberta Health Internal Dashboard – COVID-19 in Alberta, Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch, Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit. Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch, Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit, 2022-February-08 12:01
11	March 2, 2022	Briefing Note – Advice to Honourable Jason Copping, Minister of Health – COVID-19 Measures in Schools – for information (plus attachments – COVID-19 Measures in Schools Alberta Data and COVID-19 Measures in Schools Literature).
12	May 31, 2022	Appendix 1 - summarizing context of COVID-19 and evidence relevant to masking in schools at the time of the decision.
13	February 8, 2022	Power-Point presentation to Executive Council with information regarding the ongoing COVID-19 Pandemic.
14	February 8, 2022	The Official Record of Decision consisting of Cabinet meeting minutes arising from the February 8, 2022 meeting where ongoing public health orders were discussed and considered.

Alberta Health

Office of the Chief Medical Officer of Health
10025 Jasper Avenue NW
PO Box 1360, Stn. Main
Edmonton, Alberta T5J 2N3
Canada

RECORD OF DECISION – CMOH Order 08-2022

Re: 2022 COVID-19 Response – Step 1 Easing Measures

Whereas I, Dr. Deena Hinshaw, Chief Medical Officer of Health (CMOH) have initiated an investigation into the existence of COVID-19 within the Province of Alberta.

Whereas the investigation has confirmed that COVID-19 is present in Alberta and constitutes a public health emergency as a novel or highly infectious agent that poses a significant risk to public health.

Whereas under section 29(2.1) of the Public Health Act (the Act), I have the authority by order to prohibit a person from attending a location for any period and subject to any conditions that I consider appropriate, where I have determined that the person engaging in that activity could transmit an infectious agent. I also have the authority to take whatever other steps that are, in my opinion, necessary in order to lessen the impact of the public health emergency.

Whereas more Albertans are now eligible for COVID-19 vaccination including five to eleven year olds and more Albertans are eligible for COVID-19 booster vaccinations.

Whereas rapid testing for COVID-19 is widely available.

Whereas having determined that certain measures are necessary to protect Albertans from exposure to COVID-19 and to prevent the spread of COVID-19, I hereby make the following order:

Table of Contents

Part 1 – Application

1.1 This Order applies throughout the province of Alberta.

1.2 Unless otherwise stated herein, this Order comes into force on February 8, 2022 at 11:59 p.m..

1.3 If a section of this Order is inconsistent or in conflict with a provision in Record of Decision – CMOH Order 02-2022, CMOH Order 06-2022 or CMOH Order 07-2022, the sections in those Orders prevail to the extent of the inconsistency or conflict.

1.4 This Order rescinds Record of Decision - CMOH Order 54-2021 and Record of Decision - CMOH Order 55-2021.

Part 2 – Definitions

2.1 In this Order, the following terms have the following meanings:

(a) "adult" means a person who has attained the age of eighteen years.

(b) "authorizing health professional" means one of the following regulated members under the Health Professions Act who holds a practice permit:

i. nurse practitioners;

ii. physicians;

iii. psychologists.

(c) "child care program" means any of the following:

i. a facility-based program providing day care, out of school care or preschool care;

ii. a family day home program;

iii. a group family child care program;

iv. an innovative child care program.

(d) "Class A, B or C liquor licence" has the same meaning given to it under the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Regulation, under the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Act.

(e) "cohort", as the context of this Order requires, means:

i. for a person who resides on their own, one or two other persons with whom the person who resides on their own regularly interacts with during the period of this Order;

ii. for a household, the persons who regularly reside at the home of that household;

iii. for a school, the group of students and staff who primarily remain together for the purposes of instruction as a COVID-19 safety strategy.

(f) "commercial vehicle" means a vehicle operated on a highway by or on behalf of a person for the purpose of providing transportation, but does not include a private passenger vehicle.

(g) "day care" has the same meaning given to it in the Early Learning and Child Care Regulation.

(h) "face mask" means a medical or non-medical mask or other face covering that covers a person's nose, mouth and chin.

(i) "facility-based program" has the same meaning given to it in the Early Learning and Child Care Act.

(j) "Facility Licence" has the same meaning given to it in the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Regulation, under the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Act.

(k) "family day home program" has the same meaning given to it in the Early Learning and Child Care Act.

(l) "farming or ranching operation" means the primary production of eggs, milk, grain, seeds, fruit, vegetables, honey, livestock, diversified livestock animals within the meaning of the Livestock Industry Diversification Act, poultry or bees, an operation that produces cultured fish within the meaning of the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, and any other primary agricultural operation specified in the regulations, but does not include the operation of a greenhouse, mushroom farm, nursery or sod farm.

(m) "fitness activity" means a physical activity that occurs at a gym, fitness studio, dance studio, rink, ski hill, pool, hot tub or sauna, arena or recreation centre and includes dance classes, bobsled, pole dancing, rowing, spin, yoga, boxing, boot camp, Pilates and other activities of a similar nature.

(n) "food-serving business or entity" means a restaurant, café, bar, pub or similar business or entity.

(o) "Gaming Licence" has the same meaning given to it in the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Regulation, under the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Act.

(p) "gaming terminal" means a computer, video device or machine that is used, or could be used, to play a lottery scheme as defined in the Criminal Code (Canada) where, on insertion of money or a token or on payment of any consideration a person may receive or be entitled to receive money, either directly from the computer, video device or machine or in another manner.

(q) "group family child care program" has the same meaning given to it in the former Child Care Licensing Regulation.

(r) "health condition" means the following mental or physical limitations:

i. sensory processing disorders;

ii. developmental delays;

iii. mental illnesses including: anxiety disorders; psychotic disorders; dissociative identity disorder; and depressive disorders;

iv. facial trauma or recent oral maxillofacial surgery;

v. contact dermatitis or allergic reactions to face mask components; or

vi. clinically significant acute respiratory distress.

(s) "highway" means any thoroughfare, street, road, trail, avenue, parkway, driveway, viaduct, lane, alley, square, bridge, causeway, trestleway or other place or any part of any of them, whether publicly or privately owned, that the public is ordinarily entitled or permitted to use for the passage or parking of vehicles and includes:

i. a sidewalk, including a boulevard adjacent to the sidewalk;

ii. if a ditch lies adjacent to and parallel with the roadway, the ditch; and

iii. if a highway right of way is contained between fences or between a fence and one side of the roadway, all the land between the fences, or all the land between the fence and the edge of the roadway, as the case may be, but does not include a place declared by regulation not to be a highway.

(t) "innovative child care program" has the same meaning given to it in the former Child Care Licensing Regulation.

(u) "interactive activities" means the following activities engaged in by a person:

i. dancing;

ii. billiards;

iii. arcades;

iv. photo booths;

v. darts;

vi. other substantially similar multi-person or interactive activities, but for greater certainty, does not include a live performance activity observed by a person or gaming terminals where the person who games at the gaming terminal is masked and stationary.

(v) "masking directive or guidance" means, as the context of this Order requires, either:

i. a directive or guidance document made by a regional health authority, or a contracted service provider of a regional health authority, which sets out directions or guidance respecting the use of face masks in facilities or settings operated by the regional health authority or the contracted service provider; or

ii. a directive or guidance document made by Alberta Health and posted on the Government of Alberta website.

(w) "medical exception letter" means written confirmation provided to a person by an authorizing health professional which verifies that the person has a health condition that prevents the person from wearing a face mask while attending an indoor public place and

i. clearly sets out the information required by section 3.6 of this Order; and

ii. is valid for a period of one year from the date on which it is made.

(x) "out of school care" has the same meaning given to it in the Early Learning and Child Care Regulation.

(y) "performance activity" means singing, playing a musical instrument, dancing, acting or other activities of a similar nature and includes, but is not limited to, a rehearsal, concert, theatre, dance, choral, festival, musical and symphony events but excludes:

i. congregational singing or dancing;

ii. singing or dancing in a nightclub;

iii. singing along or dancing at a concert; or

iv. any substantially similar activity.

(z) "person who resides on their own" means a person living on their own or a person living on their own who has one or more youth living with them and under their care.

(aa) "physical activity" means a fitness activity or sport activity.

(bb) "post-secondary institution" means:

i. a public or private post-secondary institution operating under the Post-Secondary Learning Act; and

ii. private colleges which are those institutions that have been accredited by Alberta's Ministry of Advanced Education;

iii. private faith-based institutions that have been accredited either by Alberta's Ministry of Advanced Education or the Association for Biblical Higher Education or the Association of Theological schools;

iv. Maskwacis Cultural College;

v. Old Sun Community College;

vi. Red Crow Community College;

vii. University nuhelot'ine thaiyots'i nistameyimakanak Blue Quills; and viii. Yellowhead Tribal College.

and includes the physical location or place where the post-secondary institution provides a structured learning environment through which a program of study is offered.

(cc) "preschool care", has the same meaning given to it in the Early Learning and Child Care Regulation.

(dd) "private place" means a private place as defined under the Public Health Act.

(ee) "private social gathering" means any type of private social function or gathering at which a group of persons come together and move freely around to associate, mix or interact with each other for social purposes rather than remaining seated or stationary for the duration of the function or gathering, but does not include a cohort consisting of persons referred to in section 2.1(e) of this Order or persons referred to in section 5.3 of this Order.

(ff) "public place" has the same meaning given to it in the Public Health Act, and for greater certainty does not include a rental accommodation used solely for the purposes of a private residence.

(gg) "recreational activity" means any structured or organized activity or program where the purpose of the activity or program is intended to develop a skill, including but not limited to, Girl Guides, Scouts, arts and crafts, pottery or other substantially similar activities.

(hh) "school" has the same meaning given to it in the Education Act.

(ii) "school building" has the same meaning given to it in the Education Act.

(jj) "Special Event Licence" has the same meaning given to it under Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Regulation, under the Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Act.

(kk) "sport activity" means sports training, practices, events, games, scrimmages, competitions, gameplay, league play, and other activities of a similar nature.

(ll) "stadium seating" means the designated space in an indoor arena, movie theatre or other similar indoor settings where a person sits to observe a physical activity, performance activity or recreational activity.

(mm) "staff member" means any person who is employed by, or provides services under a contract with, an operator of a school.

(nn) "student" has the same meaning given to it in the Education Act.

(oo) "visitor" means any person who attends a school, but who is not a student or staff member.

(pp) "youth" means a person who has not attained eighteen years of age.

Part 3 – Masking

A. Indoor masking requirements

3.1 Except as set out in this Order and subject to Part 10, a person must wear a face mask at all times while attending an indoor public place.

3.2 For greater certainty, indoor public places include, but are not limited to:

(a) a school building;

(b) commercial vehicles transporting the driver and one or more other persons who are not members of that person's household, or if the person is a person living alone, then the person's cohort;

(c) the common areas of a day camp or overnight camp; and

(d) all indoor spaces under the control of a business or entity, including all areas where the public or employees of the business or entity may attend.

3.3 For greater certainty, except as otherwise set out in this Order:

(a) face masks must be worn at a wedding ceremony or funeral service that is held in an indoor public place; and

(b) a person must comply with all masking directives or guidance while attending at a facility operated by a regional health authority under the Regional Health Authorities Act or a facility operated by a contracted service provider of a regional health authority.

B. General exceptions to indoor masking

3.4 Despite this Part of this Order, a person is not required to wear a face mask at all times while attending an indoor public place if the person is:

(a) a youth under two years of age;

(b) effective February 13, 2022 at 11:59 p.m., a youth under thirteen years of age;

(c) effective February 13, 2022 at 11:59 p.m., a student enrolled in kindergarten through grade 12 while attending at a school and participating in curriculum related or extracurricular school activities;

(d) a youth or adult participating in an indoor performance activity in circumstances where it is not possible for the youth or adult to wear a face mask while participating in the indoor performance activity;

(e) a youth or adult participating in an indoor physical activity;

(f) a person marrying another person during a wedding ceremony, and the persons in their wedding party;

(g) unable to place, use or remove a face mask without assistance;

(h) seated at a table while consuming food or drink or, if standing at a standing table while consuming food or drink, as long as the person remains at the standing table at all times while consuming the food or drink;

(i) consuming food or drink while remaining seated where there is no table, including in stadium seating, at table games or a gaming terminal;

(j) providing or receiving care or assistance where a face mask would hinder that caregiving or assistance;

(k) alone at a workstation and separated by at least two metres distance from all other persons;

(l) the subject of a workplace hazard assessment in which it is determined that the person's safety will be at risk if the person wears a face mask while working;

(m) separated from every other person by a physical barrier that prevents droplet transmission;

(n) a person who needs to temporarily remove their face mask while in the public place for the purposes of:

i. receiving a service that requires the temporary removal of their face mask;
ii. an emergency or medical purpose, or
iii. establishing their identity.

C. Exceptions for health conditions

3.5 Despite this Part of this Order, a person who is unable to wear a face mask due to a health condition as determined by an authorizing health professional is excepted from wearing a face mask while attending an indoor public place.

3.6 For the purposes of section 3.5, the health condition must be verified by a medical exception letter that includes the following:

(a) the name of the person to whom the exception applies;

(b) the name, phone number, email address, professional registration number, and signature of the authorizing health professional; and

(c) the date on which the written confirmation was provided.

3.7 For greater certainty, although the medical exception letter must verify that a health condition applies, the medical exception letter must not include specific information about the health condition.

D. Exception for child care programs

3.8 Despite this Part of this Order, a youth attending at a child care program is not required to wear a face mask except in accordance with any masking directive or guidance made by Alberta Health and posted on the Government of Alberta website.

E. Exceptions for farming or ranching operations

3.9 Despite this Part of this Order, a person does not need to wear a face mask while working at a farming or ranching operation, unless the person is interacting with a member of the public.

Part 4 – Work from one's private residence

4.1 An employer must require a worker to work from the worker's own private residence unless the employer determines that the worker's physical presence is required at the workplace to effectively operate the workplace.

Part 5 – Private Residences

5.1 Subject to sections 5.3 and 5.4 of this Order, a person who resides in a private residence must not permit a person who does not normally reside in that residence to enter or remain in the residence.

5.2 Section 5.1 of this Order does not prevent a person from entering the private residence of another person for any of the following purposes:

(a) to provide health care, personal care or housekeeping services;

(b) for a visit between a child and a parent or guardian who does not normally reside with that child;

(c) to receive or provide child care;

(d) to provide tutoring or other educational instruction related to a program of study;

(e) to perform construction, renovations, repairs or maintenance;

(f) to deliver items;

(g) to provide real estate or moving services;

(h) to provide social or protective services;

(i) to respond to an emergency;

(j) to provide counselling services;

(k) to provide or receive personal or wellness services;

(l) to provide physical activity or performance instruction; or

(m) to undertake a municipal property assessment.

5.3 A maximum of ten persons may visit at each other's private residences.

5.4 For greater certainty, the maximum number of persons set out in section 5.3 does not include youth when the youth is attending with their parent or guardian.

Part 6 – Private social gatherings

6.1 All persons are prohibited from attending a private social gathering at an outdoor public or private place when there are more than twenty persons in attendance, unless the private social gathering is for the purpose of a wedding ceremony, wedding reception, funeral service, or funeral reception.

A. Private social gatherings for protests

6.2 Despite this Part of this Order, a person may attend at an outdoor public place to exercise their right to peacefully demonstrate for a protest or political purpose without limit to the number of persons in attendance if the person:

(a) remains outdoors except where necessary to use the washroom;

(b) wears a face mask at all times;

(c) maintains a minimum physical distance of two metres from any other person in attendance, except where:

i. either the person or the other person is, or both persons are, eleven years of age or younger; and

ii. both persons are members of the same household;

(d) does not offer food or beverages to any other person in attendance, regardless of whether the food or beverage is provided for sale or not; and

(e) immediately disperses in a coordinated fashion at the conclusion of the gathering, while at all times adhering to the requirements in this section.

6.3 For greater certainty, a protest or political purpose as described in section 6.2 means for the purpose of expressing a position on a matter of public interest.

Part 7 – Capacity restrictions

7.1 An operator of a business or entity with a total operational occupant load, as determined in accordance with the Alberta Fire Code and the fire authority having jurisdiction, of:

(a) 1,000 or more persons, must limit the number of members of the public that may attend the location where the business or entity is operating to a maximum of fifty percent capacity;

(b) 500 to 999 persons, must limit the number of members of the public that may attend the location where the business or entity is operating to a maximum of 500 persons; and

(a) up to 499 persons, must limit the number of members of the public that may attend the location to the total operational occupant load.

7.2 Despite this Part of this Order, a business or entity operating exclusively outdoors, excepting washrooms, is not subject to any capacity limits.

7.3 Despite this Part of this Order, a post-secondary institution's physical location or place is not subject to any capacity limits when the location or place is being used for educational purposes.

7.4 Despite this Part of this Order, a place of worship is not subject to any capacity limits.

Part 8 – Food and Beverage Service, Operating Hours and Interactive Activities

8.1 An operator of a food-serving business or entity must:

(a) limit the number of persons seated at the same table to a maximum of ten persons; and

(b) require persons to remain seated at their assigned table while consuming food or drink or, if standing, at their assigned standing table while consuming food or drink, and must prohibit persons mingling with persons at a different seated or standing table.

8.2 An operator of a business or entity or an event with a Special Event Licence is prohibited from allowing persons to participate in interactive activities at the business or entity or event.

8.3 For greater certainty, section 8.2 does not apply to a business or entity that provides interactive activities provided:

(a) the primary purpose of the business or entity is to provide interactive activities;

(b) any food and beverage service is physically separated from where interactive activities are offered;

(c) the interactive activities do not include dancing;

(d) where the business or entity has a Class A, B, or C liquor licence or a Special Event Licence, the business or entity does not serve liquor after 11 p.m.;

(e) where the business or entity has a Class A or C liquor licence or a Special Event Licence, the business or entity must close the premises by 12:30 a.m.; and

(f) where the business or entity has a Class B liquor licence, the business or entity must end liquor consumption by 12:30 a.m..

8.4 Despite sections 8.2 and 8.3, an event that is specifically for the purposes of a wedding reception may permit dancing but must restrict any other interactive activities at the event.

8.5 An operator of a food-serving business or entity with a Class A or C liquor licence, including but not limited to a food-serving business or entity, legion or private club, is prohibited from serving liquor after 11 p.m. and must close the business or entity by 12:30 a.m..

8.6 An operator of a food-serving business or entity with a Gaming Licence or Facility Licence or a Class B liquor licence, including but not limited to a bowling alley, casino, bingo hall, pool hall or indoor recreation entertainment center, is prohibited from serving liquor after 11 p.m. and must end liquor consumption by 12:30 a.m..

8.7 An operator of a food-serving business or entity who holds a Special Event Licence is prohibited from serving liquor after 11 p.m. and must close the premises by 12:30 a.m..

8.8 For greater certainty, an operator of a food-serving business or entity may, subject to applicable laws, provide food or beverages, including liquor, by take-out, delivery or drive-thru at any time.

Part 9 – Youth activities

9.1 A parent or guardian of a youth must screen a youth for symptoms of COVID-19 prior to the youth participating in indoor youth activities in accordance with the COVID-19, Alberta Health Daily Checklist (for children under the age of eighteen).

Part 10 – Schools

A. Physical distancing in schools

10.1 An operator of a school must assign each youth enrolled in kindergarten to grade six to a cohort as in accordance with the guidance on the Government of Alberta website.

10.2 Students, staff and visitors at a school building must maintain a physical distance of two metres from any other person who is not a member of their cohort as referenced in section 2.1(e) in accordance with the guidance on the Government of Alberta website.

10.3 Despite this Part and in accordance with the guidance on the Government of Alberta website, students and staff at a school building are not required to maintain two metres physical distance if doing so inhibits the guidance or instruction being provided or where it is not possible to maintain two metres physical distance.

B. Masking requirements in schools

10.4 An adult who is not a student attending kindergarten through grade 12 must wear a face mask while attending at a school building.

10.5 An operator of a school must ensure that an adult referred to in section 10.4 wears a face mask while attending at a school building.

C. Exceptions to masking in schools

10.6 Section 10.7 expires February 13, 2022 at 11:59 p.m.

10.7 Despite Part 3 and this Part of this Order, students, staff or visitors are not required to wear a face mask at all times while attending at a school building if the student, staff or visitor:

(a) is unable to place, use or remove a face mask without assistance;

(b) is unable to wear a face mask due to a health condition;

(c) is consuming food or drink in a designated area;

(d) is engaging in a physical activity;

(e) is seated at a desk or table

i. within a classroom or place where the instruction, course or program of study is taking place, and

ii. where the desks, tables and chairs are arranged in a manner

(A) to prevent persons who are seated from facing each other, and
(B) to allow the greatest possible distance between seated persons;

(f) is providing or receiving care or assistance where a non-medical face mask would hinder that caregiving or assistance; or

(g) is separated from every other person by a physical barrier.

10.8 Section 10.9 is effective February 14, 2022 at 12:01 a.m..

10.9 Despite Part 3, an adult who is not a student attending kindergarten through grade 12 is not required to wear a face mask at all times while attending at a school building if the adult:

(a) is unable to place, use or remove a face mask without assistance;

(b) is unable to wear a face mask due to a health condition;

(c) is consuming food or drink in a designated area;

(d) is providing or receiving care or assistance where a non-medical face mask would hinder that caregiving or assistance; or

(e) is separated from every other person by a physical barrier.

10.10 An operator of a school must use its best efforts to ensure that any adult referred to in section 10.9 who is not required to wear a face mask:

(a) as permitted by section 10.9(a) or (b) of this Order maintains a minimum of two metres distance from every other person;

(b) as permitted by section 10.9(c) of this Order maintains a minimum of two metres distance from every other person, if the designated area is not within a classroom or place where the instruction, course or program of study is taking place.

D. School buses

10.11 Part D expires February 13, 2022 at 11:59 p.m.

10.12 Subject to Part 3 of this Order, an operator of a school must ensure that the following persons wear a face mask while being transported on a school bus:

(a) all students attending kindergarten through grade 12;

(b) all staff members;

(c) all visitors.

10.13 For greater certainty, section 10.12(b) applies in respect of any person who transports students attending kindergarten through grade 12 on a school bus to a school, regardless of whether that person is a staff member.

10.14 All students attending kindergarten through grade 12, staff members and visitors must wear a face mask that covers their mouth and nose while being transported on a school bus, unless the student, staff member or visitor:

(a) is unable to place, use or remove a face mask without assistance;

(b) is unable to wear a face mask due to a mental or physical concern or limitation;
(c) is providing or receiving care or assistance where a face mask would hinder that caregiving or assistance; or

(d) is separated from every other person by a physical barrier.

E. School buses (effective February 14, 2022)

10.15 Part E is effective February 14, 2022.

10.16 Subject to Part 3 of this Order, an operator of a school must ensure that all adults who are not students attending kindergarten through grade 12 wear a face mask while on a school bus.

10.17 All adults referred to in section 10.16 must wear a face mask that covers their mouth and nose while being transported on a school bus, unless the adult:

(a) is unable to place, use or remove a face mask without assistance;

(b) is unable to wear a face mask due to a mental or physical concern or limitation;

(c) is providing or receiving care or assistance where a face mask would hinder that caregiving or assistance; or

(d) is separated from every other person by a physical barrier.

F. Exception to masking where physical distancing can be maintained

10.18 Subject to section 10.19 of this Order, sections 10.4 to 10.17 of this of Order do not apply in respect of an operator of a school who is able to ensure that all students, staff members and visitors maintain a minimum of two metres distance from every other person while attending an indoor location within a school or while being transported on a school bus.

10.19 An operator of a school must:

(a) create a written plan that sets out how physical distancing will be maintained;

(b) provide the plan upon request from the Chief Medical Officer of Health, Medical Officer of Health or Alberta Education; and

(c) receive an exemption from the Chief Medical Officer of Health.

10.20 Despite section 10.18 of this Order, an operator of a school does not need to ensure that students, staff members and visitors are able to maintain a minimum of two metres distance from every other person when a student, staff member or visitor is seated at desk or table:

(a) within a classroom or place where the instruction, course or program of study is taking place, and

(b) where the desks, tables and chairs are arranged in a manner

i. to prevent persons who are seated from facing each other, and

ii. to allow the greatest possible distance between seated persons.

Part 11 – General

11.1 Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Chief Medical Officer of Health may exempt a person or a class of persons from the application of this Order.

11.2 This Order provides the minimum standards for public health measures in Alberta for those matters addressed by this Order.

11.3 For greater certainty, nothing in this Order relieves a person from complying with any provision of any federal, provincial or municipal law or regulation or any requirement of any lawful permit, order or licence covering those matters which are addressed in this Order.

11.4 This Order remains in effect until rescinded by the Chief Medical Officer of Health.

Signed on this 10th day of February, 2022.

Deena Hinshaw, MD
Chief Medical Officer of Health

TAB 1

Jurisdictional Scan – School Masking Requirements as of January 31

Jurisdiction	School masking requirements
World Health Organization	Did not recommend masks for children under age 6
European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control	The use of masks was not recommended for children in primary school
United Kingdom	January 20: secondary and college students are no longer required to wear a mask in classrooms January 27: mask mandate for events and venues lifted
Ireland	Mask mandate and school measures to be removed February 28
United Kingdom, Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Norway, Netherlands	Did not require children under the age of 12 to wear masks at any time
British Columbia, Manitoba	Masking is required in public spaces for everyone over 5
Saskatchewan, Ontario	Masking is required in public spaces for everyone over 2
Quebec	Masking is required in all indoor public spaces for everyone over 10. QC recommends people from 2 to 9 wear masks.

TAB 2

COVID-19 INFORMATION

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Overview

Routine public health practices can minimize transmission of respiratory infections, including COVID-19, influenza and common colds. These practices include: getting vaccinated, staying home when sick, proper hand hygiene and respiratory etiquette, enhanced cleaning and disinfecting, and maintaining ventilation systems.

The guidance provided in this document is intended to support school and school authority leaders in reducing opportunities for transmission of COVID-19, including the more transmissible Omicron variant, in schools under the 2021-22 School Year Plan. This includes:

a) practices to minimize the risk of transmission of infection among attendees;
b) procedures for rapid response if an attendee develops symptoms of illness, and
c) maintenance of high levels of sanitation and personal hygiene.

All schools are required to follow this guidance to the extent possible. Schools/school authorities should establish their own COVID-19 plans based on this guidance. Where any part of this guidance is inconsistent or in conflict with enhanced or stronger public health restrictions set out in a CMOH Order, the enhanced or stronger public health measures would prevail.

Schools refers to public, separate, francophone, charter schools, independent (private) school authorities, independent (private) Early Childhood Services (ECS), online/distance education programs, home education programs and First Nations education authorities, from kindergarten through grade twelve. School-based and curriculum-based activities that may be impacted by this guidance include sports, music and field trips into the community or to other schools, and professional development/activity days.

This information is relevant to all schools in Alberta including those on reserve, recognizing that First Nation schools on reserve are a federal responsibility. For public health information, COVID-19 questions or for reporting purposes, First Nation schools should contact their local Health Centre or Indigenous Services Canada-First Nations and Inuit Health Branch Environmental Public Health Services (ISC-FNIHB) office (see Appendix A), in accordance with normal practice.

It is important that measures be implemented in all settings to reduce the risk of transmission of COVID-19. This includes, but is not limited to ensuring: physical distancing, barrier use (where appropriate), proper hand hygiene and respiratory etiquette, enhanced cleaning and disinfecting, records management and building maintenance. Schools and school authorities must also follow the requirements set out in the General Operational Guidance and CMOH orders in effect.

Zone Medical Officers of Health (MOHs) and their designates are available to provide guidance on communicable disease risk and risk management. If you have concerns, need specific guidance, or have questions about how to apply the measures in this document, please contact Environmental Public Health in your Zone for assistance (see Appendix A).

COVID-19 INFORMATION

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

COVID-19 Risk Mitigation

Vaccination	• All Albertans aged 5 and older are eligible for a COVID-19 vaccine. • Vaccines provide a significant level of protection against severe outcomes from COVID-19. Two doses of the COVID-19 vaccine plus a booster, when appropriate, have been shown to be highly protective against infection, and most importantly against severe disease. • While vaccine uptake in children aged 5 to 11 years old continues to grow, the subsequent protective effects of the vaccine may take time for this age group. It is important that those around them, including parents/guardians, older students and school staff, receive the vaccine in order to reduce community transmission and protect this age group. • For more information, please visit alberta.ca/covid19-vaccine.
General Building Safety	• HVAC systems should be maintained in accordance with manufacturer operational guidelines. For more information on building ventilation, please refer to the General Operational Guidance and School Indoor Air Quality (IAQ) - Mechanical Ventilation in Schools (albertahealthservices.ca). o If the use of portable air purifiers with HEPA filters is being considered, they should be used in combination with established public health measures, considering the impact they may have on overall indoor air quality and ventilation, and only in situations where enhancing natural or mechanical ventilation is not possible. If used, air purifiers should be large enough for the size of the room or area where they are being used. • Schools should have procedures that outline hand hygiene requirements: o Hand hygiene frequency should be based on activity (e.g., entering/leaving school or classroom, boarding/exiting the bus, changing activities, before and after using shared equipment, before and after eating, putting on/removing a mask, after using washrooms, etc.) o Handwashing with soap and water where possible is very effective. o Hand sanitizer containing at least 60% alcohol should be placed in convenient locations throughout the school where soap and water may not be available, such as in entrances, exits and near high touch surfaces. If parents have questions about their child using alcohol-based hand sanitizer they should contact their school administration to discuss potential alternatives.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

- Hand sanitizer can cause serious harm if ingested. Keep out of reach of younger children/students, supervise them during use and place hand sanitizer in monitored areas.

- Schools should have procedures that outline cleaning requirements:
  - Increase frequency of cleaning (removing visible dirt) and disinfection (killing germs) of high-touch areas and equipment (e.g., desks, doorknobs, handrails, microwave ovens, vending machines, etc.) inside and outside classrooms.
  - Common area surfaces should be cleaned and disinfected frequently throughout the day.
  - Student contact surfaces (e.g., desks and equipment) should be cleaned and disinfected between each student/user. Restrict sharing of supplies as much as possible.
  - Students should be provided with separated areas to store personal items. Individual assigned lockers may be used. Scheduling or planning times for locker use to minimize congregating at lockers may also be considered. Follow general guidance for cleaning and minimize crowding around lockers.
  - Disinfectants used must have a Drug Information Number (DIN) and a broad-spectrum virucidal claim OR a virucidal claim against non-enveloped viruses or coronaviruses. Alternatively, 1000 ppm bleach solution can be used.
  - Follow the instructions on the product label to disinfect effectively.
  - More information on cleaning and disinfection can be accessed in the General Operational Guidance. Further recommendations are available in the AHS COVID-19 public health recommendations for environmental cleaning of public facilities.
- Water fountains can remain open. Mouthpieces of drinking fountains are not a major source of virus transmission and require regular cleaning according to manufacturer recommendations.
- Use hand hygiene before and after handling items, including paper tests and assignments.
- Items that cannot be cleaned or disinfected between routine use (e.g., paper books, shared electronics, blocks, crayons, etc.) should be stored for 24 hours between uses.
- Additional Alberta Health Services resources:
  - AHS Infection Prevention & Control posters
  - Hand Washing Posters (AHS)
    - Poster 1
    - Poster 2

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	○ How to Hand Wash (AHS) poster ○ How to use alcohol-based hand rub/sanitizer (AHS) poster
Screening	• Before leaving home, staff (including substitute teachers), children/students, visitors, and volunteers who will access the school for work or education, are expected to self-screen for symptoms each day that they enter the school using the applicable checklist for their age group (Child Alberta Health Daily Checklist or Adult Alberta Health Daily Checklist). • Parents and children/students should be provided a copy of the screening checklist. This can be a hard copy or a link to the digital copy of the screening checklist. • Schools should have copies of the daily checklists available for visitors to the school. • Although health screening of staff, students and visitors is required, there is no requirement for verification or the collection and retention of formal records. • Schools should keep records of children's known pre-existing medical conditions. If a child develops symptoms that could be caused by either COVID-19 or by a known pre-existing condition (e.g., allergies), the child should be tested at least once for COVID-19 to confirm that it is not the source of their symptoms before entering or returning to school. • Written confirmation by a physician that a student or staff member's symptoms are due to a chronic illness is not necessary. • Anyone who reports symptoms should be directed to stay home and use an at-home rapid antigen test if available. For more information refer to the rapid testing at home website. • If anyone requires urgent medical attention, they should call 911 for emergency response. • Signs must be posted reminding persons not to enter if they have COVID-19 symptoms, even if symptoms resemble a mild cold.
Cohorting in Kindergarten Through Grade 6	• A cohort is defined as a group of students and/or staff who remain together. • Students in kindergarten through grade 6 are to remain in cohorts wherever possible. Typically a cohort in a school will be a class. • Limit the number of cohorts that students in kindergarten through grade 6 are involved in.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	• The size of the cohort will depend on the physical space of the classroom or learning setting. In very small schools (e.g., equivalent to a single class size), the school may be considered one cohort. • For the purposes of minimizing exposure, consider limiting the number of individuals in a room that allows for physical distancing (i.e., fewer students in a smaller room and more students in a larger room). • Cohorting should be maintained during activities outside the classroom, such as recess and lunch breaks. If students from two different cohorts wish to socialize, they should remain 2 metres apart. • If two or more people from different cohorts are required to come within 2 metres of one another for the purposes of instruction, practice or undertaking examinations, additional protections should be instituted. Consider using engineering controls such as plexiglass barriers or partitions that extend across breathing zones and are made of materials that can be cleaned and disinfected between users, or administrative controls such as adapting the activity to minimize or eliminate close contacts. • Teachers who regularly interact within 2 metres of students in their class are considered part of the cohort. If teachers interact with more than one group of students without distancing, they are part of multiple cohorts. • As much as operationally possible, limit the number of classroom cohorts that teachers belong to. • If a teacher or staff member does not interact within 2 metres of students in their classes, they would not be considered part of the cohort. • Teachers/staff should not be in a cohort with each other, unless it is required for operational purposes. (i.e., a teacher and a teacher's assistant who work with the same classroom cohort).
Physical Distancing	• Schools should institute controls to promote physical distancing as much as possible between all students/staff in areas inside and outside of the classroom, including hallways, washrooms and common areas. This may include: o Staggering start and end times for classes to avoid crowded entrances or exits and hallways. o Posting signs and marking floors with arrows to control the flow of traffic. o Removing and restaging seating in public areas to prevent gathering.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	○ Considering limiting bathroom occupancy to support physical distancing. • It is still recommended to maintain physical distancing within a cohort whenever possible to minimize the risk for disease transmission (i.e., spacing between desks). Students are not expected to sit at their desks for the duration of the day. ○ If 2 metres spacing cannot be arranged between desks/tables, the greatest possible spacing is recommended. Students should be arranged so they are not facing each other (e.g., arranged in rows rather than in small groups of 4 or a semi-circle). This way, if a student coughs or sneezes, they are not likely to cough or sneeze directly on the face of another student. ○ Consider removing additional items or pieces of equipment that are not in use from classrooms to allow more space to spread out. • In situations where physical distancing is not possible (e.g., on the bus, in classrooms and while participating in some sporting activities), or for younger grades with play-based curricula, there should be extra emphasis on hand hygiene, respiratory etiquette, not attending school when ill and cleaning and disinfecting on a regular basis before and after activities. • Schools should develop procedures for drop-off that support physical distancing where possible between all persons (except household members). Consider strategies to support physical distancing or utilize other protocols to limit contact between staff/parents/guardians/children/students as much as possible: ○ Designate entrances for classes/groups of students. ○ Physical distancing markers in crowded areas. ○ Stagger drop off/bus arrival times, coordinated with entry/exit. ○ Encourage parents/guardians to remain outside during drop-off and pick-up. • Where possible, avoid large gatherings of students and staff (e.g., assemblies, in-person group professional development day activities). ○ Virtual options are recommended instead of in person gatherings whenever possible. ○ If virtual assemblies are not possible, minimize the number of people in attendance as much as possible and keep cohorts (K-6) 2 metres apart.
Masks	• Masking is no longer required for students in K-12 during curriculum-related activities or when participating in extracurricular school activities. Masking during the school day remains a personal health choice for students and their parents/guardians.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

- Masking is required for anyone 13 years and older while attending spectator events.

- Students at higher risk of severe outcomes from COVID-19 are recommended to continue wearing a well-fitting three layer cloth mask or medical mask to reduce their risk of infection.
- Students who become ill while at school should be provided with a medical mask that can be worn while waiting to go home (See Section on Responding to Illness).
- Fully vaccinated students or staff recovering from COVID-19 who are completing their day 6-10 mandatory masking period at school must wear a mask at all times and must not share breaks where masks must be removed to consume food or beverages with non-COVID-19 infected individuals. If more than one individual is isolating, it is possible to cohort people with COVID-19 for breaks and lunch.
- Teachers, staff and adult visitors must follow provincial requirements for masks.
  - Masks should be well-constructed, well-fitted and properly worn.
  - If non-medical masks are worn, they should be constructed of at least three layers: two of breathable tightly woven fabric, such as cotton, and an additional effective middle filter layer, such as non-woven polypropylene.
  - Medical masks can also be worn to provide additional protection.
- All staff members, volunteers, and adult visitors are required to wear a mask while in indoor shared areas of school, outside the classroom, and on a school bus. Please see current CMOH orders for additional information.
  - A teacher/staff may remove a mask when alone at a workstation and separated by at least two metres from all other persons.
- Face shields are not equivalent to non-medical face masks and offer insufficient protection on their own. Other alternatives (e.g., neck gaiters, buffs or bandanas) offer less protection than masks and are therefore not recommended.
- Face shields may be worn in addition to a mask, at the discretion of the individual. Staff may elect to wear a face shield or eye protection in addition to a mask when completing personal care of students or when staff are in close contact with students (i.e., symptomatic students awaiting pick up by parents/guardians).

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	• Schools should consult their designated Occupational Health and Safety department for mask-wearing policies and other personal protective equipment policies for their staff.
	• Very few individuals may not be able to wear masks due to sensory or health issues. It is important to comply with other personal preventative practices such as frequent hand hygiene, physical distancing and strict cohorting as much as possible.
	• Persons seeking a mask exception at a school should discuss their request with the school administration.
	• Exceptions to the mask requirement for staff, volunteers and all adult visitors include:
	  ○ Persons who are unable to place, use or remove a non-medical face mask without assistance;
	  ○ Persons unable to wear a non-medical face mask due to a mental or physical concern or limitation;
	  ○ Persons consuming food or drink in designated areas;
	  ○ Persons engaged in physical exercise;
	  ○ Persons seated at a desk or table within a classroom or place where instruction is taking place and where the desks, tables and chairs are arranged in a manner to prevent persons who are seated from facing each other, and to allow the greatest possible distance between seated persons;
	  ○ Persons providing or receiving care or assistance where a non-medical face mask would hinder that caregiving or assistance, and ○ Persons separated from every other person by a physical barrier.
	• School administrators/authorities should develop a plan to ensure that students who are hearing impaired or who rely on facial cues are able to communicate with others in areas where masks are being worn, or have their educational needs met when teachers are wearing masks in the classroom. This may include the use of transparent masks. As with other masks, it is important that transparent masks cover the nose and mouth, as well as fit securely against the face.
	• School staff should monitor for and address any discrimination or bullying associated with a student either wearing or not wearing a mask.
	• Students who prefer to wear a mask while attending school should be supported to do so.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	• Masks should not be worn by anyone who is unable to remove the mask without assistance (e.g., due to age, ability or developmental status).
Field Trips	• If schools wish to continue with off-site activities including field trips, they should follow the school guidance, as well as any sector-specific restrictions or recommendations relevant to the location of the field trip. This includes physical distancing, cohorting for students in kindergarten through grade 6, hand hygiene, respiratory etiquette and enhanced cleaning and disinfection. Considerations would include: o Avoiding off-site activities or locations with higher risks including those that might involve crowded public venues, hands-on activities with shared items, shared transport or situations where vulnerable populations are involved (e.g. congregate care, hospital). o Individual classroom cohorts for students in kindergarten through grade 6 should be maintained during transportation to and from any external field trip site, as well as at the location of the field trip site. If two cohorts share a bus, separate the cohorts by 2 metres. o Organizations providing off-site activities should comply with sector-specific restrictions and recommendations. o An organization or facility should only host one classroom cohort at a time, or should take clear steps to separate multiple groups to ensure they do not use shared areas (e.g., lunch rooms). o Organization or facility staff at the off-site activity should maintain physical distancing of at least 2 metres from the visiting students and staff. o Hold activities outdoors as much as possible. o Schools should develop procedures to address students or staff developing symptoms during the field trip; plans should include a designated area to isolate the ill individual, what extra supplies may be needed (e.g., mask for the child, mask/face shield for the individual attending to the child, etc.), how to notify a parent/guardian and how the ill child will be transported home from the off-site activity. • Schools must follow the CMOH orders as they relate to curriculum-based educational activities and extra-curricular activities. For more information about current restrictions, see the webpage for public health actions.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	• In-school field trips may also occur. All visitors to the school are expected to follow the public health measures that are in place for the school.

Performance Activity	• Students are able to participate in a group performance activity (i.e., singing, dancing, playing instruments, theatre) as part of their education program curriculum.
	  ○ Maintain 2 metres physical distancing between participating students, where possible.
	  ○ Singers and wind instrument musicians should keep 2 metres away from other performers and individuals at all times.
	  ○ Wind instruments should be equipped with a cover intended to prevent droplet transmission.
	  ○ In indoor settings, groups should not sing or play wind instruments for more than 30 minutes at a time, with a 10-minute break afterwards to allow for air exchange in the room.
	• Students are able to participate in an extracurricular performance activity following the CMOH orders for general youth performance activities. For more information about current restrictions, see the webpage for public health actions.
	• All spectators and attendees 13 years or older must be masked.
	• It is recommended that at this time, school authorities limit opportunities for spectating at school performance and sporting events to reduce potential exposures to COVID-19.
	• If spectating opportunities are offered, spectators at school-related indoor performance activities held at the school (e.g., Christmas/Holiday concerts, recitals, etc.) are subject to the following restrictions:
	• Spectator attendance limits at indoor performance activities are removed except for:
	  ○ Facilities with capacity of 500 to 999, which will be limited to 500.
	  ○ Facilities with capacity of 1,000-plus, which will be limited to 50 per cent.
	• It is recommended that spectators maintain 2 metres physical distance between households. Individuals who live alone may sit with their two designated close contacts.

Physical Activity	• Students are permitted to participate in group physical activity as part of an education program curriculum (i.e., physical education class and sports academy classes may occur). Participants must continue to follow the school guidance regarding cohorting (kindergarten through grade 6), physical distancing, hand hygiene and respiratory etiquette. ○ When possible, physical education should be done outside instead of inside as the risk of transmission is higher in indoor settings. ○ For physical education classes, administrators and teachers should, where possible, choose activities or sports that support physical distancing and limit face-to-face activities (e.g., badminton over wrestling). • Students are able to participate in an extracurricular physical activity following the current CMOH orders for youth physical activity. For more information about current restrictions, see the webpage for public health actions. • It is recommended that school authorities limit extracurricular sport tournaments and inter-school games at this time, to reduce potential exposures to COVID-19. • Spectators and attendees 13 years or older must be masked (unless participating in the physical activity). • It is recommended that at this time, school authorities limit opportunities for spectating at school performance and sporting events to reduce potential exposures to COVID-19. • If spectating opportunities are offered, spectators at school-related group physical activities held at the school (e.g., sports games, tournaments) are subject to the following restrictions. • Spectator attendance limits at indoor performance activities are removed except for: ○ Facilities with capacity of 500 to 999, which will be limited to 500. ○ Facilities with capacity of 1,000-plus, which will be limited to 50 per cent • It is recommended that spectators maintain 2 metres physical distance between households. Individuals who live alone may sit with their two designated close contacts.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Expectations for Visitors and Other Service Providers Entering the School	• Adult visitors and volunteers are required to follow the school policies such as physical distancing, hand hygiene, staying home when ill and wearing a mask. • Parents/guardians can attend the school if they are required (e.g., parents/guardians may drop off student lunches or other necessary items as required).

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	• When a visitor, volunteer or service provider (including delivery drivers and independent contractors) enters the school they should be asked to use the applicable checklist for their age group (Child Alberta Health Daily Checklist or Adult Alberta Health Daily Checklist) before they enter the school.
	  ○ If a visitor, volunteer or service provider answers YES to any of the questions, the individual must not be admitted into the school.
	  ○ In the case of a delivery driver answering YES, the driver/school will make alternate delivery arrangements.

Food Services	• Classes that teach food preparation may occur as long as students follow general precautions, such as ensuring hand hygiene, respiratory etiquette, maintaining 2 metres physical distancing (where possible) and avoiding handling common or shared serving utensils or cookware.
	  ○ Any food prepared during a class that teaches food preparation should be served by a designated person. Students should follow physical distancing measures while eating and during food preparation where possible.
	• Activities that involve the sharing of food items between students or staff should not occur (e.g., pot luck, buffet-style service).
	• Parents/teachers can provide food/treats for a classroom if there is a designated person serving the food and appropriate hand hygiene is followed before and after eating. Please follow the school's policy for parent-provided food.
	• For classroom meals and snacks:
	  ○ Pre-packaged meals or meals served by designated staff should be the norm. No self-serve or family-style meal service should occur.
	  ○ There should be no common food items (e.g., salt and pepper shakers, ketchup bottle).
	  ○ Designated staff should serve food items using utensils (not fingers).
	• For food service program (e.g., cafeteria) establishments:
	  ○ Group students in kindergarten through grade 6 in their cohorts for meal breaks. Use alternate processes to reduce the numbers of people dining together at one time.
	  ○ If a school is using a common lunchroom and staggering lunch times, ensure that all surfaces of the tables and chairs (including the underneath edge of the chair seat) are cleaned and disinfected after each use.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	○ Adapt other areas to serve as additional dining space to increase spacing among persons in the same room. ○ Do not use buffet-style self-serve. Instead, switch to pre-packaged meals or meals served by staff. ○ Dispense cutlery, napkins and other items to students/children, rather than allowing them to pick up their own items.
Responding to Illness	• Schools should have detailed plans for a rapid response if a student, teacher, staff member or visitor becomes symptomatic while at school. This includes: ○ Sending home students or staff who are sick, where possible. ○ Having a separate area for students and staff who are sick and waiting to go home. ○ Ensuring that students and staff with respiratory illness symptoms wear a medical mask continuously while in school setting. ○ Disinfecting areas and items touched by the sick student or staff member. ○ Staff members caring for an ill student should wear a medical mask and may use a face shield or other eye protections, if available. • Anyone with symptoms should isolate immediately, following AH isolation guidance and orders, use an at-home rapid antigen test if available. Refer to rapid testing at home for more information. • Fully vaccinated students experiencing fever, cough, shortness of breath or loss of sense of taste/smell must continue to isolate for 5 days from when their symptoms started or until they resolve, whichever is longer. For more information on isolation please visit alberta.ca/isolation. • For up to five days following their isolation, all fully vaccinated individuals must wear masks at all times when around others outside of home for up to 5 more days (10 days total). This means they must eat or drink alone, away from others. ○ If it's not possible to give each student in their day 6-10 mandatory masking period a private space to eat in, they can cohort together for meals in the same well-ventilated room. Distancing is recommended and individuals should remain masked at all times when not actively consuming food and drink. • If schools find this operationally challenging to accommodate, the consistent use of a 10 day absence prior to return, for both immunized and non-immunized cases, is an acceptable approach. • Students who are not fully vaccinated who are a case of COVID 19 or who have a fever, cough, shortness of breath or loss of sense of taste/smell must continue to isolate for 10 days from when their symptoms started or until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication and other symptoms are improving, whichever is longer. If they receive a negative test result, they must continue to isolate until their symptoms resolve. For more information on isolation please visit alberta.ca/isolation.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	• Please see Appendix B for management of adults and children who are symptomatic and/or tested for COVID-19.
	• Proof of a negative COVID-19 test result is not necessary for a student, teacher or staff member to return to school.
	• It is strongly recommended that household contacts who are NOT fully vaccinated, stay home for 10 days from the date of last household exposure to the COVID-19 case
	  ○ In addition, they should monitor for symptoms for 10 days from the last day of household exposure, and if they develop any symptoms, they should isolate and complete the AHS Self-Assessment tool.
	  ○ If rapid antigen testing kits are available, they can be used on individuals to test for COVID-19. Refer to rapid testing at home for more information.
	  ○ For more information on isolation requirements for people with symptoms, please visit alberta.ca/isolation.

Student Transportation (Including School Buses)	• Parents and children/students should not be in the pick-up area or enter the bus if they have symptoms of COVID-19.
	• Bus drivers should be provided with a protective zone, which may include:
	  ○ 2 metre physical distance;
	  ○ Physical barrier; or ○ Mask.
	• Students should be assigned seats. Students who live in the same household should be seated together.
	• Masks remain mandatory for all teachers, staff members and adult visitors on school buses and publicly accessible transit, such as municipal buses, taxis and ride-shares. School administrators/authorities must comply with current CMOH orders regarding masking requirements on school buses.
	• Schools/bus companies should develop procedures for student loading, unloading and transfers that support physical distancing of 2 metres between all persons (except household members), when possible and may include:

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	○ Children/students start loading from the back seats to the front of bus. ○ Where feasible, limit the number of students per bench unless from the same household. ○ Students from the same household may share seats. ○ Students start unloading from the front seats to the back of bus. ○ If there are students from two schools on the same bus, it is recommended to keep students from each school separated by 2 metres (3 rows) if possible. • A child who becomes symptomatic during the bus trip should be provided a mask if they are not already wearing one. The driver should contact the school to make the appropriate arrangements to pick up the child/student (see Responding to Illness above). • School bus cleaning and records: ○ Choose a disinfectant that has a Drug Identification Number (DIN) and a broad-spectrum virucidal claim OR a virucidal claim against non-enveloped viruses or coronaviruses and use it according to the manufacturer's instructions. More information is available in the AHS COVID-19 public health recommendations for environmental cleaning of public facilities. ○ Increase frequency of cleaning and disinfection of high-touch surfaces, such as door handles, window areas, rails, steering wheel, mobile devices and GPS prior to each run. ○ It is recommended that vehicle cleaning logs be kept. • Students and staff should be discouraged from carpooling unless they are from the same household. If carpooling is necessary, limit the number of people in the vehicle to maintain as much physical distance as possible and ensure all adult occupants wear masks and practice hand hygiene.
Work Experience	• Work experience is permitted as long as the risk of infection is mitigated for all participants. • If the work experience placement is in a workplace, the child/student is expected to follow health rules set out by the workplace which should comply with the General Operational Guidance and any applicable sector-specific guidance.
International Students/Programs	• International travel programs and international education programs in Alberta must follow current public health orders and local restrictions. • Individuals who have traveled from outside of Canada are provided with specific instructions and requirements at the border. They are to follow the Government of Canada Travel, Testing, Quarantine and

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

	Borders instructions, including any requirements for exempt travelers related to attending high-risk environments. • School administrators/authorities are not expected to be assessing students for following requirements set out by the Federal Quarantine Act. • Students/families are not required to provide proof of vaccination status for school administrators/authorities. • Providing school administrators with proof of a negative test result after arrival in Canada is not required to attend school.
Compliance	• Concerns with individuals not complying with school protocols should be directed to the school principal, the school authority central office or Alberta Education. • School administrators and school authorities who have concerns, need specific guidance or have questions about how to apply the measures outlined in the guidance document may contact AHS Environmental Public Health in their zone for assistance. • Concerns identified by AHS should be discussed with the school administration. Concerns that cannot be resolved through this process should be directed to Alberta Health, who may bring forward to Alberta Education as appropriate.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Appendix A: Environmental Public Health Contacts

Alberta Health Services

Portal link: https://ephisahs.albertahealthservices.ca/create-case/

ZONE	CONTACT EMAIL ADDRESS	PHONE NUMBERS FOR MAIN OFFICE
Calgary Zone	calgaryzone.environmentalhealth@ahs.ca	Calgary 403-943-2288
Central Zone	centralzone.environmentalhealth@ahs.ca	Red Deer 403-356-6366
Edmonton Zone	edmontonzone.environmentalhealth@ahs.ca	Edmonton 780-735-1800
North Zone	northzone.environmentalhealth@ahs.ca	Grande Prairie 780-513-7517
South Zone	she.southzoneeph@ahs.ca	Lethbridge 403-388-6689

Indigenous Services Canada – First Nations and Inuit Health Branch

OFFICE	REGULAR BUSINESS HOURS 8:00 AM – 4:00 PM
Edmonton	Environmental Public Health	780-495-4409
Tsuut'ina	Environmental Public Health	403-299-3939

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Appendix B: Management of Individuals who are Symptomatic and/or Tested for COVID-19

Symptoms	COVID-19 Test Result:	Management of Individual:
Symptomatic	Positive molecular (e.g. PCR) test or rapid antigen take-home test	• Fully vaccinated staff (i.e. staff who have received the complete vaccine series for COVID-19 and it has been 14 days after the second dose in a two dose series or one dose in a one dose series [i.e. Janssen vaccine]) or student (2 doses of mRNA vaccine): Isolate for 5 days from the start of symptoms or until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication and other symptoms are improving, whichever is longer, if symptoms are not related to a pre-existing condition • Following their home isolation period, all fully vaccinated individuals must wear masks at all times when in a public place or otherwise in the company of other persons for up to 5 more days (10 days total). This means they must eat or drink alone, away from others. • If it's not possible to give each student on day 6-10 isolation a private space to eat in, they can cohort together with other COVID-19-infected individuals for meals in the same well-ventilated room. Distancing is recommended and individuals should remain masked at all times when not actively consuming food and drink. • If schools find this operationally challenging to accommodate, the consistent use of a 10 day absence prior to return, for both immunized and non-immunized cases, is an acceptable approach. Not fully vaccinated: Isolate at home for 10 days from the start of symptoms or until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication and other symptoms are improving, whichever is longer, if symptoms are not related to a pre-existing condition.
	Negative molecular (e.g. PCR) test	Fully vaccinated staff (i.e. staff who have received the complete vaccine series for COVID-19 and it has been 14 days after the second dose in a two dose series or one dose in a one dose series [i.e. Janssen vaccine]) or student (2 doses mRNA vaccine): Stay home until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication and other symptoms are improving, before cautiously resuming normal activities. Not fully vaccinated: Stay home until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication and other symptoms are improving if symptoms are not related to a pre-existing condition, before cautiously resuming normal activities.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Symptoms	COVID-19 Test Result:	Management of Individual:
	Negative rapid antigen take-home test	NOTE: A negative test result does not rule out infection. Rapid tests can be falsely negative, early in COVID infections. Continue monitoring your symptoms and following public health guidelines. Isolate immediately for 24 hours. Take second rapid antigen test not less than 24 hours from initial test: • If negative, continue isolating until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication and other symptoms are improving before cautiously resuming normal activities. • If positive, continue isolation: Fully vaccinated: Isolate at home for 5 days or until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication and other symptoms are improving, whichever is longer. For up to five days following their home-isolation period, they must wear masks at all times when in a public place or otherwise in the company of other persons for up to 5 more days (10 days total). This means they must eat or drink alone, away from others. • If it's not possible to give each student on day 6-10 isolation a private space to eat in, they can cohort together with other COVID-19-infected individuals for meals in the same well-ventilated room. Distancing is recommended and individuals should remain masked at all times when not actively consuming food and drink. • If schools find this operationally challenging to accommodate, the consistent use of a 10 day absence prior to return, for both immunized and non-immunized cases, is an acceptable approach.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Symptoms	COVID-19 Test Result:	Management of Individual:
		Not fully vaccinated: 10 days or until symptoms resolve, whichever is longer
	Not tested	Student: If symptoms include fever, cough, shortness of breath or loss of sense of taste/smell, follow instructions for symptomatic positive above. Adult: If symptoms include fever, cough, shortness of breath, sore throat, loss of taste/smell or runny nose, follow instructions for symptomatic positive above.
		Student: If other symptoms (chills, sore throat/painful swallowing, runny nose/congestion, feeling unwell/fatigued, nausea/vomiting/diarrhea, unexplained loss of appetite, muscle/joint aches, headache or conjunctivitis): • ONE symptom: stay home, monitor for 24hours. If improves, return when well enough to go (testing not necessary). • TWO symptoms OR ONE symptom that persists or worsens: Stay home until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication, and other symptoms are improving. Adult: If other symptoms, stay home until they are fever free for 24 hours without the use of fever reducing medication, and other symptoms are improving.
Asymptomatic	Positive molecular (e.g. PCR) test	Fully vaccinated staff (i.e. staff who have received the complete vaccine series for COVID-19 and it has been 14 days after the second dose in a two dose series or one dose in a one dose series [i.e. Janssen vaccine]) or student (2 doses of mRNA vaccine): Isolate for 5 days from the collection date of the swab or from the date when the molecular test was completed. • Following their home isolation period, all fully vaccinated individuals must wear masks at all times when in a public place or otherwise in the company of other persons for up to 5 more days (10 days total). This means they must eat or drink alone, away from others. • If it's not possible to give each staff on day 6-10 isolation a private space to eat in, they can cohort together with other COVID-19-infected individuals for meals in the same well-ventilated room. Distancing is recommended and individuals should remain masked at all times when not actively consuming food and drink. • If schools find this operationally challenging to accommodate, the consistent use of a 10 day absence prior to return, for both immunized and non-immunized cases, is an acceptable approach. Not fully vaccinated: Isolate at home for 10 days from the collection date of the swab or from the date when the molecular test was completed.

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Symptoms	COVID-19 Test Result:	Management of Individual:
	Positive Rapid antigen take-home test	Fully vaccinated staff (i.e. staff who have received the complete vaccine series for COVID-19 and it has been 14 days after the second dose in a two dose series or one dose in a one dose series [i.e. Janssen vaccine]) or student (2 doses of mRNA vaccine): Isolate at home for 5 days from the collection date of the swab or from the date when the rapid take-home test was completed. • Following their home isolation period, all fully vaccinated individuals must wear masks at all times when in a public place or otherwise in the company of other persons for up to 5 more days (10 days total). This means they must eat or drink alone, away from others. • If it's not possible to give each staff on day 6-10 isolation a private space to eat in, they can cohort together with other COVID-infected individuals for meals in the same well-ventilated room. Distancing is recommended and individuals should remain masked at all times when not actively consuming food and drink. • If schools find this operationally challenging to accommodate, the consistent use of a 10 day absence prior to return, for both immunized and non-immunized cases, is an acceptable approach. Not fully vaccinated: Isolate at home for 10 days from the collection date of the swab or from the date when the rapid take-home test was completed. Individuals can conduct a second test not less than 24 hours after the initial test, and if negative, and still no symptoms, they do not

GUIDANCE FOR SCHOOLS (K-12) AND SCHOOL BUSES

Symptoms	COVID-19 Test Result:	Management of Individual:
		need to continue to isolate. If the result is positive on the repeat test, they should continue to isolate. If at any time, symptoms develop, they must follow isolation instructions for symptomatic individuals.
	Negative	No isolation required.

TAB 3

Office of the Chief Medical Officer of Health
10025 Jasper Avenue NW
PO Box 1360, Stn. Main
Edmonton, Alberta T5J 2N3

RECORD OF DECISION – CMOH Order 02-2022

Re: 2022 COVID-19 Response

Whereas I, Dr. Deena Hinshaw, Chief Medical Officer of Health (CMOH) have initiated an investigation into the existence of COVID-19 within the Province of Alberta.

Whereas under section 29(2.1) of the Public Health Act, I have the authority to take whatever steps that are, in my opinion, necessary in order to lessen the impact of the public health emergency.

Whereas having determined that it is possible to modify certain restrictions while still protecting Albertans from exposure to COVID-19 and preventing the spread of COVID-19, I hereby make the following order (the Order):

Table of Contents

Part 1 – Application

1.1 This Order applies throughout the Province of Alberta and is effective January 10, 2022.

1.2 This Order rescinds Record of Decision CMOH Order 01-2022 and CMOH Order 48-2021.

Part 2 – Definitions

2.1 In this Order and the Schedule to this Order, the following terms have the following meanings:

(a) "asymptomatic" means a person who is not exhibiting COVID-19 symptoms.

(b) "confirmed case of COVID-19" means a COVID-19 infection where a person is:

i. asymptomatic and has taken two rapid tests, not less than 24 hours of each other, and both rapid tests indicate the person is positive for COVID-19;
ii. symptomatic and has taken one or more rapid tests indicating the person is positive for COVID-19; OR
iii. asymptomatic or symptomatic and has taken a PCR test which indicates the person is positive for COVID-19.

(c) "COVID-19 symptoms" means the following symptoms of COVID-19 that are not related to a pre-existing illness or health condition:

i. cough;
ii. fever;
iii. sore throat;
iv. shortness of breath;
v. runny nose; or
vi. loss of taste or smell.

(d) "COVID-19 test" means a Health Canada approved rapid test or a lab based PCR test approved by Health Canada or the lab accreditation body of the jurisdiction in which the test is performed.

(e) "critical worker" means a person identified by the owner or operator of a business or entity who is essential to continued safe operations and who provides or is responsible for services that are essential to the safe operation of the business or entity.

(f) "fully vaccinated" means a person eligible for vaccination who has:

i. proof of receiving no less than two doses of a World Health Organization approved COVID-19 vaccine in a two dose vaccine series and has had fourteen or more days elapse since the date on which the person received the last dose of vaccine; or
ii. proof of receiving at least one dose in a World Health Organization approved COVID-19 vaccine in a one dose series and has had fourteen days or more elapse since the date on which the person received the last dose of vaccine.

(g) "health care facility" means

i. an auxiliary hospital under the Hospitals Act;
ii. a nursing home under the Nursing Homes Act;
iii. a designated supportive living accommodation under the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act;
iv. any facility in which residential hospice services are offered or provided by Alberta Health Services or by a service provider under contract with Alberta Health Services.

(h) "isolation" means the separation of a person from any other person for the purpose of preventing the spread of COVID-19.

(i) "isolation period" means the period of time that a person is required to be in isolation pursuant to this Order.

(j) "PCR test" means the polymerase chain reaction test for COVID-19.

(k) "rapid test" means a COVID-19 testing device that is listed in authorized medical devices for uses related to COVID-19: List of authorized testing devices by Health Canada published on the Government of Canada website and is approved for point-of-care molecular or antigen COVID-19 testing, including but not limited to, symptomatic, asymptomatic, tests performed by a health care professional, tests performed by a lay-person, or self-testing.

(l) "symptomatic" means a person who is exhibiting COVID-19 symptoms which are not related to a pre-existing illness or health condition.

(m) "symptoms resolve" means the state when a person's COVID-19 symptoms improve and the person remains afebrile for a period of twenty four hours without using fever reducing medications.

Part 3 – Isolation requirements

General Requirement

3.1 A person is required to be in isolation if the person is:

(a) symptomatic; or

(b) asymptomatic and has taken one rapid test with a positive result; or

(c) a confirmed case of COVID-19.

For symptomatic persons

3.2 A symptomatic person who is fully vaccinated is required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 and must:

(a) immediately start isolation and isolate for a minimum period of five days from the first day on which the person is symptomatic, or until the person's COVID-19 symptoms resolve, whichever is longer;

(b) remain at home, and two metres distant from any other person at all times;

(c) not attend work, school, social events or any other public gatherings; and

(d) not take public transportation.

3.3 A symptomatic person who is not fully vaccinated is required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 and must:

(a) immediately start isolation and isolate for a minimum period of ten days from the first day on which the person is symptomatic, or until the person's COVID-19 symptoms resolve, whichever is longer;

(b) remain at home, and two metres distant from any other person at all times;

(c) not attend work, school, social events or any other public gatherings; and

(d) not take public transportation.

3.4 Despite section 3.2 and section 3.3, a symptomatic person is not required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 if:

(a) a PCR test indicates the person is negative for COVID-19 and the COVID-19 symptoms have resolved; or

(b) two rapid tests, taken not less than 24 hours of each other, both indicate the person is negative for COVID-19 and the COVID-19 symptoms have resolved.

For asymptomatic persons

3.5 An asymptomatic person who is fully vaccinated and has taken one rapid test indicating the person is positive for COVID-19 or is a confirmed case of COVID-19, is required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 and must:

(a) immediately start isolation and isolate for a minimum period of five days from the day on which the asymptomatic person takes a COVID-19 test that indicates the person is positive for COVID-19;

(b) remain at home, and two metres distant from any other person at all times;

(c) not attend work, school, social events or any other public gatherings; and

(d) not take public transportation.

3.6 An asymptomatic person who is not fully vaccinated and has taken one rapid test indicating the person is positive for COVID-19 or is a confirmed case of COVID-19, is required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 and must:

(a) immediately start isolation and isolate for a minimum period of ten days from the day on which the asymptomatic person takes a COVID-19 test that indicates the person is positive for COVID-19;

(b) remain at home, and two metres distant from any other person at all times;

(c) not attend work, school, social events or any other public gatherings; and

(d) not take public transportation.

3.7 Despite section 3.5, if an asymptomatic person who is fully vaccinated develops COVID-19 symptoms during the isolation period, the person must continue to isolate for five days from the first day on which the person is symptomatic or until the COVID-19 symptoms resolve, whichever is later.

3.8 Despite section 3.6, if an asymptomatic person who is not fully vaccinated develops COVID-19 symptoms during the isolation period, the person must continue to isolate for 10 days from the first day on which the person is symptomatic or until the COVID-19 symptoms resolve, whichever is later.

3.9 Despite section 3.5 and section 3.6, an asymptomatic person is not required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 if:

(a) a PCR test indicates the person is negative for COVID-19; or

(a) the result of a second rapid test, taken not less than 24 hours from the initial rapid test, is negative for COVID-19.

Residents of Designated Supportive Living, Auxiliary Hospital, Nursing Home and Hospice facilities

3.10 A person who is a resident of a health care facility, whether fully vaccinated or not, is required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 if the resident is:

(a) symptomatic, and is not a confirmed case of COVID-19, then the resident must immediately start isolation and isolate from the first day on which the resident is symptomatic, for a minimum period of ten days, or until the resident's COVID-19 symptoms resolve, whichever is longer;

(b) asymptomatic and has taken one rapid test with a positive result, then the resident must immediately start isolation and isolate for a minimum period of ten days from the day on which the asymptomatic resident takes a COVID-19 test that indicates the resident is positive for COVID-19;

(c) confirmed case of COVID-19, then the resident must immediately start isolation and isolate for a minimum period of ten days from the day on which the resident takes a COVID-19 test that indicates the resident is positive for COVID-19.

3.11 A person who is a resident of a health care facility who is required to isolate in accordance with section 3.10 must:

(a) remain at the health care facility, and two metres distant from any other person at all times;

(b) not attend social events or any other public gatherings; and

(c) not take public transportation.

3.12 Despite sections 3.10 and 3.11, a resident of a health care facility is not required to isolate in accordance with Part 3 if the:

(a) symptomatic resident has taken a PCR test which indicates the resident is negative for COVID-19 and COVID-19 symptoms resolve;

(b) symptomatic resident has taken two rapid tests, not less than 24 hours of each other, both indicating the resident is negative for COVID-19 and COVID-19 symptoms resolve; or

(c) asymptomatic resident has taken a second rapid test, not less than 24 hours from the initial rapid test, and the results indicate the resident is negative for COVID-19.

Requirement to wear a mask

3.13 Despite any other CMOH Order in effect that pertains to masking, every person required to isolate for the isolation periods set out in Part 3 must wear a mask at all times when in a public place or otherwise in the company of other persons for a period of up to five days following the expiry of the applicable isolation period. The period during which a person is required to mask expires ten days from the first day on which the person is:

(a) symptomatic; or

(b) asymptomatic and has taken one rapid test with a positive result; or

(c) a confirmed case of COVID-19.

For greater certainty, none of the masking exceptions set out in any CMOH Order in effect applies to a person required to mask in accordance with this section.

Part 4 – Critical worker exception

4.1 Despite Part 3 of this Order, and in accordance with Schedule A, a person or class of persons is excepted from the application of this Order where the owner or operator of a business, sector or service determines that a certain person or class of persons:

(a) is a critical worker; and

(b) the critical worker's absence would cause a substantive disruption of services that would be harmful to the public.

4.2 The owner or operator seeking an exception must have a plan to accommodate the presence of the critical worker, identified in section 4.1 that, at minimum, meets the criteria in Schedule A to mitigate the risk of the spread of infection by the critical worker who would otherwise be required to isolate pursuant to this Order.

4.3 To mitigate the risk of the spread of infection by the critical worker, the owner or operator must ensure that a critical worker identified in section 4.1 follows the:

(a) plan developed by the owner or operator pursuant to section 4.2, and

(b) criteria in Schedule A.

4.4 To mitigate the risk of the spread of infection by a critical worker, a critical worker who is excepted from isolation must follow the:

(a) plan developed by the owner or operator pursuant to section 4.2; and

(b) criteria in Schedule A.

For greater certainty, a critical worker is subject to the requirements in Part 3, when not under this exception to complete critical work duties.

Part 5 - General

5.1 Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Chief Medical Officer of Health may exempt a person or classes of persons from the application of this Order.

5.2 This Order remains in effect until rescinded by the Chief Medical Officer of Health.

Signed on this 10 day of January, 2022.

Deena Hinshaw, MD
Chief Medical Officer of Health

Schedule A: Critical Worker Isolation Exceptions

1. This exception is only permitted when:

   (a) services provided by the business or entity are critical for the ongoing operation of services that impact the public interest;
   (b) any substantive service disruption will be detrimental to the public interest;
   (c) the person otherwise required to be in isolation are asymptomatic or mildly symptomatic; and
   (d) all other means of staffing critical worker positions have been exhausted.

Critical Worker Eligibility:

2. The only workers eligible for the isolation exception are those critical workers who are required to be on-site, in-person for critical work duties.

Risk Hierarchy for Isolation Exception:

3. Wherever possible, the owner or operator should implement the isolation exception for critical workers following a least risk to most manner. This prioritizes that the persons who temporarily leave isolation for critical, in-person work duties are the least likely to transmit infection, in conjunction with the public health criteria and controls below. It is strongly recommended that the hierarchy of risk follows:

   (a) A critical worker under this Order will be in one of the following categories, with preference in each category to be given first to a person who has received a booster dose; then a person who is fully immunized; then a person who is partially immunized; and finally a person who is unimmunized:
      i. a symptomatic person who tests negative for COVID-19 but exhibits mild COVID-19 symptoms;
      ii. an asymptomatic person who has taken one rapid test with a positive result;
      iii. an asymptomatic person who is a confirmed case of COVID-19;
      iv. a symptomatic person who is a confirmed case of COVID-19 but exhibits mild COVID-19 symptoms.

Public health criteria and controls:

4. Attending the business or entity location:
   (a) Access to the work location is limited to only critical workers whose presence is critical to the provision of service, to the extent possible.
   (b) Critical workers are only permitted to attend the work location for the purposes of completing their job duties that require them to be on-site, in-person, to ensure the ongoing functioning of the service.
   (c) All critical workers must travel directly to the work location, and immediately return to their place of residence until the applicable isolation period is complete.

5. Masking Requirements:
   (a) Medical masks are worn to enter and exit the building.
   (b) If there is any possibility of a critical worker under this exception being in the same room as another person, even temporarily, the critical worker under this exception must wear a medical mask at all times during this period of time.

i. The other persons that may be in the same area as the critical worker should also wear medical face masks, whenever possible

(c) Critical workers must have access to medical masks in the event that they need to replace their mask on shift.

6. Work spaces:
   (a) Whenever possible, critical workers will be alone in their workspace for the duration of their shift.
   (b) Work spaces for critical workers should include, whenever possible:
      i. a single office that have been established with doors that can close;
      ii. located on a separate floor from the general areas and other work spaces in the location;
      iii. have their own washroom and kitchen facilities which can only be accessed by the critical worker;
      iv. if work spaces are shared by critical workers on different shifts, the critical worker from the first shift must leave the work space before the critical worker from the second shift arrive;
      v. in between shifts, rooms are thoroughly sanitized with 70% alcohol.
   (c) The HVAC system must be functioning properly.

7. Additional Requirements:
   (a) The business or entity must develop and implement protocols for COVID-19 that align with this exception and address appropriate hygiene to protect critical workers and other persons from further transmission of COVID-19.
   (b) The business or entity must train staff on the protocols implemented pursuant to section 7(a) above.
   (c) The business or entity, critical workers and any other staff must follow any further public health conditions or requirements that relate to public health and safety that may be provided by Alberta Health or Alberta Health Services.

TAB 4

Alberta Health

Office of the Chief Medical Officer of Health
10025 Jasper Avenue NW
PO Box 1360, Stn. Main
Edmonton, Alberta T5J 2N3
Canada

RECORD OF DECISION – CMOH Order 04-2022

Re: 2022 COVID-19 Response – Modification of Record of Decision CMOH Order 02-2022, Record of Decision CMOH Order 54-2021, and Record of Decision CMOH Order 57-2021

Whereas I, Dr. Deena Hinshaw, Chief Medical Officer of Health (CMOH) have initiated an investigation into the existence of COVID-19 within the Province of Alberta.

Whereas the investigation has confirmed that COVID-19 is present in Alberta and constitutes a public health emergency as a novel or highly infectious agent that poses a significant risk to public health.

Whereas under section 29(2.1) of the Public Health Act (the Act), I have the authority by order to prohibit a person from attending a location for any period and subject to any conditions that I consider appropriate, where I have determined that the person engaging in that activity could transmit an infectious agent. I also have the authority to take whatever other steps that are, in my opinion, necessary in order to lessen the impact of the public health emergency.

Whereas I have determined that it is necessary to revise Record of Decision - CMOH Order 02-2022 to recognize the change of use of Health Canada approved rapid antigen tests and molecular tests.

Whereas I have also determined that is necessary to revise Record of Decision – CMOH Order 02-2022, Record of Decision – CMOH Order 54-2021, and Record of Decision – CMOH Order 57-2021 to amend the definitions of COVID-19 test and PCR test, and to make consequential amendments.

I hereby make the following Order modifying Record of Decision - CMOH Order 02-2022, Record of Decision - CMOH Order 54-2021, and Record of Decision - CMOH Order 57-2021:

1. Record of Decision - CMOH Order 02-2022 is amended as follows:

    (a) Section 2.1(b) is deleted and substituted with the following:

    "confirmed case of COVID-19" means a COVID-19 infection where a person is:

    i. asymptomatic and has taken two rapid antigen tests, not less than 24 hours of each other, and both rapid antigen tests indicate the person is positive for COVID-19;

    ii. symptomatic and has taken one or more rapid antigen tests indicating the person is positive for COVID-19; OR

iii. asymptomatic or symptomatic and has taken a molecular test which indicates the person is positive for COVID-19.

(b) Section 2.1(d) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"COVID-19 test" means a Health Canada approved rapid antigen test or a molecular test approved by Health Canada or the lab accreditation body of the jurisdiction in which the test is performed.

(c) Section 2.1(j) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"molecular test" means a nucleic acid amplification test to detect RNA of SARS-CoV-2 [e.g. Polymerase Chain Reaction (PCR), loop-mediated isothermal amplification (LAMP), rapid molecular test, etc.]. The test may be performed within an approved laboratory or at the point of care using a Health Canada approved test/instrument.

(d) Section 2.1(k) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"rapid antigen test" means a COVID-19 testing device that is listed in authorized medical devices for uses related to COVID-19: List of authorized testing devices by Health Canada published on the Government of Canada website and is approved for COVID-19 antigen testing, including but not limited to, symptomatic, asymptomatic, tests performed by a health care professional, tests performed by a lay-person, or self-testing.

(e) In Part 3, all references to "rapid test" or "rapid tests" are deleted and substituted with "rapid antigen test" or "rapid antigen tests" as the context requires.

(f) In Part 3, all references to "PCR test" or "PCR tests" are deleted and substituted with "molecular test" or "molecular tests" as the context requires.

(g) The numbering in section 3.9 is amended by deleting the second reference to subsection (a) and substituting it with subsection (b).

2. Record of Decision - CMOH Order 54-2021 is amended as follows:

(a) Section 2.1(c) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"COVID-19 test" means a Health Canada approved rapid screening test or a molecular test approved by Health Canada or the lab accreditation body of the jurisdiction in which the test is performed which:

i. a person has taken within the last 72 hours;

ii. clearly outlines the laboratory that completed the test, if applicable, the type of test, time of sample collection, and clear indication of negative result; and

iii. is not sourced from Alberta Health Services public COVID-19 testing system.

(b) Section 2.1(r) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"molecular test" means a nucleic acid amplification test to detect RNA of SARS-CoV-2 [e.g. Polymerase Chain Reaction (PCR), loop-mediated isothermal amplification (LAMP), etc.]. The test may be performed within an approved laboratory or at the point of care using a Health Canada approved test/instrument.

(c) By deleting all instances of "Record of Decision – CMOH Order 06-2021" and replacing them with "Record of Decision – CMOH Order 02-2022".

4. Record of Decision – CMOH Order 57-2021 is amended as follows:

(a) Section 2.1(c) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"confirmed case of COVID-19" means a COVID-19 infection where a person is:

i. asymptomatic and has taken two rapid antigen tests, not less than 24 hours of each other, and both rapid antigen tests indicate the person is positive for COVID-19;

ii. symptomatic and has taken one or more rapid antigen tests indicating the person is positive for COVID-19; OR

iii. asymptomatic or symptomatic and has taken a molecular test which indicates the person is positive for COVID-19.

(b) Section 2.1(l) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"molecular test" means a nucleic acid amplification test to detect RNA of SARS-CoV-2 [e.g. Polymerase Chain Reaction (PCR), loop-mediated isothermal amplification (LAMP), rapid molecular test, etc.]. The test may be performed within an approved laboratory or at point-of-care using a Health Canada approved test/instrument.

(c) Section 2.1(j) is deleted and substituted with the following:

"rapid antigen test" means a COVID-19 testing device that is listed in authorized medical devices for uses related to COVID-19: List of authorized testing devices by Health Canada published on the Government of Canada website and is approved for COVID-19 antigen testing, including but not limited to, symptomatic, asymptomatic, tests performed by a health care professional, tests performed by a lay-person, or self-testing.

(d) In Part 3, all references to "rapid screening test" or "rapid screening tests" are deleted and substituted with "rapid antigen test" or "rapid antigen tests" as the context requires.

(e) By deleting all instances of "Record of Decision – CMOH Order 06-2021" and replacing them with "Record of Decision – CMOH Order 02-2022".

This Order remains in effect until rescinded by the Chief Medical Officer of Health.

Signed on this 2nd day of February 2022.

Deena Hinshaw, MD
Chief Medical Officer of Health

TAB 5

February 8, 2022

Alberta COVID-19 Immunization Program Report

(Information as of February 7, 2022)

Executive Summary

- 8,384,070 doses have been administered to Albertans as of February 7 with 3,562,573 first doses, 3,308,279 second doses, 1,503,982 third doses, and 9,236 fourth doses.
- There were 6,474 doses administered yesterday. However, reporting has been adjusted to be 38,627 over the past 4 days due to retrospective changes.
- 85.80% of Albertans 5 years of age and up have received one dose, 79.83% have received two doses, 36.22% have received three doses, and 0.22% have received four doses.
- 89.92% of Albertans 12 years of age and up have received one dose, 86.26% have received two doses, 39.99% have received three doses, and 0.25% have received four doses.
- 90.25% of Albertans 18 years of age and up have received one dose, 86.65% have received two doses, 43.52% have received three doses, and 0.27% have received four doses.
- 80.60% of all Albertans have received one dose, 75.00% have received two doses, 34.03% have received three doses, and 0.21% have received four doses.
- There are 640,929 doses of Pfizer and 404,514 doses of Moderna in current inventory and we have an estimated 15,004 mRNA doses for ages 12+ booked to be administered in the next 7 days.
- There are 3,065 doses of Janssen in current inventory and we have an estimated 133 Janssen doses booked to be administered in the next 7 days.
- There are 1,096 doses of AstraZeneca in current inventory and we have an estimated 37 AstraZeneca doses booked to be administered in the next 7 days.
- There are 164,740 doses of Pfizer Pediatric 5 to 11 years in current inventory and we have an estimated 11,037 doses booked to be administered in the next 7 days.
- Alberta Health Services has the capacity to administer 70,000 doses a week and has the ability to scale up to 140,000 doses per week if demand dictates.
- There are 1,413 pharmacies offering vaccines.
- Alberta is expecting to receive 0 doses of vaccine the week starting February 7th.
- 78.71% of doses Alberta has received have been administered compared to 93.03% for Ontario, 92.21% for Quebec, and 90.69% for BC as of February 8 at 12:45 pm according to the COVID-19 Tracker Canada Data by Province.

Alberta

February 8, 2022

Summary

- 8,384,070 doses of COVID-19 vaccine have been administered in Alberta (189,683 doses per 100,000 population).

	Doses Received to Date	Administered in the Past Day	Administered to Date	Wastage	Expired	Current Inventory*	Remaining Doses to be Received the Week of February 7th	% of Doses Received that have been Administered
AstraZeneca	319,700	1	310,197	21,413	23,446	1,096	-	97.03%
Janssen	10,000	10	6,607	651	-	3,065	-	66.07%
Moderna	2,814,240	875	1,706,861	647,985	5,641	404,514	-	60.65%
Pfizer Pediatric 5 to 11	394,000	1,305	219,905	20,299	-	164,740	-	55.81%
Pfizer/BioNTech	7,056,075	4,283	6,095,009	440,778	2,299	640,929	-	86.38%
Total	10,594,015	6,474	8,338,579	1,131,126	31,386	1,214,344	-	78.71%
Federal / OOP			45,491
Total Administered			8,384,070

126,866 Moderna doses have been returned to Federal inventory.

Inventory, wastage and expired data sourced from AVI.

Doses Received to Date is reflective of doses per vial as described in the product monograph. A higher number of doses per vial are regularly able to be administered.*

As of January 19, 2022, all doses administered in First Nations are submitted directly into Imm/ARI and the data reconciliation resulted in the removal of approximately 20,000 doses.*

Dose Breakdown

	Administered to Date*	Dose 1	Dose 2	Dose 3	Dose 4
AstraZeneca	310,197	267,208	42,505	484	-
Janssen	6,607	6,561	31	15	-
Moderna	1,706,861	633,418	681,374	390,465	1,604
Pfizer Pediatric 5 to 11	219,905	162,179	57,710	15	1
Pfizer/BioNTech	6,095,009	2,461,493	2,512,891	1,112,994	7,631
Total	8,338,579	3,530,859	3,294,511	1,503,973	9,236
Federal / OOP	45,491	31,714	13,768	9	-
Total Administered	8,384,070	3,562,573	3,308,279	1,503,982	9,236

As of January 19, 2022, all doses administered in First Nations are submitted directly into Imm/ARI and the data reconciliation resulted in the removal of approximately 20,000 doses.

As of January 20, 2022, immunocompromised Albertans are eligible to receive a 4th dose at least 5 months following their 3rd dose.*

Alberta

February 8, 2022

Upcoming Bookings by Dose

All Doses	Bookings in Next 7 Days	Bookings 8 to 14 Days	Bookings 15 to 28 Days	Total Bookings Next 28 Days
1st Dose Bookings	1,692	632	254	2,578
2nd Dose Bookings	10,706	5,330	2,386	18,422
3rd & 4th Dose Bookings	13,813	5,673	5,260	24,746
Total Bookings	26,211	11,635	7,900	45,746
Projected Total Immunizations	8,410,281	8,421,916	8,429,816	8,429,816

Upcoming Bookings by Vaccine Type

All Doses	Bookings in Next 7 Days	Bookings 8 to 14 Days	Bookings 15 to 28 Days	Total Bookings Next 28 Days
AstraZeneca Bookings	37	6	1	44
Janssen Bookings	133	16	22	171
Moderna Bookings	1,236	480	290	2,006
Pfizer Pediatric 5 to 11	11,037	5,520	2,276	18,833
Pfizer/BioNTech	13,768	5,613	5,311	24,692
Total Bookings	26,211	11,635	7,900	45,746

Alberta

February 8, 2022

Reason for Additional Doses Administered

	Age Group	Zone	Dose 3	% with 3 Doses	Dose 4	% with 4 Doses	Population
Travel	NA	NA	69,289	30.93%	2,211	0.99%	224,000
Congregate Living Settings (e.g.LTC/DSL residents)	NA	NA	45,158	77.86%	46	0.08%	58,000
Health Care Workers (excluding LTC/DSL)	NA	NA	52,382	NA	45	NA	NA
Other risks*	NA	NA	1,337,160	NA	6,934	NA	NA
Albertans (18+)	18+	Alberta	1,499,063	43.52%	-	-	3,444,862
Albertans (18+)	18+	South Zone	95,702	40.07%	-	-	238,814
Albertans (18+)	18+	Calgary Zone	628,074	46.80%	-	-	1,342,134
Albertans (18+)	18+	Central Zone	134,132	36.11%	-	-	371,429
Albertans (18+)	18+	Edmonton Zone	530,296	46.88%	-	-	1,131,071
Albertans (18+)	18+	North Zone	109,835	30.40%	-	-	361,331
Albertans (18+)	18+	Unknown	1,024	NA	-	-	-
First Nations (18+)	18+	Alberta	25,859	22.60%	-	-	114,408

The population of 224,000 is the approximate number of Albertans that received a mixed vaccine series. It is unknown how many will want a third dose for travel purposes.

 Includes Albertans who are immunocompromised and those who received a third dose but their eligibility cannot be determined therefore there is no known population. The population of immunocompromised is approximately 80,000.*

First Nations population in this chart does not include Métis or Inuit people.*

As of January 20, 2022, immunocompromised Albertans are eligible to receive a 4th dose at least 5 months following their 3rd dose.

Alberta

February 8, 2022

Immunization by Age Group

Age Group	Population	One Dose	% of Population with 1 dose	Two Doses	% of Population with 2 Doses	Three Doses	% of Population with 3 Doses	Four Doses	% of Population with 4 Doses	Total Administered
00-04	267,791	0	0.00%	0	0.00%	0	0.00%	0	0.00%	0
05-11	391,430	180,764	46.18%	70,718	18.07%	25	0.01%	1	0.00%	251,508
12-14	162,518	141,094	86.82%	133,257	82.00%	1,580	0.97%	4	0.00%	275,935
15-19	256,700	222,721	86.76%	211,744	82.49%	26,976	10.51%	14	0.01%	461,284
20-24	276,916	238,383	86.08%	223,598	80.75%	59,170	21.37%	44	0.02%	520,754
25-29	314,340	260,375	82.83%	245,002	77.94%	70,717	22.50%	63	0.02%	575,566
30-34	356,224	299,032	83.94%	284,402	79.84%	94,305	26.47%	107	0.03%	676,977
35-39	359,135	312,102	86.90%	299,862	83.50%	110,982	30.90%	121	0.03%	722,126
40-44	319,735	283,634	88.71%	275,677	86.22%	115,808	36.22%	637	0.20%	674,887
45-49	288,613	257,042	89.06%	249,777	86.54%	116,488	40.36%	735	0.25%	623,307
50-54	266,607	242,367	90.91%	235,867	88.47%	125,248	46.98%	716	0.27%	603,594
55-59	284,313	254,861	89.64%	246,476	86.69%	145,027	51.01%	1,259	0.44%	647,122
60-64	264,324	248,877	94.16%	242,026	91.56%	162,721	61.56%	4,477	1.69%	657,733
65-69	209,995	204,175	97.23%	200,536	95.50%	152,158	72.46%	424	0.20%	557,063
70-74	157,696	154,397	97.91%	154,010	97.66%	122,351	77.59%	283	0.18%	430,910
75-79	103,045	98,597	95.68%	97,507	94.63%	86,282	83.73%	189	0.18%	282,495
80-84	68,661	64,771	94.33%	64,045	93.28%	55,849	81.34%	92	0.13%	184,745
85-89	44,188	41,183	93.20%	40,660	92.02%	35,351	80.00%	44	0.10%	117,225
90+	27,809	26,051	93.68%	25,695	92.40%	22,949	82.52%	26	0.09%	74,717
Unknown*	0	32,147	NA	13,974	NA	2	NA	0	NA	46,122
18+	3,444,862	3,108,843	90.25%	2,985,017	86.65%	1,499,063	43.52%	9,229	0.27%	7,595,592
12+	3,760,818	3,381,809	89.92%	3,244,115	86.26%	1,503,964	39.99%	9,235	0.25%	8,132,562
5+	4,152,248	3,562,573	85.80%	3,314,833	79.83%	1,503,989	36.22%	9,236	0.22%	8,384,070
ALL	4,420,039	3,562,573	80.60%	3,314,833	75.00%	1,503,989	34.03%	9,236	0.21%	8,384,070

Note: Due to retrospective changes in the live database, total administered may not reconcile with breakdown of first, second, third and fourth doses.

Includes doses notified as administered by FNIHB, but not yet entered onto Imm/ARI system.*

Total Administered = At Least 1 Dose + Second Doses + Third Doses + Fourth Doses. A small number of records exist in ImmARI where only a second dose has been recorded (with no corresponding first dose record). For the purpose of this report, first doses for these records are assumed.*

As of January 19, 2022, all doses administered in First Nations are submitted directly into Imm/ARI and the data reconciliation resulted in the removal of approximately 20,000 doses.*

* Individuals who received a first dose in one age category may cross into another age category for a second or additional dose.*

Albertans who have received one dose of Janssen are also included in the number of Albertans with two doses.

Third dose coverage (this table) differs from third doses administered (table 2) because some individuals received Janssen and then Moderna.

Alberta

Percentage of Albertans by Vaccination Status

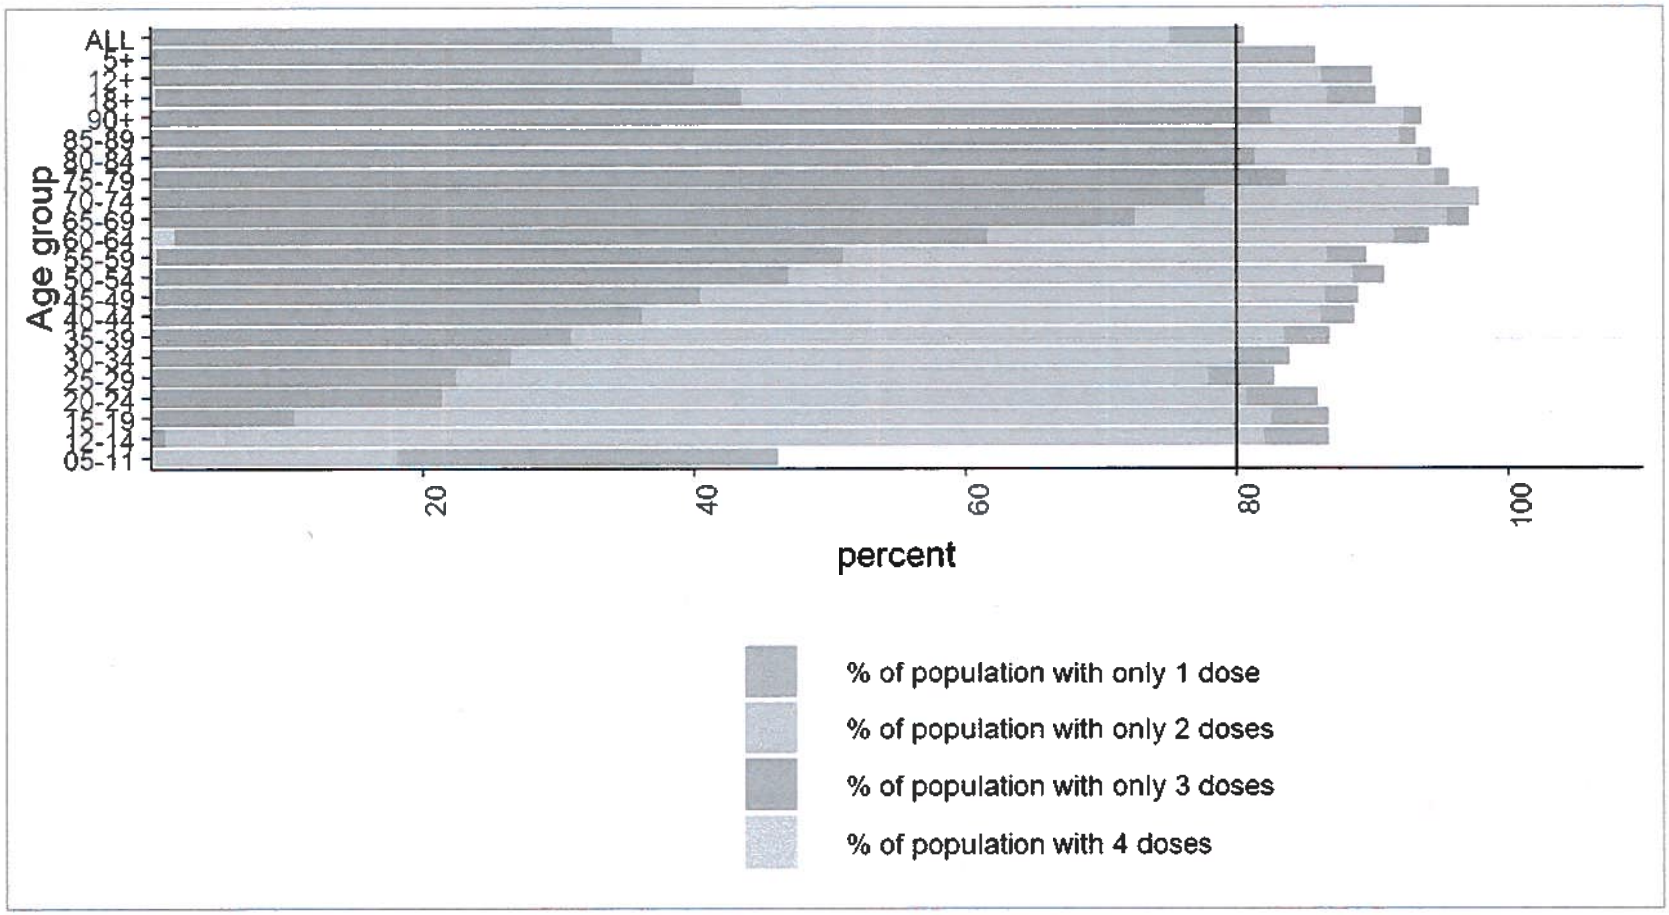

Figure 1: Percent of Albertans who received one, two, three or four doses of COVID-19 vaccine by age group.

TAB 6

Premier's Office Staff
February 7, 2022

TO: Premier Kenney

SUBJECT: Student Masking in Schools

CONTENTS & HIGHLIGHTS:

1. Background on COVID-19 & School-Aged Children
2. Evidence Summary
    - There is insufficient direct evidence of the effectiveness of face masks in reducing COVID-19 transmission in education settings.
    - Existing research supporting mask use in schools has limitations that make the pool of evidence weak and the benefits of masking children unclear.
3. Harmful Effects of Mask Wearing on Children
    - Masks can disrupt learning and interfere with children's social, emotional, and speech development by impairing verbal and non-verbal communication, emotional signaling, and facial recognition.
4. Jurisdictional Scan
    - The United Kingdom, Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Norway, and the Netherlands do not require children under the age of 12 to wear masks.
    - Florida, Oklahoma, Texas, and Utah in the United States have banned mask mandates in schools.

BACKGROUND ON COVID-19 & SCHOOL-AGED CHILDREN:

- Children and young people are at very low risk of severe outcomes from COVID infection.
    - In Alberta, case hospitalization, ICU, and death rates per 100 cases for school-aged children (ages 5 to 19[1]) are 0.47, 0.07, and 0.004, respectively.
    - An Albertan aged 5 to 19 infected with COVID is about 223 times less likely to die from COVID than an Albertan aged 20+.
- There is a lower risk of hospitalization among Omicron cases in school-aged children compared to Delta, according to preliminary analysis by the UK Health Security Agency.
- In Alberta:
    - 46.1% of 5- to 11-year-olds received one dose of COVID vaccine.
    - 86.8% of 12- to 19-year-olds received one dose, 82.2% received two doses.

EVIDENCE SUMMARY:

- A 2022 evidence summary by the UK Department for Education (DfE) found that the evidence for masking students in schools to reduce the spread of COVID is "not conclusive".
    - Existing studies are largely observational therefore prone to bias, and results from studies are "mixed".
    - The DfE also reported results from its own study on masks in schools showing no statistically significant impact on student absences.
    - The DfE ultimately concluded that the evidence taken together is in favour of masking in schools, though it should be noted that this summary was published to support the UK government's mask mandate in secondary schools, a policy that has since been reversed.
- A 2022 article by the Brownstone Institute (a US think tank opposed to COVID measures) found that the daily new cases and hospitalization rates among children in states with and without school mask mandates are nearly identical.
- A 2021 study from Spain showed that the use of masks in schools for students was not associated with a large effect in slowing COVID transmission.
    - Transmission rate did not drop sharply among children subject to the masking requirement (ages 6+).
- A 2021 CDC study of elementary schools in Georgia found that masking teachers was associated with a statistically significant decrease in COVID transmission, but masking students was not.
- Non-peer-reviewed/non-academic evidence:
    - A 2021 study from Brown University found no correlation between student cases and mask mandates in schools in New York, Massachusetts, and Florida.
    - Davidson and Williamson, two neighbouring counties in Tennessee with similar vaccination rates, had similar fall 2021 case-rate trends in their school-age populations despite one county having a mask mandate and the other a mask opt-out option.

[1] Including 19-year-olds as data for ages 5 to 18 is not yet available.

    - Mask-optional school districts in Cass County, North Dakota had lower prevalence of COVID-19 cases among students last fall than districts with mask mandates.

Research supporting the use of masks in schools has limitations that make the pool of evidence weak and the benefits of masking children unclear.

- Lack of study controls – A 2021 Arizona study oft-cited by the CDC to support its recommendation of masking all kids aged 2 and older has been disputed by experts. The study failed to control for exposure times across schools and most importantly the vaccination status of staff or students.
- Failure to isolate the impact of masks – Studies in North Carolina, Utah, Wisconsin, and Missouri cited by the CDC failed to isolate the impact of masks and did not make comparisons with schools that did not require masks.
    - Schools often "layer" masking with other measures to reduce the spread of COVID, making it challenging to measure the independent impact of mask-wearing.
- Not statistically significant – Studies that do show a reduction in COVID transmission with masks in school produced results that were not statistically significant.
- Lack of randomized controlled trials ("RCTs") – Studies have been largely observational and "provide less direct evidence of the effectiveness of face coverings than RCTs."
- Not specific to students or schools – A 2021 randomized controlled trial conducted in Bangladesh reported that surgical masks were effective at reducing rates of symptomatic COVID infection, but it did not include children in the study, leading to some experts questioning the applicability of this research in education settings.
    - The same criticism applies for studies that showed universal masking (not masking in schools) reduces COVID transmission.

HARMFUL EFFECTS OF MASK WEARING ON CHILDREN:

- Masks impair verbal and non-verbal communication between teachers and students.
    - It can be harder to hear and understand speech with masks.
    - In a survey conducted by the UK DfE, 80% of students reported that wearing a mask made it difficult to communicate, and 55% felt it made learning more difficult. 94% of school leaders and teachers reported that masking made communication more difficult.
    - Young children need to see full faces to learn language and identify emotions.
    - Masks impair face recognition and identification.
    - Masks can be especially detrimental to students with hearing impairments.
- Masks block emotional signaling between teachers and students.
    - Emotions are a major driver of group cohesion.

- Masks hinder social perception and interfere with social interaction, emotional bonding, and emotional development.
- Physical side effects of mask use include headaches, dermatitis with rashes and redness, and discomfort.
  - N95 or KN95 masks can be uncomfortable for children to wear (N95s are not sized for children) and "hinder communication more than other types of masks."

JURISDICTIONAL SCAN:

- World Health Organization
  - Advises against masks for kids under the age of 6
  - Advises only selectively for kids between the ages of 6 and 11
- United Kingdom & Europe
  - The European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control
    - Advises against masks for any children in primary school
  - United Kingdom:
    - No face coverings needed in classrooms and school communal areas
    - Masks have never been advised for children under the age of 11
  - Denmark:
    - Masking rules generally do not apply to children under the age of 12
  - Sweden:
    - The use of face masks is not required for students while at school
  - Finland
    - Masking rules do not apply to children under the age of 12
  - Norway:
    - Masking rules do not apply to children under the age of 12
    - The use of face masks is not required for students while at school
  - Netherlands:
    - Masking rules do not apply to children under the age of 12
- United States:
  - The American Federation of Teachers "supports a path away from school mask mandates."
  - Four states banned mask mandates in schools: Florida, Oklahoma, Texas and Utah.
    - Six additional states have bans that are either blocked, suspended, or not being enforced: Arizona, Arkansas, Iowa, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia.
  - 14 states plus the District of Columbia require masks in schools.

TAB 7

COVID-19 – COVID and Schools

Questions

- Outbreaks in schools with and without mask mandates
- Provide Alberta school data comparing last year and this year

Overall Themes

- School boards without mask mandates have 3 times more outbreaks in their schools, on average
  - Case and hospitalization rates per 100,000 population lower in areas where mask mandates are required in both children (5-11 year old) and adults (30-59 years old)
  - Hospitalization rates per 100,000 population are lower in adults (30-59 years old) in areas with mask mandates
- The outbreak in Westglen school in Edmonton (Fall 2021) is an example that illustrate that a school outbreak can lead to increased spread within the local community
- Hospitalization rate per 100,000 population are higher (<10 years old) and comparable (10-19 years old) in the fifth wave compared to other waves

Analysis: Masks Mandates

School boards without mask mandates had 3 times more outbreaks in their schools, on average

Table 1. Top 10 school Boards with the highest proportion of outbreaks in their schools as of Sept 27, 2021

School Board	Municipality	N Schools	N Outbreaks	Percent of schools with outbreaks (%)*	Mask mandate at start of school?
The Lakeland Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Bonnyville	8	6	75%	N
The Wild Rose School Division	Rocky Mountain House	17	11	65%	N
The Grande Prairie School Division	Grande Prairie	20	11	55%	N

Alberta

The Grande Prairie Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Grande Prairie	13	7	54%	N
The High Prairie School Division	High Prairie	13	6	46%	N
The Parkland School Division	Stony Plain	25	11	44%	N
The Holy Family Catholic Separate School Division	Peace River	9	4	44%	N
The Black Gold School Division	Nisku	31	11	35%	N
The Sturgeon School Division	Morinville	17	6	35%	N
The St. Thomas Aquinas Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Leduc	12	4	33%	N

* This is the same as the rate of outbreaks per 100 schools

Table 2. Schools with the 10 lowest proportions of outbreaks in their schools as of Sept 27, 2021

School Board	Municipality & Area	N Schools	N Outbreaks	Percent of schools with outbreaks (%)*	Mask mandate at start of school?
The Greater St. Albert Roman Catholic Separate School Division	St. Albert	18	1	6%	Yes
The Northland School Division	Peace River	21	1	5%	Yes
The Edmonton School Division	Edmonton	232	12	5%	Yes
The Calgary School Division	Calgary	256	11	4%	Yes
The Edmonton Catholic Separate School Division	Edmonton	103	3	3%	Yes
The Rocky View School Division	Airdrie	52	1	2%	N
The Calgary Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Calgary	120	1	1%	Yes
The Wetaskiwin School Division	Wetaskiwin	22	0	0	N
The Aspen View School Division	Athabasca	18	0	0	N
The Canadian Rockies School Division	Canmore	8	0	0	Yes

* This is the same as the rate of outbreaks per 100 schools

Alberta

Table 3. Average percent of outbreaks per school board, by mask mandate status

Mask mandate at start of school?	Average percent of outbreaks per school board
Implemented after 1st week	19.7
N	23.4
Y	7.3

A comparison of geographies with and without mask mandates

Method:

- "Masks Required" is defined as communities where 75% of schools required masks from the start of the school year (excludes fancophone and private schools).
- "Other" is defined as communities that did not meet the 75% cut-off and/or do not require mask mandates. Note: small towns that had 1 of each public school, separate school, and private school would not meet the 75% cut-off
- Limitations
    - Did not account for community vaccine coverage. This may impact hospitalization rate by communities in schools that have and do not have mask mandates.
    - Mask mandates were not available for all boards.

Results:

- Case and hospitalization rates per 100,000 population lower in areas where mask mandates are required in both children (5-11 year old) and adults (30-59 years old) (See Figure 1)
- Hospitalization rates per 100,000 population are lower in adults (30-59 years old) in areas with mask mandates (See Figure 1)

Alberta

COVID-19 – COVID and Schools

Figure 1. Rate of COVID-19 cases (Left) and hospitalization rates (right) per 100,000 population in children, 5-11 years old (top) and adults, 30-59 years old (bottom) by mask mandates in school.

NOTE: this work was done October 2021, prior to vaccine availability for 5-11 year olds. The 30-59 year olds were selected based on potential impacts on households.

Alberta

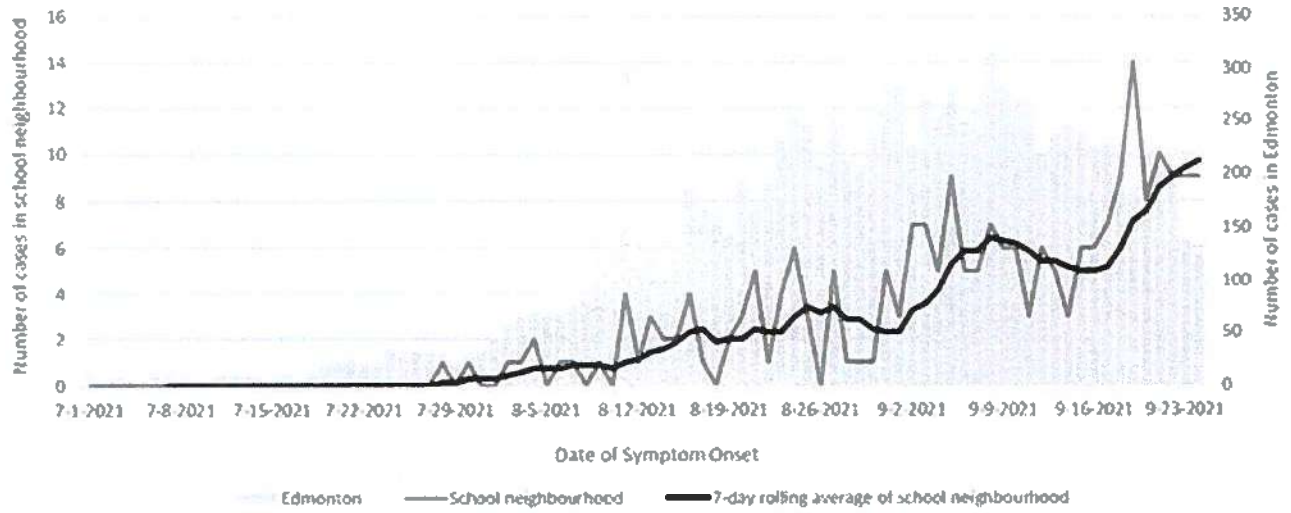
Analysis: Westglen School

September 28, 2021

- 71 cases
  - 1 staff member, 70 students
    - Staff member (music teacher) was not immunized
    - Students spread roughly evenly across grades 1-6
  - The outbreak opened Sept 23rd – they had reported 10% absenteeism and a positive case on Mon Sept 20th
    - Symptomatic children continued to attend school until they moved to online learning Sept 24th.
  - Even young children likely transmitted to their families
    - As of Sept 26th, 14 families had additional cases in their families, the index case (ie earliest onset date) was an adult only once (7%).
      - 7 (50%) - index case was a child age 5-9
      - 6 (43%) – index was a child age 10-12
  - This outbreak has had a significant effect on case counts in the neighbourhood; while cases in Edmonton were stabilizing and decreasing, cases in the T5M postal code reversed trend, increasing significantly after the Westglen outbreak (See Figure 2)
    - 66/94 (70%) of all cases with the T5M postal code reported between Sept 17-26 are linked to the outbreak or are family members of outbreak cases.

Alberta

Figure 2. Number of cases in the neighbourhood surrounding the school and the City of Edmonton



Analysis: Hospitalizations

Definition of waves:

Third Wave: Feb 6, 2021 to July 9, 2021
Fourth Wave: July 10, 2021 to December 15, 2021
Fifth Wave: December 16, 2021 - Current

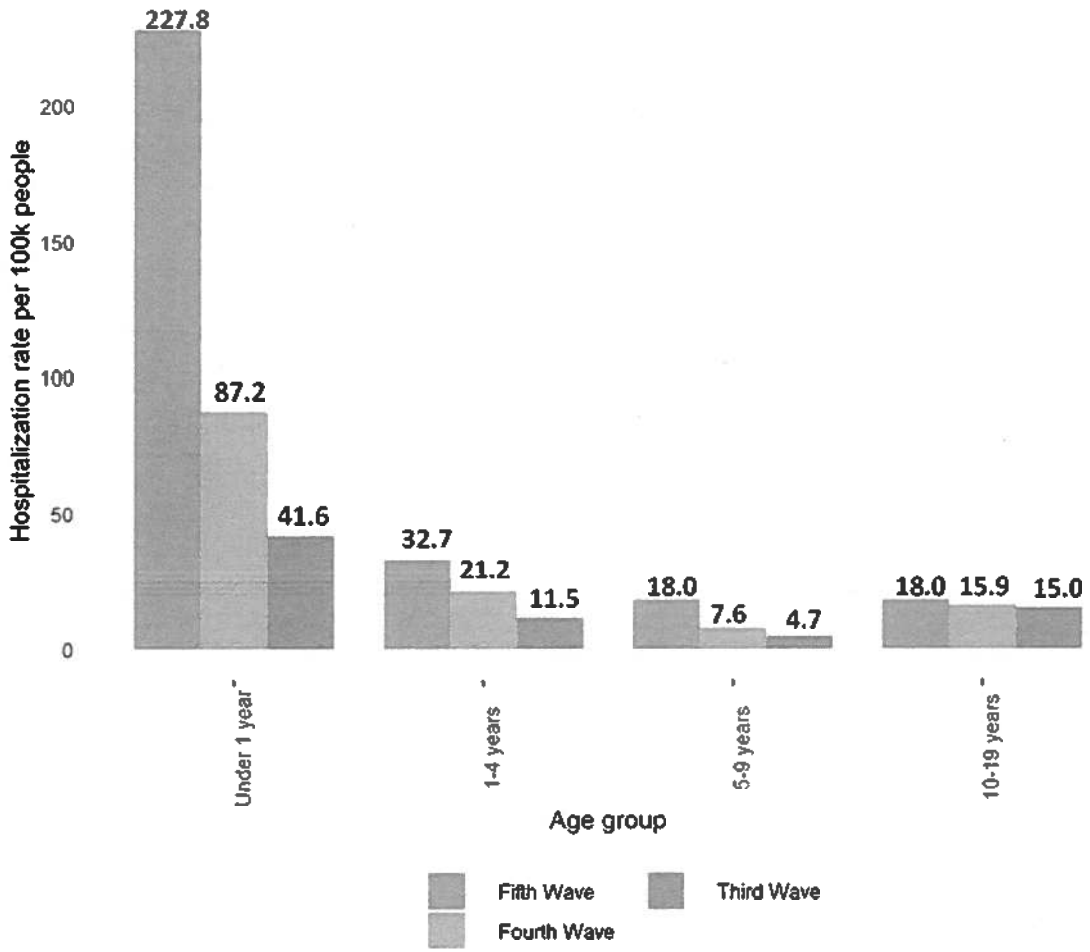
Summary:

- Hospitalization rate per 100,000 population are higher (<10 years old) and comparable (10-19 years old) in the fifth wave compared to other waves

Alberta

COVID-19 – COVID and Schools

Figure 3. Hospitalization Rate per 100,000 population comparison across wave three to five among people under 20 years old



Alberta

TAB 8

From: Scott Fullmer <Scott.Fullmer@gov.ab.ca>
Sent: Monday, February 07, 2022 2:13 PM
To: Mark Hicks; Kait Wolfert; Mugove Manjengwa; Deena Hinshaw; Fiona Cavanagh; Elena Kubatka-Willms; Alex Alexander
Subject: FW: School Masking Evidence Summary

Hello everyone, we went back through the evidence on school transmission and found the new material on how effective in schools some of the mitigation measures have been in the literature. Let me know if this is what your looking for.

Summary

1. According to the research literature, wearing masks can be effective in contributing to reducing transmission of COVID-19 in public and community settings. This is informed by a range of research, including randomised control trials, contact tracing studies, and observational studies.
2. The evidence for protection from masks, in schools is less direct—and it might be small but taken together support the conclusion that face coverings in schools can contribute as part of a host of measures to reduce transmission. What data do exist have been interpreted into guidance in many different ways. The World Health Organization, for example, does not recommend masks for children under age 6. The European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control recommends against the use of masks for any children in primary school. In North America masking in schools was part of public health guidelines as schools returned after the first and second waves.
3. Studies find that transmission in schools has remained limited and comparable to the wider community under a wide range of prevention measures such as masking, cohorting, cancelling higher-risk activities, distancing, hygiene protocols, reduced class size and enhanced ventilation.
4. The studies available were performed prior to the emergence of the Omicron VOC.

Systematic Reviews of Multiple Measures

1. The evergreen MacMaster University literature review (49 studies) (August 2021) reports wide variability in policies in place across different jurisdictions limiting the ability to evaluate the impact of specific measures or make best practice recommendations for daycare or school settings due to variability in the combination of measures implemented. However, implementation of infection control measures is critically important to reducing transmission, especially when community transmission rates are high.
    - There is evidence that wearing masks, maintaining at least 3ft of distance (especially amongst staff), restricting entry to the school to others, cancelling extracurriculars, introducing outdoor instruction, and daily symptom screening reduce the number of cases within schools;
    - There are inconsistent findings for associations between ventilation, and class size.
    - Hybrid or part-time in-person learning appears to be associated with higher incidence compared to full-time in-person.
2. In July 2021, European Centre for Disease Control and Prevention published its second update to its review of COVID-19 in children and the role of school settings in transmission. The review examined case-based epidemiological surveillance analysis from The European Surveillance System, grey, pre-print and peer reviewed scientific literature, focusing on studies published in 2021; and modelling of the effects of closing schools on community transmission based on data from the ECDC-Joint Research Centre (JRC) Response Measures Database.
    - Similar to the literature review produced by Macmaster University, this report that implementing multiple physical distancing and hygiene measures can significantly reduce the possibility of transmission within schools (high confidence), including

- De-densification (classroom distancing, staggered arrival times, cancellation of certain indoor activities, especially among other students)
- Hygiene measures (handwashing, respiratory etiquette, cleaning, ventilation, and face masks for certain age groups).
- Timely testing and isolation or quarantine of symptomatic cases is important. Rapid antigen tests should be considered

3. The latest Cochrane literature review examined evidence is up to December 2020 on which measures implemented in the school setting allow schools to safely reopen, stay open, or both, during the COVID-19 pandemic. The review suggests that many measures implemented in the school setting can have positive impacts on the transmission of SARS-CoV-2, and on healthcare utilisation outcomes related to COVID-19.
    - Measures reducing the opportunity for contacts: by reducing the number of students in a class or a school, opening certain school types only (for example primary schools) or by creating a schedule by which students attend school on different days or in different weeks, the face-to-face contact between students can be reduced.
        - All 23 studies showed reductions in the spread of the virus that causes COVID-19 and the use of the healthcare system. Some studies also showed a reduction in the number of days spent in school due to the intervention.
    - Measures making contacts safer: by putting measures in place such as face masks, improving ventilation by opening windows or using air purifiers, cleaning, handwashing, or modifying activities like sports or music, contacts can be made safer.
        - Five (of 11) of these studies combined multiple measures, which means we cannot see which specific measures worked and which did not. Most studies showed reductions in the spread of the virus that causes COVID-19; some studies, however, showed mixed or no effects.
    - Surveillance and response measures: screening for symptoms or testing sick or potentially sick students, or teachers, or both, and putting them into isolation (for sick people) or quarantine (for potentially sick people).
        - Twelve (of 13) studies focused on mass testing and isolation measures, while two looked specifically at symptom-based screening and isolation. Most studies showed results in favour of the intervention, however some showed mixed or no effects.
    - Multicomponent measures: measures from categories 1, 2 and 3 are combined.
        - Three studies assessed physical distancing, modification of activities, cancellation of sports or music classes, testing, exemption of high-risk students, handwashing, and face masks. Most studies showed reduced transmission of the virus that causes COVID-19, however some showed mixed or no effects.

Transmission Compared to the Community

- These 4 studies in Vancouver, Georgia, and Italy were some of the earlier studies in the first/second wave that found that students were less of a risk for secondary infections compared to teachers however, teachers rates of infection were no higher than other members of the community in occupations outside the home.
    - Vancouver (Oct 2020-May 2021) Goldfarb et al. seroprevelance study showed no detectable increase in SARS-CoV-2 infections in school staff working in Vancouver public schools following a period of widespread community transmission compared to the community. These findings corroborate claims that, with appropriate mitigation strategies in place, in-person schooling is not associated with significantly higher risk for school staff.
        - Of the 1,556 school staff who had their blood sample tested, 2.3% tested positive for antibodies. This percentage was similar to the number of infections in a reference group of blood donors matched by age, sex and area of residence.
        - NPIs: (Physical distancing, Enhanced cleaning, Enhanced ventilation, Cohorts, Screening (staff and students), Regular surface cleaning, Unidirectional flow of students, Masks (not mandatory until Feb 2021 for grades 6-12 and for grades 4-12 in Apr 2021), Hand hygiene (hand sanitizer in classrooms and common areas), Quarantine policies, Staggered recess and lunch breaks)

- Georgia CDC Study –USA (Dec 2020-Jan 2021) Gettings, J.R., et al. found that masking teachers was associated with a statistically significant decrease in COVID transmission, but masking students was not.
    - NPI's: (enhanced cleaning, enhanced ventilation, hand hygiene, masks – except during sports, and physical distancing)
    - Highest Secondary Attack Rates were:
        - Indoor High-contact sports settings - 23.8%
        - staff meetings/lunches - 18.2%
        - Elementary school classrooms 9.5%
    - Lowest Secondary Attack Rates:
        - Asymptomatic Students – 2.3%
        - Elementary Students – 2.7%
    - The SAR was higher for staff 13.1% vs student index cases 5.8% and for symptomatic 10.9% vs asymptomatic index cases 3.0
    - In school settings, J. Gettings et al. point out that in addition to masking, schools that improved ventilation through dilution methods alone, COVID-19 incidence was 35% lower, whereas in schools that combined dilution methods with filtration, incidence was 48% lower.
- Italy (Sept 30 2020-Feb 2021) Gandini et al. performed a cross-sectional and prospective cohort study in Italy during the second COVID-19 wave (from September 30, 2020 until at least February 28, 2021. Incidence and positivity were lower amongst elementary and middle school students compared to general population; incidence was higher in high school students in 3 of 19 regions. Incidence in teachers was no different from other occupations after adjusting for age.
    - NPI's: (Ban on sports and music, Frequent ventilation, Hand hygiene, Masks (staff, high school students), Negative test following exposure (some schools), Physical distancing (1m between seats), Reduced school hours, Temperature check, Unidirectional flow of students)
- Georgia – USA (Dec 2020-Jan 2021) J. A. W. Gold et al. examined incidence in a Georgia school district during December 1, 2020–January 22, 2021 identified nine clusters of COVID-19 cases involving 13 educators and 32 students at six elementary schools. Two clusters involved probable educator-to-educator transmission that was followed by educator-to-student transmission in classrooms and resulted in approximately one half (15 of 31) of school-associated cases. Preventing SARS-CoV-2 infections through multifaceted school mitigation measures and COVID-19 vaccination of educators is a critical component of preventing in-school transmission.
    - NPI's: (Masks - except while eating, Plastic dividers on desks but students sat less than 3 feet apart)

Impact of Multiple Mitigation Measures

4. These observational studies that assess the use of multiple interventions in schools and are a good example of the kinds of studies that show mixed results (as was noted in the systematic reviews)
    - Utah – USA (Dec 2020-Jan 2021) R. B. Hershow et al. reviewed K-6 schools opening in Salt Lake County, Utah, from Dec 3 – Jan 21, 2021. Despite high community incidence and an inability to space students' classroom seats ≥6 ft apart, this investigation found low SARS-CoV-2 transmission and no school-related outbreaks in 20 Salt Lake County elementary schools with high student mask use and implementation of multiple strategies to limit transmission.
        - NPIs: (6ft distance, High mask use (86%), 81% in-person learning, Plexiglass barriers for teachers, Staggered mealtimes)
        - Other studies, similar to the Utah in North Carolina, Wisconsin, and Missouri, isolated the impact of masks specifically, but showed that taken together mitigation strategies reduced transmission.
    - Florida, New York, Mass – USA (2020-21) E. Oster et al reported on the correlation of mitigation practices with staff and student COVID-19 case rates in Florida, New York, and Massachusetts during the 2020-2021 school year focusing on student density, ventilation upgrades, and masking. Ventilation upgrades are correlated with lower rates in Florida but not in New York. Did not find any correlations with mask mandates. All rates are lower in the spring, after teacher vaccination is underway.

- NPI's Varied by state: (Cohorts, Enhanced ventilation, Masks, Reduced student density, Physical distancing (6 ft.), Symptom screening, Temperature checks)

- USA All States (Dec 2020-Feb 2021) J. Lessler et al. For every additional measure implemented there was a decrease in odds of a positive test (adjusted OR: 0.93, 95% CI=0.92,0.94); symptoms screening was associated with the greatest risk reduction. When 7 or more IPAC measures were implemented, risk largely disappeared (with a complete absence of risk with 10 or more IPAC measures). Among those reporting 7 or more mitigation measures, 80% reported student/teacher mask mandates, restricted entry, desk spacing and no supply sharing. Outdoor instruction, restricted entry, no extracurriculars, and daily symptom screening were associated with significant risk reductions.
  - NPI's : (Cancelled extracurriculars, Closed common spaces (playgrounds, cafeterias), Cohorting, Masks, Physical distancing (extra space, separators between desks), Reduced class size, Restricted entry, Symptom screening)
- A Science Magazine Summary on in-person schooling concludes that in-person schooling carries with it increased COVID-19 risk to household members; but also evidence that common, low cost, mitigation measures can reduce this risk
  - School-based mitigation measures are associated with significant reductions in risk, particularly daily symptoms screens, teacher masking, and closure of extra-curricular activities.
  - A positive association between in-person schooling and COVID-19 outcomes persists at low levels of mitigation, but when seven or more mitigation measures are reported, a significant relationship is no longer observed.
    - Regression treating each individual mitigation measure as having an independent effect shows that daily symptom screening is clearly associated with greater risk reductions than the average measure with some evidence that teacher mask mandates and cancelling extra-curricular activities are also associated with larger reductions than average.
    - In contrast, closing cafeterias, playgrounds and use of desk shields are associated with lower risk reductions (or even risk increases); however this may reflect saturation effects as these are typically reported along with a high number of other measures. Notably, part-time in-person schooling is not associated with a decrease in the risk of COVID-19-related outcomes compared to full-time in-person schooling after accounting for other mitigation measures.

A proportion with outcome
0.075
0.050
0.025
0.000
0
5 10 num. interventions

B odds ratio
1.0
0.7 0.6
student masking teacher masking restricted entry extra space no supply sharing same students reduced class size
daily symptom screen same teacher no extracurricular closed cafe desk shields closed play outdoor instruction part time
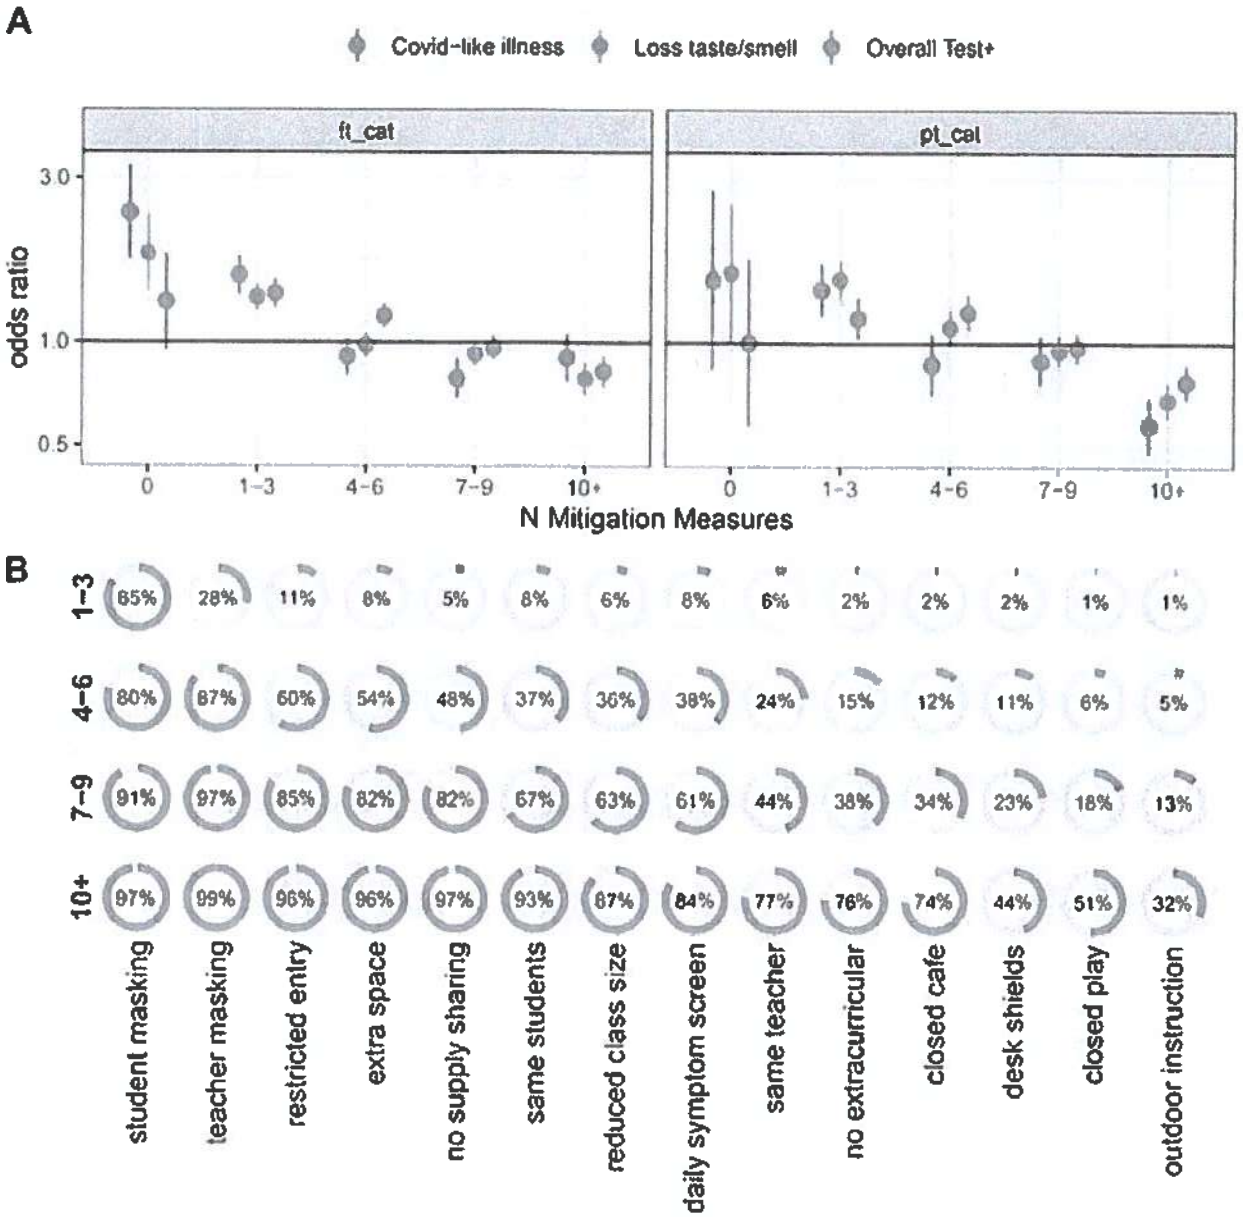
Covid like illness
Loss taste/smell
Test+



Evidence on Masking Alone

- In community settings the conclusion on the effectiveness of face coverings to reduce transmission of COVID-19 in community settings is informed by a range of research, including transferable insight from other contagious diseases, modelling studies, laboratory experiments, contact tracing studies, and observational studies. The addition of randomised control trials and substantially more individual-level observational studies has increased the strength of the conclusions and strengthens the evidence for the effectiveness of face coverings in reducing the spread of COVID-19 in the community, through source control, wearer protection, and universal masking.
- There are only 2 RCTs that have been done during the pandemic on masking (1 non-peer-reviewed report, both rated as medium quality) provided evidence on the effectiveness of face coverings to reduce transmission of COVID-19, for universal masking (Bangladesh) and 1 for wearer protection (Denmark).[1]
    - Denmark RCT in Spring 2020 (H. Bundgaard et al.) The first was conducted in Denmark in the spring of 2020 and found no significant effect of masks on reducing COVID-19 transmission
        - Adults who spent 3 hours or more a day outside the home and did not wear a face covering while at work were randomised either to wearing study-provided surgical masks outside the home or no intervention.

        - There was a small, non-significant reduction in COVID-19 infections reported in the group that wore surgical masks: 42 of 2,392 participants (1.8%) developed COVID-19 in the intervention group compared with 53 of 2,470 participants (2.1%) in the control group.
        - The study was inconclusive, reporting a non-significant reduction in COVID-19 infections from wearer protection using surgical masks, but the results lacked precision due to an insufficiently large sample size and low prevalence in the study population, so few participants developed COVID-19.
    - Bangladesh RCT in 2021 (J. Abaluck et al.) - reported that surgical masks (but not cloth) were modestly effective at reducing rates of symptomatic infection. However, neither of these studies included children, let alone vaccinated children.
        - Randomized trial involving nearly 350,000 people across rural Bangladesh. The study's authors found that surgical masks — but not cloth masks — reduced transmission of SARS-CoV-2 in villages where the research team distributed face masks and promoted their use.
        - The study linked surgical masks with an 11% drop in risk, compared with a 5% drop for cloth. That finding was reinforced by laboratory experiments whose results are summarized in the same preprint. The data show that even after 10 washes, surgical masks filter out 76% of small particles capable of airborne transmission of SARS-CoV-2, says Mushfiq Mobarak, an economist at Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut, and a co-author of the study. By contrast, the team found that 3-layered cloth masks had a filtration efficiency of only 37% before washing or use.
- The UK PHE has produced two literature reviews on masking
    - In community they assembled a committee to evaluate this evidence from their most recent literature review on face coverings in community included 25 studies (including 9 preprints and 2 non-peer reviewed reports): 2 randomised controlled trials (RCTs) and 23 observational studies. The evidence predominantly suggests that face coverings reduce the spread of COVID-19 in the community.
        - Respiratory Evidence Panel: evidence suggests that all types of face coverings are, to some extent, effective in reducing transmission of SARS-CoV-2 in both healthcare and public, community settings – this is through a combination of source control and protection to the wearer (high confidence).
            - 8 contact tracing studies suggested that contacts of primary cases were less likely to develop COVID-19 if either the primary case or the close contact, or both, wore a face covering.
            - 11 observational association studies had mixed results, with 6 studies suggesting face coverings were associated with reduced COVID-19 transmission and 5 suggesting no statistically significant association.
    - In the school setting (Jan 2022) they conducted a literature review as well as publishing the results of their own study that looked at schools with mask mandates in secondary schools. The literature review on the Evidence of associations between COVID-19 and the use of masks in educational settings was inconclusive, but some studies showed higher rates of COVID-19 in schools without mask requirements for students.
        - "The new study presented in this report is a comparison of covid absence rates 2-3 weeks later in 123 schools which introduced masks on the 1st October 2020 with covid absence rates in 1192 schools which did not have a policy of mask wearing in school.
        - There were several differences between the two sets of schools included in this study including the covid absence rates at the start of the study (the schools which introduced masks had much higher rates). The researchers tried to adjust for these factors in their analysis.
            - No Reduction in the UK with Masks in Schools: Schools where face coverings were used in October 2021 saw a reduction two to three weeks later in Covid absences from 5.3% to 3% - a drop of 2.3 percentage points.

- In schools which did not use face coverings absences fell from 5.3% to 3.6% - a fall of 1.7 percentage points (not statistically significant)

- Public Health Ontario has also assessed most of this evidence as well and summarized that several studies found that mask mandates in schools have been associated with lower incidence of SARS-CoV-2 infection. Many of the studies examining COVID-19 incidence in schools had layered Infection prevention and control measures in place, so it was challenging to measure the independent Impact of mask-wearing.
- There are 3 commonly cited studies (all rated as low quality) assessing whether wearing a face covering was effective in schools in the UK, US and Germany in autumn and winter 2020, and in a summer camp in the US in summer 2020. These results provide less direct evidence of the effectiveness of face coverings than either the RCTs or contact tracing, but still provide evidence on the difference in COVID-19 transmission between people who did and did not wear face coverings in school and summer camp settings.
    - California Study: D. Cooper et al. in a prospective cohort study in the US assessed whether face coverings were effective as universal masking in four schools in Autumn to Winter 2020 found SARS-CoV-2 infections in 17 learners (N=320) only during the surge. School A (97% remote learners) had the highest infection (10/70, 14.3%, p<0.01) and IgG positivity rates (13/66, 19.7%). School D (93% on-site learners) had the lowest infection and IgG positivity rates (1/63, 1.6%). Mitigation compliance [physical distancing (mean 87.4%) and face covering (91.3%)] was remarkably high at all schools.
    - Germany Study: Theuring et al. in a cross-sectional study in Germany (n=177 primary school students, n=175 secondary school students and n=142 staff members) assessed whether face coverings were effective as wearer protection in 12 primary and 12 secondary schools in Germany in November 2020. It concluded that prevalence increased with inconsistent facemask-use in school, walking to school, and case-contacts outside school.
    - US Summer Camp Study: S. Suh et al. conducted a cross-sectional study (n=486 US summer camps comprising 89,635 campers) assessed whether face coverings were effective as universal masking in 486 summer camps in the US in summer 2020. It found in both single and multi-NPI analyses, the risk of COVID-19 cases was lowest when campers always wore facial coverings.

More recent evidence from Delta Wave and CDC Commissioned Studies

- To demonstrate any independent effect of masks on COVID-19 transmission requires comparing communities with similar vaccination rates or statistically controlling for differences in vaccination rates or other covariates. Without making these adjustments, it is difficult to attribute differences in case rates, or differences in in-school transmission, to mask wearing in school.
- When CDC examined the evidence on school transmission, it concluded that the preponderance of the available evidence from United States schools indicates that even when students were placed less than 6 feet apart in classrooms, there was limited SARS-CoV-2 transmission *when other layered prevention strategies were consistently maintained; notably, masking and student cohorts.
    - The Oct 2021 Arizona CDC Study (M. Jehn et al.) in the Maricopa and Pima Counties concluded that schools without mask mandates were more 3.5 times likely to have COVID-19 outbreaks than schools with mask mandates. The study noted that given the high transmissibility of the SARS-CoV-2 B.1.617.2 (Delta) variant, universal masking, in addition to vaccination of all eligible students, staff members, and faculty and implementation of other prevention measures, remains essential to COVID-19 prevention in K–12 settings.
        - However, the study has been found to have numerous flaws as pointed out in this Atlantic Article – including a failure to quantify the size of outbreaks and failure to report testing protocols for the students. They also do not control for different vaccination rates in the counties, meaning that vaccination could have played a bigger role than masking.
    - Another Oct 2021 CDC study by S. E. Budzyn et al. found that U.S. counties without mask mandates saw larger increases in pediatric COVID-19 cases after schools opened, but again did not control for important differences in vaccination rates, stating it will be done at a later date.
        - The study examined 520 counties from July to September, 62% of which didn't have a school mask requirement.
            - Over the two-week period before and after school started, counties with school mask requirements saw their COVID-19 rates rise by 16 daily cases per 100,000 children, on average.

- Meanwhile, counties without school mask requirements saw their COVID-19 rates rise by 35 daily cases per 100,000 children, as shown in the chart below.

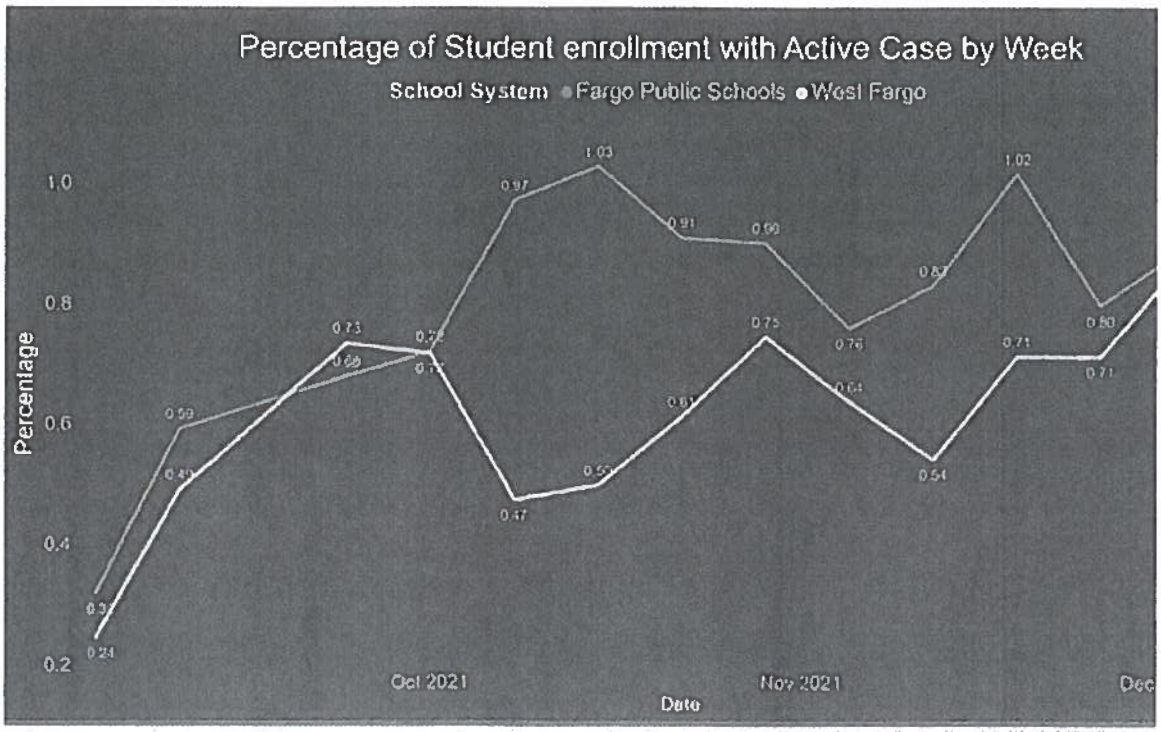
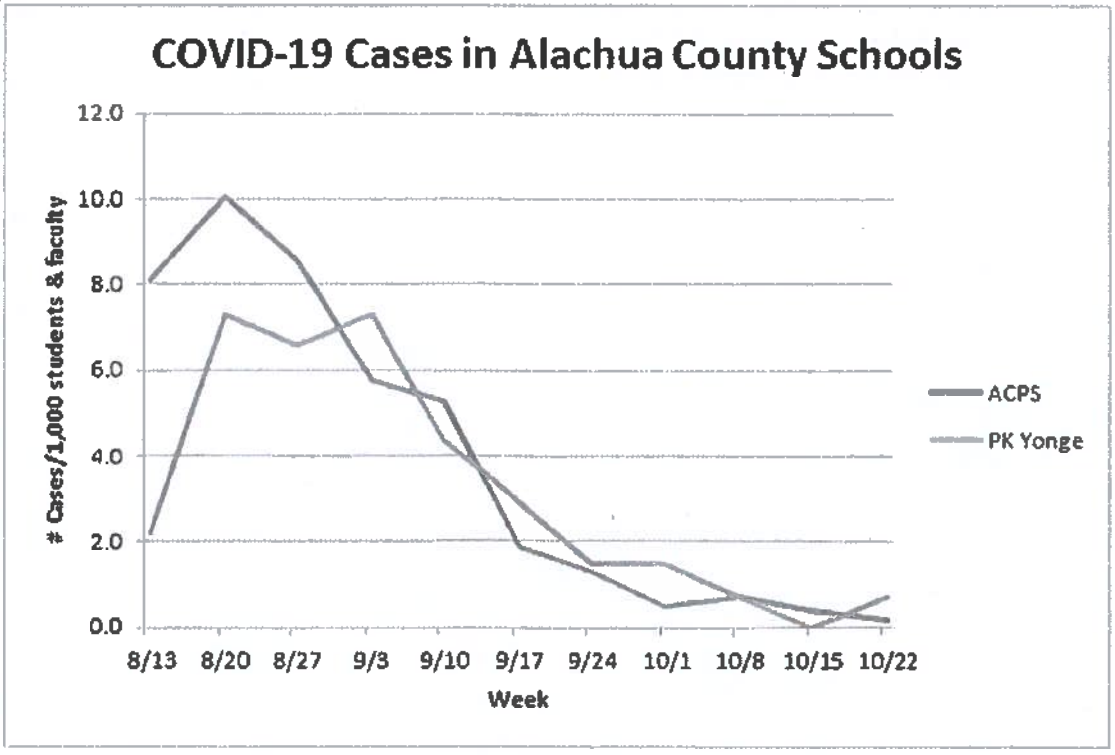
- These smaller studies are often shared online to show that there isn't a difference between schools that mask during the Delta variant's spread in the US:
  - In Tennessee, two neighboring counties with similar vaccination rates, Davidson and Williamson, have virtually overlapping case-rate trends in their school-age populations, despite one having a mask mandate and one having a mask opt-out rate of about 23 percent.
  - Another recent analysis of data from Cass County, North Dakota by Tracy Hoeg, comparing school districts with and without mask mandates, concluded that mask-optional districts had lower prevalence of COVID-19 cases among students this fall.



- Analyses of COVID-19 cases in Alachua County, Florida, also suggest no differences in mask-required versus mask-optional schools.



Scott Fullmer, MPA
Acting Director, Health Evidence & Policy
Research and Innovation Branch
Health Standards, Quality and Performance

Alberta Health
Phone: 780-415-2811
Mobile: 587-784-4624
19th Floor, ATB Place North| 10025 Jasper Avenue NW | Edmonton, AB T5J 1S6 |

Alberta Government

[1] Both studies were used to guide previous advice on masking in Alberta, both excluded children

Classification: Protected A

TAB 9

COVID-19 Situation Update

Epidemiology and Surveillance

08 February, 2022

Note: This report was generated on 08 February, 2022 for data reported up to end-of-day 07 February, 2022.

Summary

- 28,265 active cases in Alberta
- There has been a weekly average of 1.7% of COVID cases screened for variants (excluding the last two days due to reporting delays).

- On 07 February, 2022, there was:

  - an increase of 1,733 cases (+1,537 confirmed cases and +196 probable cases)
  - a net change of 1,667 cases (net change includes adjustments such as removing out of province cases and confirming or removing probable cases)
  - an additional 253 variant of concern cases (142,420 total)
  - an increase of 4,269 tests (6,793,485 total) and 819 people tested for the first time (2,717,900 total)

- 14 new deaths reported in the last 24 hours. One (1) previously reported death was determined to be non-COVID; as a result, the total death count will increase by 13.
- The testing positivity rate is 36.4%
- There are 1,911 active and 19,418 recovered cases at long term care facilities and supportive/home living sites. 1,599 residents at these facilities have died. To date, 1,599/3,686 (43%) of deaths have been in long term care facilities or supportive/home living sites.
- 477,767 people recovered from COVID-19 (an additional 3483 people)

ALBERTA CASES

Table 1: Case information by Zone

Zone*	Case numbers	Active cases in community	Current hospitalizations	Current ICU admissions	Deaths	Recovered
Calgary	206,337	10,549	597	44	998	194,193
Central	50,671	3,084	168	6	456	46,963
Edmonton	163,289	7,657	641	61	1,468	153,523
North	56,246	2,670	127	6	438	53,011
South	32,119	2,403	90	12	326	29,300
Unknown	1,056	279	0	0	0	777
Total	509,718	26,642	1,623	129	3,686	477,767

*Zone of current hospitalization and current ICU admission based on location of hospitalization not zone of patient residence.
ICU cases are a subset of those in hospital.

Classification: Protected A

Table 2: Case difference by Zone

Zone	Cases on February 07, 2022	Difference (February 06-February 07)
Calgary Zone	206,337	801
Central Zone	50,671	139
Edmonton Zone	163,289	471
North Zone	56,246	160
South Zone	32,119	137
Unknown	1,056	25
Total	509,718	1733

Table 3: Variants of Concern by Zone

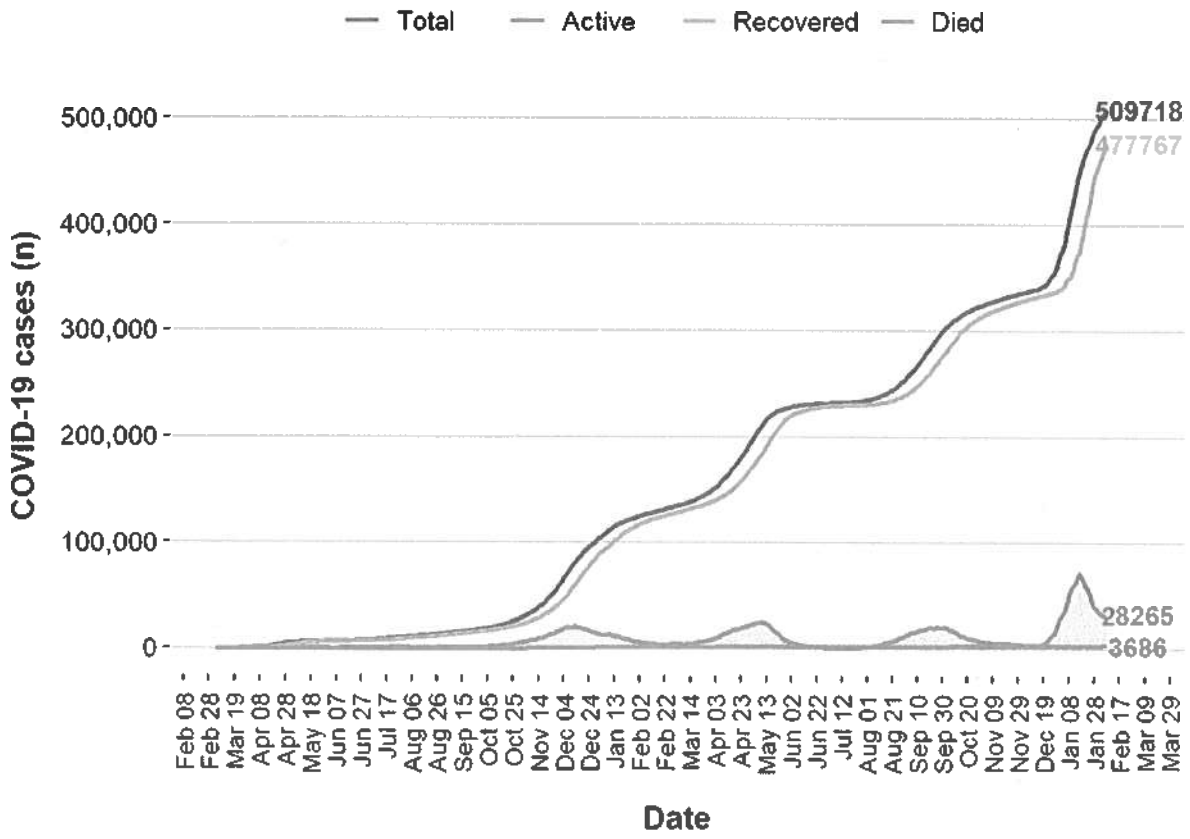
Zone	Alpha	Beta	Delta	Gamma	Kappa	Omicron	Total
Calgary Zone	20045	79	16381	804	6	12528	49843
Central Zone	5458	2	8565	192	0	1604	15821
Edmonton Zone	11429	65	22948	1063	13	8692	44210
North Zone	6253	34	14173	768	0	1387	22615
South Zone	2686	0	6137	97	0	971	9891
Unknown	0	0	4	0	0	36	40
Alberta	45871	180	68208	2924	19	25218	142420

Table 4: Variants of Concern (active cases only) by Zone

Zone	Delta	Omicron	Total
Calgary Zone	10	432	442
Central Zone	4	158	162
Edmonton Zone	0	517	517
North Zone	3	126	129
South Zone	2	99	101
Unknown	0	0	0
Alberta	19	1332	1351

Classification: Protected A

Figure 1: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day and case status



Classification: Protected A

Figure 2: Current COVID-19 hospitalizations in Alberta per day

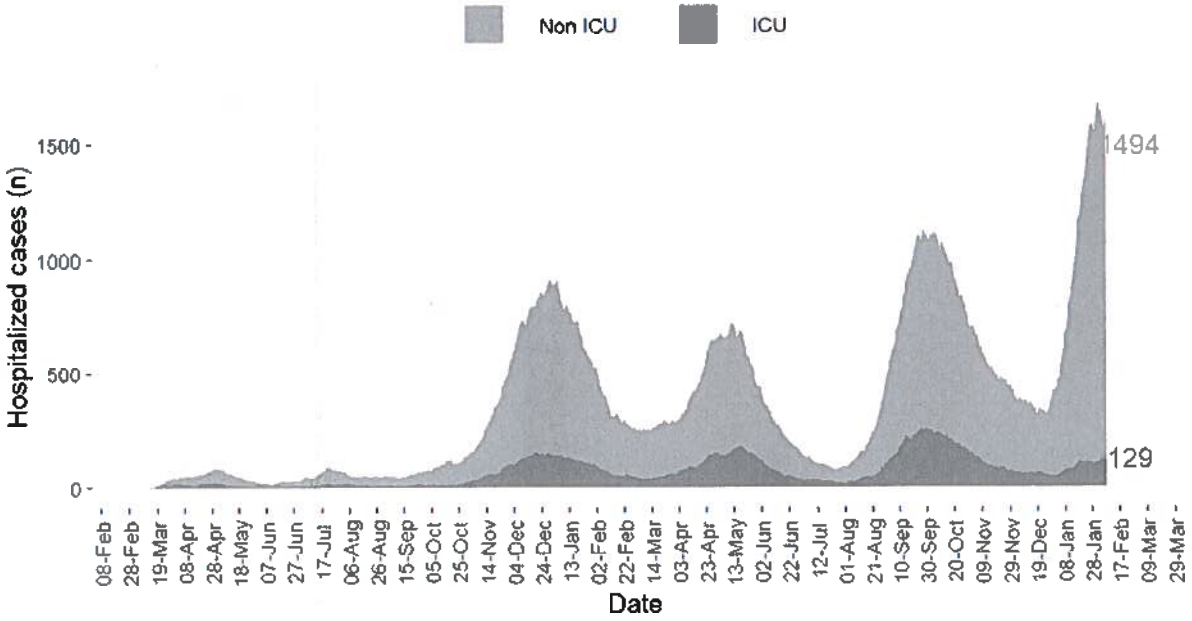


Figure 3: Total tests for COVID-19 in Alberta per day

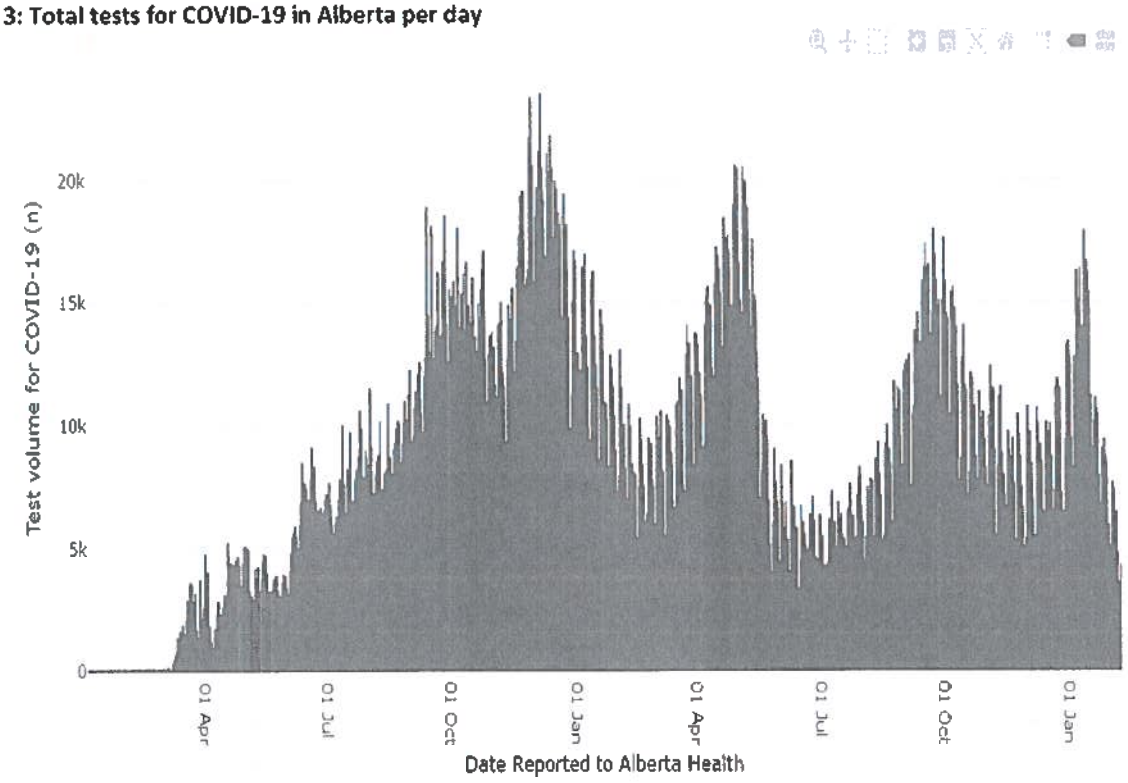


Classification: Protected A

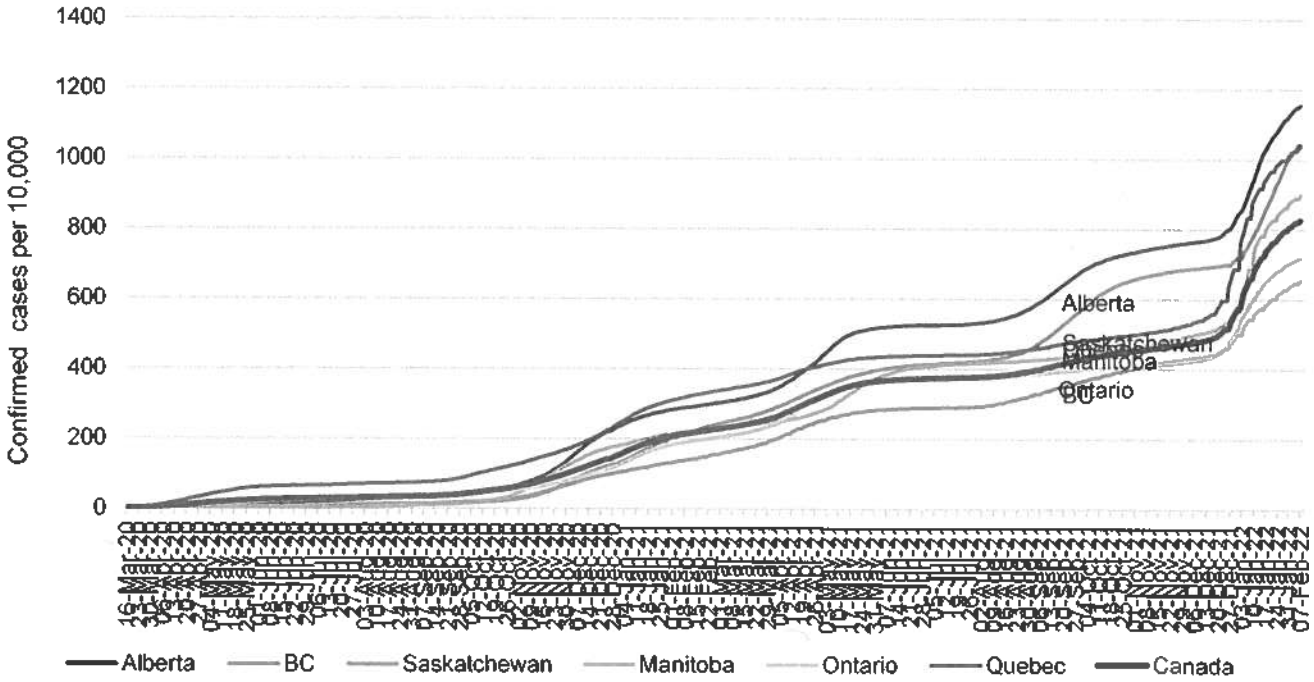
CANADIAN CASES (UPDATED TUESDAYS AND FRIDAYS)

Table 3: Cases and testing within past seven days, current hospitalization and ICU, and deaths within past 7 days for Canada's 6 largest provinces as of February 07, 2022

	Cases in past 7 days		PCR tests in past 7 days		Current hospitalizations		Current ICU		Deaths in past 7 days
Province	# Cases	Per 10,000	# Tests	Per 10,000	# Cases	Per 10,000	# Cases	Per 10,000	# Cases	Per 10,000
Alberta	14,073	31.89	40,362	91.46	1,623	3.68	129	0.2923	107	0.242
British Columbia	9,310	18.22	43,167	84.46	987	1.93	141	0.2759	91	0.178
Saskatchewan	4,652	39.37	14,901	126.10	332	2.81	31	0.2623	20	0.169
Manitoba	3,095	22.47	12,010	87.19	529	3.84	35	0.2541	38	0.276
Ontario	22,855	15.54	150,620	102.38	2,155	1.46	486	0.3303	392	0.266
Quebec	21,075	24.68	150,463	176.23	2,380	2.79	178	0.2085	265	0.310
		23.576		96.919		2.799		0.2691		0.254

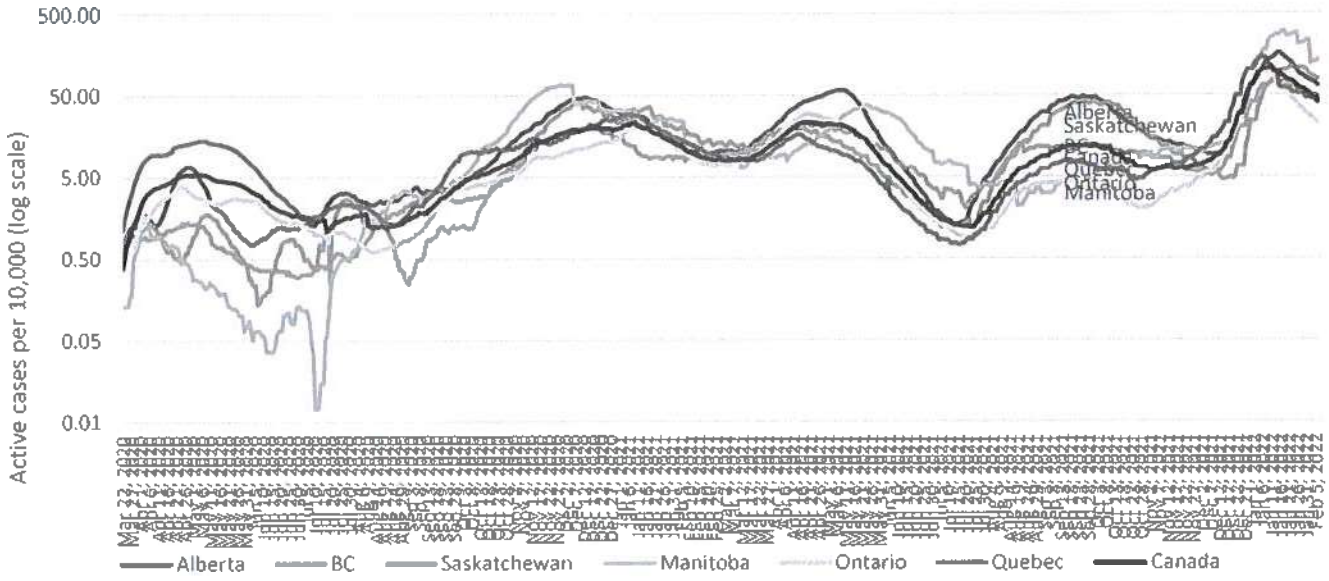
Notes: Green circles indicate rates that sit under the median of the six provinces (for testing, green indicates over the median). For consistency, numbers are extracted at the same time; as a result, data for Alberta may not reflect the current numbers reported elsewhere in this document. Hospitalization and ICU counts reflect current numbers (not cumulative). Hospitalization counts includes ICU.

Figure 4: Confirmed COVID-19 cases (per 10,000) over time in Alberta vs. Canada and select provinces as of February 07, 2022



Classification: Protected A

Figure 5: Active COVID-19 cases (per 10,000) over time in Alberta vs. Canada and select provinces as of February 07, 2022



Note: March 30, 2020 is the most historic date data are available for all provinces. As of July 17, 2020, Quebec implemented a new definition for estimating the number of people recovered. This results in a significant increase in the number of recovered individuals in Quebec and Canada and, therefore, a significant decrease in the number of active cases in both Quebec and across Canada. This definition has been applied to historic data. August 10, 2020 Quebec changed their methods and applied them retrospectively so number may vary from previous reports.

Classification: Protected A

OUTBREAK TRACKING

Table 5: Open outbreaks by municipality and location type

Municipality	Location Type	Outbreak Facility	Cases	Active	Recovered	Deaths
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta - Division of Infectious Diseases	43	15	28	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital	32	14	16	2
Red Deer	Acute Care	Red Deer Regional Hospital Centre	30	16	14	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Misericordia Community Hospital [EDM]	29	2	22	5
Westlock	Acute Care	Westlock Healthcare Centre [NOR]	27	4	23	0
High River	Acute Care	High River General Hospital	26	4	22	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Rockyview General Hospital [CAL]	23	6	17	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Foothills Medical Centre	22	6	16	0
Fort Mcmurray	Acute Care	Northern Lights Regional Health Centre	19	6	13	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Peter Lougheed Centre [CAL]	18	15	3	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Grey Nuns Community Hospital - In-Patient	17	5	12	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Foothills Medical Centre	15	13	1	1
Lethbridge	Acute Care	Chinook Regional Hospital [SOU]	15	5	9	1
Calgary	Acute Care	Rockyview General Hospital [CAL]	15	3	12	0
Red Deer	Acute Care	Red Deer Regional Hospital Centre	14	13	1	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital	14	10	4	0
Ponoka	Acute Care	Ponoka Hospital And Care Centre	14	2	12	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta Hospital	14	3	10	1
Calgary	Acute Care	Foothills Medical Centre	13	6	6	1
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital	12	11	1	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital	12	5	6	1
Leduc	Acute Care	Leduc Community Hospital	11	3	8	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Foothills Medical Centre - Inpatient	11	4	7	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital - Unit G21	11	6	4	1
Innisfail	Acute Care	Innisfail Health Centre	10	9	1	0
Lacombe	Acute Care	Lacombe Hospital and Care Centre	10	7	1	2
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital	10	9	1	0
Lac La Biche	Acute Care	William J. Cadzow - Lac La Biche Healthcare Centre, Acute Care [NOR]	9	7	2	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Misericordia Community Hospital [EDM]	9	5	3	1
Edmonton	Acute Care	Grey Nuns Community Hospital - In-Patient	9	2	7	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Peter Lougheed Centre [CAL]	8	7	1	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Misericordia Community Hospital [EDM]	8	4	3	1
Redwater	Acute Care	Redwater Health Centre	8	2	6	0

Classification: Protected A

Calgary	Acute Care	Southern Alberta Forensic Psychiatry Services	7	3	4	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Grey Nuns Community Hospital - In-Patient	7	4	3	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital	7	5	2	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Misericordia Community Hospital [EDM]	7	4	3	0
Red Deer	Acute Care	Red Deer Regional Hospital Centre	6	5	0	1
Medicine Hat	Acute Care	Medicine Hat Regional Hospital [SOU]	6	6	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta - Unit 5E3	6	6	0	0
High River	Acute Care	High River General Hospital	6	4	2	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta - Inpatient	6	4	2	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Grey Nuns Community Hospital - In-Patient	6	3	2	1
Medicine Hat	Acute Care	Medicine Hat Regional Hospital [SOU]	5	5	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta - Unit 4A7	5	4	0	1
Medicine Hat	Acute Care	Medicine Hat Regional Hospital [SOU]	5	0	5	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	West Edmonton Kidney Care Dialysis Unit	5	2	3	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital - Unit G24	4	4	0	0
Lethbridge	Acute Care	Chinook Regional Hospital [SOU]	4	4	0	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Peter Lougheed Centre [CAL]	4	4	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Glenrose Rehabilitation Hospital	4	4	0	0
Rocky Mountain House	Acute Care	Rocky Mountain House Health Centre - Emergency	4	4	0	0
Red Deer	Acute Care	Red Deer Regional Hospital Centre	4	4	0	0
Drumheller	Acute Care	Drumheller Health Centre	4	0	4	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta Hospital	4	4	0	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Foothills Medical Centre	4	3	1	0
Calgary	Acute Care	South Health Campus [CAL]	3	3	0	0
Stettler	Acute Care	Stettler Hospital and Care Centre [CEN]	3	3	0	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Rockyview General Hospital - Inpatient	3	3	0	0
Ponoka	Acute Care	Centennial Centre - Mental Health and Brain Injury	3	2	0	1
Barrhead	Acute Care	Barrhead Healthcare Centre	3	3	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Grey Nuns Community Hospital - In-Patient	3	3	0	0
Leduc	Acute Care	Leduc Community Hospital	3	2	0	1
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital - Unit G34	3	2	1	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Alberta Hospital [EDM]	3	3	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta - Inpatient	3	1	2	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Glenrose Rehabilitation Hospital	3	1	2	0

Classification: Protected A

Blairmore	Acute Care	Crowsnest Pass Health Centre	3	0	3	0
Ponoka	Acute Care	Centennial Centre - Mental Health and Brain Injury	2	2	0	0
St Paul	Acute Care	St. Therese - St. Paul Healthcare Centre	2	2	0	0
St. Albert	Acute Care	Sturgeon Community Hospital	2	2	0	0
Lethbridge	Acute Care	Chinook Regional Hospital	2	2	0	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Foothills Medical Centre	2	2	0	0
Calgary	Acute Care	Foothills Medical Centre	2	2	0	0
Grande Prairie	Acute Care	Grande Prairie Regional Hospital	2	2	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Misericordia Community Hospital [EDM]	2	2	0	0
St. Albert	Acute Care	Sturgeon Community Hospital	2	1	1	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Royal Alexandra Hospital	1	1	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	Alberta Hospital Edmonton	1	1	0	0
Elk Point	Acute Care	Elk Point Healthcare Centre, Acute Care	1	1	0	0
Edmonton	Acute Care	University of Alberta Hospital	1	0	1	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	AgeCare Seton	163	26	136	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	AgeCare Glenmore	159	15	138	6
Calgary	Continuing Care	Agecare Skypointe	133	19	113	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	Mayfair Care Centre, Travois Holdings [CAL]	128	0	123	5
Calgary	Continuing Care	Dr. Vernon Fanning Centre, Carewest [CAL]	128	25	103	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Bethany, Calgary [CAL]	122	16	102	4
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Chartwell - Griesbach	120	20	99	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	Mckenzie Towne Continuing Care	119	11	106	2
Calgary	Continuing Care	CareWest George Boyak	115	24	89	2
Calgary	Continuing Care	Bow View Manor	104	8	95	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	Cedars Villa, Extendicare [CAL]	91	13	72	6
Calgary	Continuing Care	Carewest Sarcee	90	14	76	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Carewest, Glenmore Park	84	17	67	0
Brooks	Continuing Care	AgeCare Sunrise Gardens	83	9	70	4
Calgary	Continuing Care	Trinity Lodge	83	1	81	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Allen Gray Continuing Care Centre [EDM]	79	10	63	6

Classification: Protected A

Calgary	Continuing Care	Garrison Green, Carewest [CAL]	77	20	57	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Cambridge Manor	77	2	73	2
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Lewis Estates Retirement Residence [EDM]	76	4	72	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Sage Hill Retirement Residence	75	14	61	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Intercare Chinook Care Centre	74	15	59	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Capital Care Strathcona Campus	74	14	60	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Lynnwood - Capital Care [EDM]	73	13	59	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	Colonel Belcher LTC, Carewest [CAL]	72	5	67	0
High River	Continuing Care	Seasons Retirement Home High River	71	18	52	1
St. Albert	Continuing Care	Youville Home [EDM]	70	12	54	4
Calgary	Continuing Care	Covenant Care St. Teresa	65	18	46	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	The Manor Village Fish Creek Park	65	1	64	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Bethany Riverview	62	3	56	3
St. Albert	Continuing Care	Chartwell St Albert Retirement Residence	61	10	50	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	Beverly, Lake Midnapore (Agecare) [CAL]	60	12	47	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Miller Crossing Care Centre [EDM]	59	8	51	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Shepherd's Care Kensington Village LTC	56	3	51	2
Westlock	Continuing Care	Smithfield Lodge [NOR]	55	3	49	3
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	Edith Cavell Care Centre [SOU]	54	5	42	7
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Jasper Place Continuing Care Centre [EDM]	54	8	45	1
Wainwright	Continuing Care	Wainwright Health Centre	51	2	47	2
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Capital Care Grandview	51	8	43	0
Viking	Continuing Care	Extendicare Viking	50	10	40	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Hardisty Care Centre [EDM]	50	7	42	1
Strathmore	Continuing Care	AgeCare Sagewood	50	3	45	2
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Edmonton People In Need Society	49	4	44	1

Classification: Protected A

Edmonton	Continuing Care	Chartwell Heritage Valley Retirement Residence	49	19	30	0
Leduc	Continuing Care	Lifestyle Options - Leduc [EDM]	48	7	41	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Shepherd Care Kensington	48	7	41	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Norwood - Capital Care [EDM]	48	10	38	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	Masterpiece River Ridge [SOU]	47	14	33	0
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Extendicare Michener Hill [CEN]	47	12	34	1
Parkland County	Continuing Care	Everglades Special Care Lodge	46	46	0	0
Camrose	Continuing Care	Seasons Camrose	46	10	34	2
St. Albert	Continuing Care	Chateau Mission Court [EDM]	46	0	45	1
Spruce Grove	Continuing Care	Copper Sky Lodge	46	15	31	0
Innisfail	Continuing Care	Autumn Grove Lodge	45	4	41	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Grand Manor [EDM]	45	13	32	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Good Samaritan Society Southgate Care Centre	44	8	35	1
Brooks	Continuing Care	Orchard Manor [SOU]	43	4	39	0
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Bethany Collegeside Care Centre [CEN]	43	5	38	0
Grande Prairie	Continuing Care	Grande Prairie Care Centre, Supportive Living [NOR]	42	15	27	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Holy Cross Manor	42	2	39	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Riverbend Retirement Residence [EDM]	42	7	35	0
Pincher Creek	Continuing Care	GSS - Vista Village [SOU]	42	3	37	2
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Greater Edmonton Foundation (GEF) Seniors Housing Sakaw Terrace	41	4	36	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Rutherford Heights [EDM]	41	2	39	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Millwoods Shepherds Care Centre [EDM]	40	7	33	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Rocky Ridge Retirement Community by Signature	40	14	26	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Evanston Grand Village	40	5	34	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	United Active Living-Garrison Green	40	3	37	0
Grande Prairie	Continuing Care	Prairie Lake Seniors Community	39	12	26	1

Classification: Protected A

Calgary	Continuing Care	Monterey Seniors Village	39	10	29	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	South Country Village - LTC [SOU]	39	4	34	1
Red Deer County	Continuing Care	The Hamlets at Red Deer	39	16	23	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Villa Marguerite [EDM]	39	6	33	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Villa Caritas Hospital	38	1	35	2
Calgary	Continuing Care	Prince Of Peace Manor [CAL]	38	1	37	0
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Timberstone Mews	37	13	23	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	Auburn Heights Retirement Residence	37	4	31	2
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Villa Caritas Hospital	37	1	33	3
Calgary	Continuing Care	McKenzie Towne, Revera Retirement Residence	37	8	29	0
Elk Point	Continuing Care	Elk Point Heritage Lodge [NOR]	36	6	30	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Balwin Villas	36	3	32	1
Cochrane	Continuing Care	Points West Living Cochrane	36	10	25	1
Linden	Continuing Care	Westview Care Community	35	25	10	0
Cold Lake	Continuing Care	Cold Lake Healthcare Centre, Auxiliary [NOR]	35	8	26	1
Panoka	Continuing Care	Northcortt Care Centre	35	15	20	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Wedman Facilities - Good Samaritan [EDM]	35	2	33	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	The Manor Village Varsity	35	10	25	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Silver Birch Place	35	13	21	1
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Points West Living Red Deer Phase 2	34	9	25	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Villa Caritas Hospital	34	0	34	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Villa Caritas Hospital	34	3	31	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Grand Seton Village	33	0	33	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Villa Caritas Hospital	33	1	32	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	Masterpiece Southland Meadows	32	21	11	0
Innisfail	Continuing Care	Rosefield Care Centre	32	2	30	0

Classification: Protected A

Edmonton	Continuing Care	Greater Edmonton Foundation (GEF) Seniors Housing Rosslyn Place Lodge	32	2	29	1
Ponoka	Continuing Care	Centennial Centre - Mental Health and Brain Injury	32	0	32	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Beaver Dam Lodge, MCF Housing [CAL]	32	0	32	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	The Wellington [SOU]	32	16	15	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	St. Marguerite Manor & Dulcina Hospice Covenant Care	31	0	31	0
Ponoka	Continuing Care	Centennial Centre - Mental Health and Brain Injury	30	9	20	1
Ponoka	Continuing Care	Ponoka Hospital And Care Centre - Facility Living	30	1	29	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Brenda Strafford Foundation Wentworth Manor Court	30	10	20	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Eau Claire Retirement Residence, Chartwell [CAL]	30	7	23	0
Drayton Valley	Continuing Care	Drayton Valley Hospital & Care Centre [CEN]	29	18	11	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Sherwood Care	29	3	26	0
Westlock	Continuing Care	Westlock Continuing Care Centre [NOR]	29	7	22	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	St Thomas Supportive Living	28	5	23	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	McConachie Gardens	28	2	26	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	MacTaggart Place Retirement Residence	28	0	26	2
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Churchill Manor [EDM]	28	0	28	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Shepherd's Care Kensington Village	27	5	22	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	Meadowlands [SOU]	27	6	21	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Continuing Care	Dr. Turner Lodge [EDM]	27	3	24	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Rosedale Estates [EDM]	27	3	24	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Clifton Manor	26	5	21	0
Athabasca	Continuing Care	Athabasca Extendicare [NOR]	26	3	23	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Bethany, Harvest Hills [CAL]	26	5	21	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	St. Michael's Long Term Care Centre [EDM]	26	5	21	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Father Lacombe Nursing Home [CAL]	26	5	21	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Aspen Lodge, MCF Housing [CAL]	26	20	6	0

Classification: Protected A

Calgary	Continuing Care	Age care walden heights	25	25	0	0
Wetaskiwin	Continuing Care	Good Samaritan Society Good Shepherd Home.	25	4	21	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	McQueen lodge	25	8	16	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Benevolence Care Centre	25	1	21	3
Calgary	Continuing Care	Southwood, Intercare [CAL]	25	8	16	1
Clairmont	Continuing Care	Lakeview Seniors Housing	25	2	23	0
Fort Mcmurray	Continuing Care	Willow Square Continuing Care Centre	25	7	18	0
Lacombe	Continuing Care	Royal Oak Dev. Lacombe LTD [CEN]	24	6	18	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Shepherd'S Care Greenfield [EDM]	23	9	14	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Robin Hood Association Aspen Village	23	11	12	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Wing Kei Greenview	23	2	20	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Devonshire Care Centre [EDM]	23	2	21	0
Stony Plain	Continuing Care	Stony Plain Care Centre - Good Samaritan [EDM]	23	5	18	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Shepherd's Care Eden House	23	4	19	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	South Ridge Village [SOU]	22	17	5	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Devonshire Village [EDM]	22	6	16	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Covenant Health St. Joseph's Edmonton [EDM]	22	3	18	1
Falher	Continuing Care	Villa Beausejour Seniors Lodge, Fahler	21	21	0	0
Stettler	Continuing Care	Paragon Place [CEN]	21	18	3	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Holyrood - Extendicare [EDM]	21	19	2	0
Okotoks	Continuing Care	Strafford Foundation Tudor Manor	21	6	15	0
Olds	Continuing Care	Seasons Encore Retirement Community	21	1	20	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	CapitalCare McConnell Place North	21	0	20	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Touchmark at Wedgewood	21	1	20	0
Lamont	Continuing Care	Lamont Health Care Centre	20	15	2	3
Wetaskiwin	Continuing Care	Madyson Manor [CEN]	20	17	3	0

Classification: Protected A

Red Deer	Continuing Care	Points West Living Red Deer Phase I	20	6	14	0
Barrhead	Continuing Care	Shepherd's Care Barrhead [NOR]	20	14	6	0
Myrnam	Continuing Care	Eagle View Lodge	20	0	20	0
Wabasca	Continuing Care	Keekenow Senior Facility	20	3	17	0
Sylvan Lake	Continuing Care	Bethany Sylvan Lake [CEN]	20	15	5	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Scenic Acres, Revera Retirement Residence [CAL]	20	1	19	0
Edson	Continuing Care	Edson Continuing Care Center	19	8	11	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Extendicare Eaux Claires [EDM]	19	2	17	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Grace Manor Salvation Army [EDM]	19	2	17	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Kipnes Centre For Veterans [EDM]	19	4	15	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Mount Royal, Revera [CAL]	19	9	10	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	Meadow Ridge Seniors Village	18	18	0	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Venta Care Centre [EDM]	18	8	10	0
Hinton	Continuing Care	Hinton Continuing Care Center	18	6	12	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Village at Westmount	18	3	15	0
Slave Lake	Continuing Care	Vanderwell Heritage Place [NOR]	18	1	17	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	Adaptacare (9 Ave S) [SOU]	18	1	17	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	CapitalCare Laurier House Lynnwood	18	2	16	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Inclusio	18	4	14	0
Legal	Continuing Care	Chateau Sturgeon Lodge [EDM]	17	15	1	1
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	St. Therese Villa [SOU]	17	4	13	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Capital Care Dickensfield	17	7	10	0
Ponoka	Continuing Care	Centennial Centre - Mental Health and Brain Injury	17	13	4	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	LifeStyle Options Schonsee Retirement Community	17	7	10	0
Villeneuve	Continuing Care	West Country Hearth [EDM]	17	1	16	0
Grande Prairie	Continuing Care	Mackenzie Place Continuing Care Centre [NOR]	17	7	10	0

Classification: Protected A

Edmonton	Continuing Care	South Terrace Continuing Care [EDM]	16	2	14	0
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Covenant Care Villa Marie	16	4	12	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Bedford Village	15	15	0	0
Brooks	Continuing Care	Newbrook Lodge [SOU]	15	10	4	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Whitemud - Lifestyle Options [EDM]	15	4	11	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Agape Hospice [CAL]	15	4	9	2
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Park Place Seniors Living Sprucewood Place	15	2	13	0
Whitecourt	Continuing Care	Spruce View Lodge [NOR]	14	14	0	0
Cardston	Continuing Care	GSS Lee Crest	14	1	12	1
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	AgeCare Valleyview	14	2	12	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Our Parents' Home	14	3	11	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Stepping Stone Salvation Army [EDM]	14	3	11	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Summerwood Village Retirement Residence [EDM]	14	3	11	0
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Revera Inglewood	14	2	12	0
Wainwright	Continuing Care	Points West Living [CEN]	14	5	9	0
Barrhead	Continuing Care	Dr.W.R.Keir Barrhead Continuing Care Centre	14	5	9	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Urban Manor Housing Society	13	1	12	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Edmonton People In Need Society	13	1	12	0
Innisfail	Continuing Care	Sunset Manor [CEN]	13	2	11	0
St. Paul	Continuing Care	Sunnyside Manor [NOR]	13	4	8	1
Camrose	Continuing Care	Louise Jensen Care Centre	12	11	1	0
Fort Macleod	Continuing Care	Extendicare Fort Macleod [SOU]	12	10	2	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Canterbury Foundation	12	4	8	0
Central	Continuing Care	Red Deer Hospice Society	12	1	11	0
St Albert	Continuing Care	Ironwood Estates	12	1	11	0
Spruce Grove	Continuing Care	St. Michael's Grove Manor [EDM]	12	6	6	0

Classification: Protected A

Slave Lake	Continuing Care	Slave Lake Health Care Centre Continuing Care	12	3	8	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	LifeStyle Options Terra Losa Retirement Community	12	1	11	0
Leduc	Continuing Care	Planeview Place [EDM]	12	5	7	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Wild Rose Cottage [EDM]	12	4	7	1
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Kiwanis Place Lodge [EDM]	12	3	9	0
Central	Continuing Care	The West Park Lodge	11	7	4	0
Drumheller	Continuing Care	Drumheller Health Centre - Acute Care [CEN]	11	2	8	1
Mundare	Continuing Care	Father Filas Manor [CEN]	11	4	7	0
Oyen	Continuing Care	Big Country Hospital - LTC [SOU]	11	1	10	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Golden Age Manor [EDM]	11	2	9	0
Drayton Valley	Continuing Care	Points West Living - Drayton Valley	11	1	10	0
Drumheller	Continuing Care	Drumheller Health Centre	11	0	11	0
Lloydminster	Continuing Care	Lloydminter Continuing Care Centre	11	3	8	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Continuing Care	Rivercrest Care Centre [EDM]	11	2	9	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Revera River Ridge	11	7	4	0
Airdrie	Continuing Care	Luxstone Manor	11	2	9	0
Edson	Continuing Care	Parkland Lodge [NOR]	11	5	6	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Prince Of Peace, The Harbour [CAL]	11	7	4	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Emmanuel Home [EDM]	10	7	3	0
Athabasca	Continuing Care	Athabasca Healthcare Centre (Long Term Care Auxiliary)	10	3	7	0
St. Albert	Continuing Care	Foyer Lacombe [EDM]	10	9	0	1
High Prairie	Continuing Care	J.B. Wood Continuing Care [NOR]	10	3	7	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Bissell Centre - Hope Terrace	10	5	5	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	St. Michael's Health Centre [SOU]	10	3	7	0
Grande Prairie	Continuing Care	Signature Support Services 83 Ave	10	0	10	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	St. Michael's Health Centre [SOU]	10	0	10	0

Classification: Protected A

Westlock	Continuing Care	Pembina Lodge [NOR]	10	2	8	0
Blairmore	Continuing Care	Crowsnest Pass Health Centre - LTC [SOU]	10	3	7	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Edmonton Chinatown Care Centre - Ccc [EDM]	10	1	9	0
Stettler	Continuing Care	Points West Living [CEN]	10	4	6	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Churchill Retirement Community [EDM]	10	3	7	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	St. Marguerite Manor & Dulcina Hospice Covenant Care	10	2	8	0
Stony Plain	Continuing Care	Westview Continuing Care Centre [EDM]	10	3	7	0
Airdrie	Continuing Care	Bethany, Airdrie [CAL]	10	3	7	0
Bonnyville	Continuing Care	Bonnylodge	9	8	1	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Operation Friendship Senior Society - Sparling Lodge	9	9	0	0
Canmore	Continuing Care	Origin at Spring Creek	9	8	1	0
Wetaskiwin	Continuing Care	Wetaskiwin Hospital and Care Centre	9	6	3	0
Taber	Continuing Care	GSS Linden View	9	4	5	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	Pemmican Lodge [SOU]	9	7	2	0
Fort Mcmurray	Continuing Care	Rotary House Seniors Lodge [NOR]	9	3	6	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Ambrose Place	9	4	5	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Laurel Heights Retirement Living	9	0	9	0
Redwater	Continuing Care	Diamond Spring Lodge [NOR]	9	1	8	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Mill Woods Centre - Good Samaritan [EDM]	9	4	5	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Chartwell Wescott Retirment Residence	9	2	7	0
Grande Prairie	Continuing Care	Emerald Gardens Retirement Residence	8	6	2	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Rose Crest Home	8	4	4	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Discovery House	8	7	1	0
Black Diamond	Continuing Care	Rising Sun Long Term Care	8	6	2	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Touchmark At Wedgewood - Ccc [EDM]	8	6	2	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Queen Alexandra Lodge [EDM]	8	4	4	0

Classification: Protected A

Ponoka	Continuing Care	Centennial Centre - Mental Health and Brain Injury	8	3	5	0
Bonnyville	Continuing Care	Bonnyville Extendicare [NOR]	8	4	4	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Clover Bar Lodge	8	2	6	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Evanston Summit Covenant Living	8	2	6	0
Bassano	Continuing Care	Playfair Lodge [SOU]	7	7	0	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Vanguard Shepherd's Care	7	3	4	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Silvera for Seniors Shouldice	7	6	1	0
Stony Plain	Continuing Care	Unlimited Potential Community Services Bright Bank	7	0	7	0
Sturgeon County	Continuing Care	St. Albert Retirement Residence	7	3	4	0
Barrhead	Continuing Care	Hillcrest Lodge	7	3	4	0
Olds	Continuing Care	Olds Hospital & Olds Continuing Care Centre [CEN]	6	4	2	0
Didsury	Continuing Care	Bethany Aspen Ridge Lodge	6	6	0	0
Gibbons	Continuing Care	Spruce View Manor [EDM]	6	5	1	0
Evansburg	Continuing Care	Sunshine Place [EDM]	6	0	6	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	The Ashbourne Assisted Living	6	1	5	0
St. Albert	Continuing Care	Citadel Care Centre [EDM]	6	0	6	0
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Chartwell Emerald Hills Retirement Residence Unit 1	6	2	4	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	Black Rock Terrace [SOU]	6	0	6	0
Peace River	Continuing Care	Heritage Towers	5	4	1	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Whispering Waters Manor	5	5	0	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	High Country Lodge	5	5	0	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	Garden View Lodge [SOU]	5	0	4	1
Grande Prairie	Continuing Care	Prairie Lake Seniors Community	5	1	4	0
Grande Cache	Continuing Care	Whispering Pines Lodge [NOR]	5	1	3	1
Sherwood Park	Continuing Care	Robin Hood Association Residence 24	5	0	5	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Winnifred Stewart Group Home Residence 13	5	1	4	0

Classification: Protected A

Lethbridge	Continuing Care	St. Therese Villa [SOU]	5	0	4	1
Calgary	Continuing Care	High Banks Independent Living for Parenting Youth Society	5	2	3	0
Manning	Continuing Care	Del-Air Lodge [NOR]	4	4	0	0
Olds	Continuing Care	Seasons Olds	4	4	0	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Edmonton General Care Centre [EDM]	4	3	1	0
Valleyview	Continuing Care	Red Willow Lodge [NOR]	4	4	0	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	Seasons Lethbridge Gardens	4	4	0	0
Medicine Hat	Continuing Care	Leisure Way Community Group Home [SOU]	4	4	0	0
Morinville	Continuing Care	Aspen House [EDM]	4	4	0	0
Lethbridge	Continuing Care	St. Therese Villa [SOU]	4	3	1	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Kids Kottage Foundation	4	0	4	0
Coronation	Continuing Care	Coronation Long Term Care [CEN]	4	0	4	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Optima Living Aster Gardens	4	0	4	0
Mayerthorpe	Continuing Care	Mayerthorpe Extendicare [NOR]	4	1	3	0
Devon	Continuing Care	Discovery Place Senior Independent Living Facility-Devon	4	0	4	0
Radway	Continuing Care	Radway Continuing Care Centre [NOR]	4	0	4	0
Camrose	Continuing Care	Rosehaven LTC Centre	4	2	2	0
Sundre	Continuing Care	Sundre Senior Supporting Living	3	3	0	0
Bow Island	Continuing Care	Bow Island Health Centre - LTC [SOU]	3	3	0	0
Fort Macleod	Continuing Care	Extendicare Fort Macleod [SOU]	3	3	0	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Millrise Place	3	3	0	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Chinese Seniors Lodge [EDM]	3	3	0	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Revera Scenic Grande	3	3	0	0
Three Hills	Continuing Care	Three Hills Health Centre	3	1	2	0
Mayerthorpe	Continuing Care	Pleasant View Lodge - Mayerthorpe	3	1	2	0
Gibbons	Continuing Care	Renaissance Homes- Riverside	3	0	3	0

Classification: Protected A

Fairview	Continuing Care	Harvest Lodge [NOR]	3	1	2	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Virginia Park - Lodge [EDM]	3	1	2	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Glastonbury Village	2	2	0	0
Devon	Continuing Care	Devon General Hospital	2	2	0	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Chimo Youth Retreat Centre Home 10	2	1	1	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Millenium Pavillion Seniors Lodge	2	1	1	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Edmonton General Care Centre [EDM]	2	1	1	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Brentwood Care Centre	2	2	0	0
Central	Continuing Care	Chateau Three Hills	2	2	0	0
Vermilion	Continuing Care	Vermilion Valley Lodge	2	2	0	0
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Aspen Ridge by Revera	1	1	0	0
Calgary	Continuing Care	Manor Village at Rocky Ridge	1	1	0	0
St. Paul	Continuing Care	Aspen House Care Residence	1	1	0	0
Blairmore	Continuing Care	York Creek Lodge [SOU]	1	1	0	0
Lloydminster	Continuing Care	Dr.Cooke Extended Continuing Care	1	1	0	0
Rimbey	Continuing Care	Rimbey Hospital & Care Centre - Facility Living [CEN]	1	1	0	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	In & Out Home Rehabilitation Ltd. House 5	1	0	1	0
Edmonton	Continuing Care	Edmonton General Care Centre [EDM]	1	0	1	0
Leduc	Continuing Care	Salem Manor [EDM]	1	1	0	0
Trochu	Continuing Care	St. Mary's Health Care Centre - Supportive Living [CEN]	1	1	0	0
Red Deer	Continuing Care	Catholic Social St. Neri	1	1	0	0
Calgary	Other	The Drop In Centre	171	8	163	0
Calgary	Other	Calgary Remand Centre	154	0	154	0
Drumheller	Other	Drumheller Institution [CEN]	135	20	115	0
Edmonton	Other	City of Edmonton Fire Department	108	3	105	0
Innisfail	Other	Bowden Institution	81	28	53	0
Edmonton	Other	Herb Jamieson Centre- Hope Mission	61	7	54	0
Grande Cache	Other	Grande Cache Institute	49	27	22	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	44	2	42	0

Classification: Protected A

Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	43	4	39	0
Edmonton	Other	Hope Mission Downtown	42	0	42	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	41	2	39	0
Medicine Hat	Other	Medicine Hat Remand [SOU]	37	33	4	0
Calgary	Other	Mustard Seed - Foothills	37	3	34	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Institution for Women	36	17	19	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	33	6	27	0
Lethbridge	Other	Alpha House Shelter and Stabilization Centre	33	6	27	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Other	Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre	32	11	21	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	31	1	30	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	31	1	30	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	29	4	25	0
Calgary	Other	Calgary Alpha House	29	4	25	0
Red Deer	Other	Safe Harbour Society - Shelter (Cannery Row) & Diversion/Outreach Program	28	13	15	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Other	Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre	27	9	18	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Other	Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre	27	8	19	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	27	3	24	0
Edmonton	Other	Bissell Centre	26	2	24	0
Edmonton	Other	The Mustard Seed - Commonwealth Site	26	5	21	0
Bon Accord	Other	Oak Hill Ranch	26	3	23	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	25	0	25	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	25	2	23	0
Edmonton	Other	Hope Mission Spectrum	25	4	21	0
Lethbridge	Other	Lethbridge Correctional Services [SOU]	24	15	9	0
Edmonton	Other	Travel Lodge West ~ Bridge Housing	24	3	21	0
Edmonton	Other	Mustard Seed - Knox Evangelical Church	23	1	22	0
Red Deer	Other	Red Deer Remand Centre [CEN]	21	21	0	0
Edmonton	Other	Stan Daniels Healing Centre	20	0	20	0
Edmonton	Other	Mustard Seed Strathcona Baptist Church Shelter	20	3	17	0
Mclennan	Other	Manoir du Lac	19	15	4	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Institution	18	18	0	0
Grande Prairie	Other	Odyssey House Women's Shelter	18	1	17	0
Calgary	Other	Calgary Young Offender Centre - Female Annex	14	4	10	0
Edmonton	Other	Transitional Housing Program - Edmonton Center for Hope Salvation Army	13	2	11	0
Wetaskiwin	Other	Catholic Social Services St. Gabriel	13	0	13	0

Classification: Protected A

Red Deer	Other	Turning Point Supervised Consumption Site	13	0	13	0
Calgary	Other	142 Scenic Bow Place	12	5	7	0
Calgary	Other	Avenue 15 Youth Distress Shelter	12	0	12	0
Calgary	Other	Children's Cottage Brenda's House	12	1	11	0
Peace River	Other	Peace River Regional Women's Shelter	11	11	0	0
Calgary	Other	Calgary Correctional Centre	11	5	6	0
Ponoka	Other	The Centennial Centre [CEN]	11	8	3	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	11	0	11	0
Grande Prairie	Other	Wapiti House	11	5	6	0
Red Deer	Other	Michener Services- 119 Michener Crescent [CEN]	11	0	11	0
Wetaskiwin	Other	Catholic Social Services St Raphael	10	0	10	0
Red Deer	Other	Michener Services - 11 A4 Michener Way [CEN]	10	0	10	0
Edmonton	Other	WIN House #2	10	1	9	0
Calgary	Other	Salvation Army - Centre of Hope	9	0	9	0
Red Deer	Other	Michener Services - 11 A2 Michener Way [CEN]	9	1	8	0
Red Deer	Other	CENTRAL ALBERTA WOMEN'S EMERGENCY SHELTER	9	1	8	0
Edmonton	Other	Wings of Providence Society	8	4	4	0
Edmonton	Other	La Salle Second Stage Shelter	8	2	6	0
Edmonton	Other	Catholic Social Services St. Cecilia	8	2	6	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	8	0	8	0
St. Paul	Other	St. Paul Abilities Network Home 10	8	0	8	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Other	Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre	8	0	8	0
Calgary	Other	Enviros Wilderness Schools Association Connects	7	7	0	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Other	Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre	7	2	5	0
Strathmore	Other	Woods Homes Willow House	7	7	0	0
Edmonton	Other	Excel Society - Group Home 18	7	5	2	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	7	4	3	0
Calgary	Other	Close to Home Achievement Place 1	7	0	7	0
Edmonton	Other	Residential and Support Services King Edward Park	7	0	7	0
Calgary	Other	Trellis Banff Trail Group Home	7	1	6	0
Calgary	Other	Mustard Seed - First Alliance Church	7	3	4	0
Edmonton	Other	McMan Youth Family Community Services- Belmont	7	0	7	0
Edmonton	Other	Edmonton Remand Centre	7	0	7	0
Wetaskiwin	Other	Mustard Seed Wetaskiwin Warming Shelter	7	2	5	0

Classification: Protected A

Calgary	Other	Edmonton Isolation Facility (STAFF) - Travelodge South, operated by Boyle Street Community Services	7	2	5	0
Edmonton	Other	Catholic Social Services - St. Rita	7	0	7	0
Calgary	Other	Inn From The Cold - Main Site	7	1	6	0
Medicine Hat	Other	Core Licensed Group Home	6	6	0	0
Central	Other	Michener Services	6	0	6	0
Lac La Biche	Other	Hope Haven Women's Shelter	6	2	4	0
Edmonton	Other	Coliseum Inn	6	3	3	0
Red Deer	Other	Michener Services - 87 Michener Green [CEN]	6	0	6	0
Olds	Other	Accredited Supports to the Community Residence 2	6	0	6	0
Red Deer	Other	Central Alberta's Safe Harbour Society [CEN]	6	0	6	0
Calgary	Other	Children's Cottage - Crisis Nursery	6	2	4	0
Calgary	Other	Inn From the Cold Satellite Location	6	1	5	0
Edmonton	Other	Excel Society Group Home 19	5	5	0	0
Grande Prairie	Other	Signature Support Services 62nd East	5	4	1	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Other	Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre	5	0	5	0
Calgary	Other	Golden Key Supportive Living	5	4	1	0
Grande Prairie	Other	Signature Support Services 62 West	5	0	5	0
Edmonton	Other	Excel Society Group Home 44	5	4	1	0
Hinton	Other	Pine Valley Lodge [NOR]	5	0	5	0
Edmonton	Other	Glenwood Group Home	4	4	0	0
Calgary	Other	Sister's Care Group Home	4	4	0	0
Peace River	Other	Peace River Correctional Centre	4	4	0	0
Innisfail	Other	Advance Society Innisfail: Support for Developmentally Disabled [CEN]	4	3	1	0
Slave Lake	Other	Community Friendship Temporary Mat Program	4	4	0	0
Calgary	Other	Alberta Home Care-Site 1-Tarawood	4	3	1	0
Edmonton	Other	Family Connections Comfort House	4	1	3	0
Lethbridge	Other	Bridges Day Program	4	2	2	0
Edmonton	Other	Lacreche Home	4	2	2	0
Calgary	Other	Waverley House Personal Care Home #259	4	0	4	0
Calgary	Other	Excel Discovery	4	0	4	0
Calgary	Other	YWCA Mary Dover House	4	0	4	0
Ab	Other	Action Group Enhanced Housing	4	1	3	0
Edmonton	Other	Excel Society Group Home 35	4	0	4	0
Calgary	Other	CSPD 72 St	3	0	3	0
Medicine Hat	Other	Women's Shelter Society	3	2	1	0
Grande Prairie	Other	Signature Support Services 107	3	2	1	0

Classification: Protected A

Sturgeon County	Other	Kihew House	3	1	2	0
Edmonton	Other	Excel Society Group Home 46	3	0	3	0
Edmonton	Other	Residential and Support Services	3	0	3	0
Calgary	Other	Millhurst Community Home Calgary Women's Emergency Shelter	2	2	0	0
High Prairie	Other	High Prairie Youth Assessment Centre	2	2	0	0
Edmonton	Other	Chimo 2	2	0	2	0
Edmonton	Other	Unlimited Potential Community Services Alder House	2	0	2	0
Fort Saskatchewan	Other	Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre	2	0	2	0
Edmonton	Other	Winnifred Stewart Adult Group Home Residence 7	2	1	1	0
Calgary	Other	Atria Canyon Meadows Retirement	2	1	1	0
Red Deer	Other	St. Neri Timberlands - Banff Unit	2	0	2	0
Calgary	Other	L'Arche Calgary Group Home-Annapurna	1	1	0	0
Edmonton	Other	Hope Cottage Inc- Residence #1	1	1	0	0
Calgary	Other	Proverbium Homes 5	1	1	0	0
Wetaskiwin	Other	Wetaskiwin and District Association for Community Services Residence 1	1	1	0	0
Wetaskiwin	Other	Wetaskiwin and District Association for Community Services Residence 2	1	1	0	0
Calgary	Other	Vecova Bell Street	1	1	0	0
Edmonton	Other	John Howard Society - Journey Home	1	1	0	0
Edmonton	Other	Medihome House #7	1	1	0	0
Sherwood Park	Other	Robinhood Association Residence #18	1	1	0	0
Calgary	Other	Brenda Strafford Centre Shelter	1	1	0	0
14315 Evergreen Street Sw, Calgary Ab	Other	A Omega 6	1	0	1	0
Morinville	Other	Jessie's House	1	1	0	0
Edmonton	Other	HF Resources Kilkenny House	1	0	1	0
Edmonton	Other	Mustard Seed Trinity Lutheran Church Shelter	1	1	0	0
Central	Other	up community services doreen johnson	1	0	1	0
Wainwright	Other	Catholic Social Services- St. Louise House	1	0	1	0
Wainwright	Other	Catholic Social Services- St. Patrick House	1	0	1	0
Red Deer	Other	Michener Services - 91 Michener Green [CEN]	1	1	0	0
Alberta	All	All	11316	2678	8490	148

Classification: Protected A

Table 6: Summary of the closed outbreaks

Location Type	Alberta	Calgary	Central	Edmonton	North	South	Unknown
Acute Care	406	103	62	180	38	23	0
Continuing Care	1291	531	184	324	111	140	1
Other	2795	1116	227	943	350	158	1
School (K-12)	2458	860	306	731	383	178	0
Total	6950	2610	779	2178	882	499	2

COMMUNICATIONS UPDATE

Classification: Protected A

TAB 10

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights | New Cases | Total Cases | Characteristics | Vaccine Outcomes | Severe outcomes | Comorbidities | Healthcare capacity | Geospatial | Travel history | Laboratory testing | Variants of Concern | Data export | Data notes

1623 current hospitalizations

129 current ICU

3,686 total deaths

28,265 active cases

34.11% percent positivity, 7-day average

78 years average age at death

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights | New Cases | Total Cases | Characteristics | Vaccine Outcomes | Severe outcomes | Comorbidities | Healthcare capacity | Geospatial | Travel history | Laboratory testing | Variants of Concern | Data export | Data notes

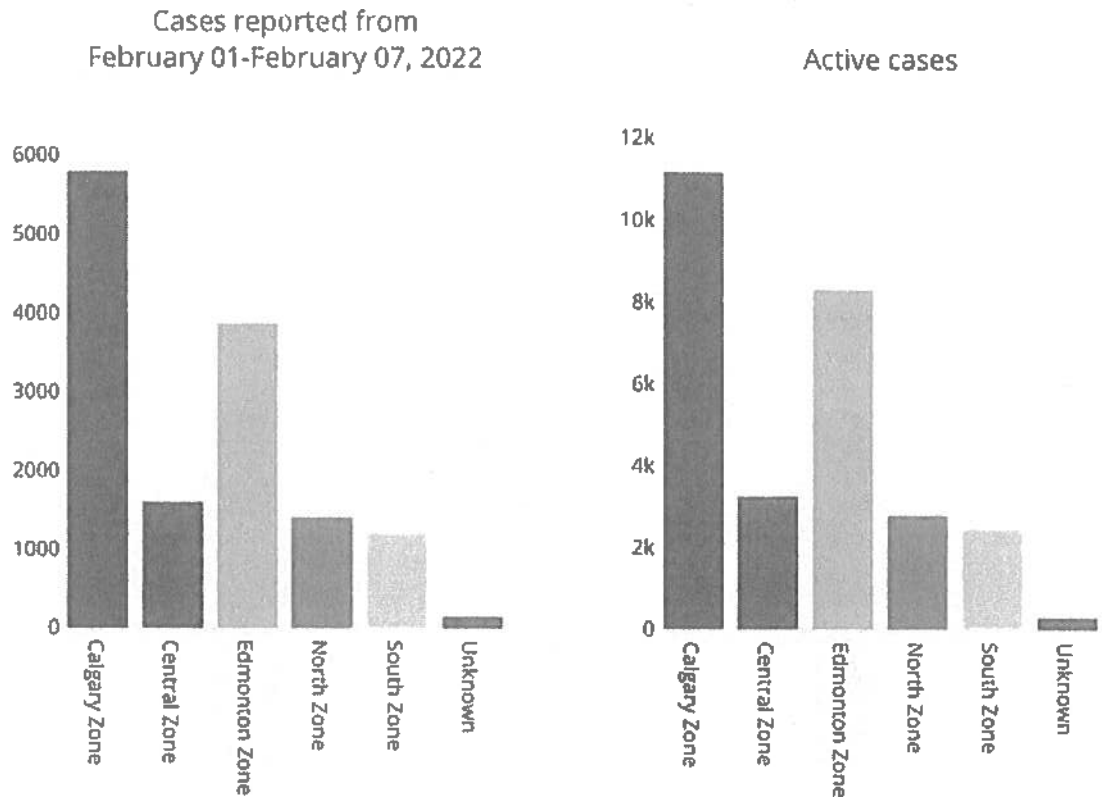


Figure 1: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by zone. First and second panels display new (from February 01-February 07, 2022) and active cases, respectively. Cases without a postal code or incorrect postal codes are labelled as unknown. Cases are under investigation and numbers may fluctuate as cases are resolved.

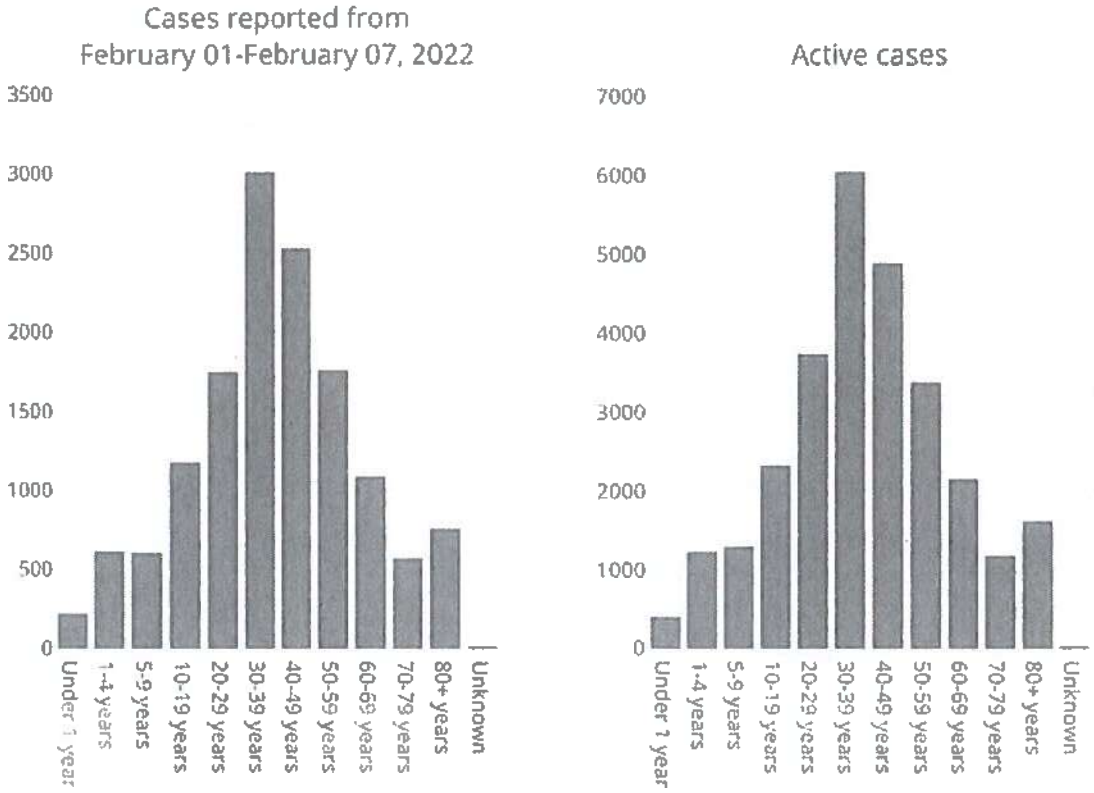

Figure 2: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group. First and second panels display new (from February 01-February 07, 2022) and active cases, respectively. Cases are under investigation and numbers may fluctuate as cases are resolved.

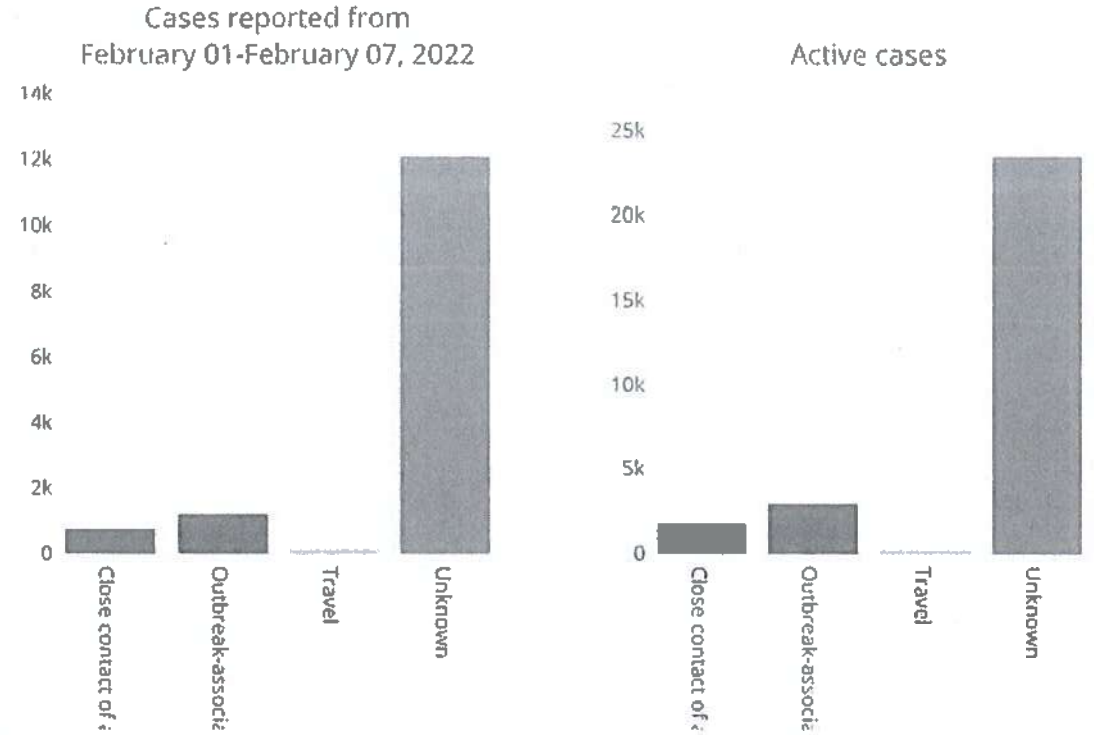

Figure 3: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by route of suspected acquisition. First and second panels display new (from February 01-February 07, 2022) and active cases, respectively. Cases are under investigation and numbers may fluctuate as cases are resolved.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Summary

- There are 503790 laboratory-confirmed, and 5928 probable cases in Alberta.
- There have been 465850/509718 cases report forms received.

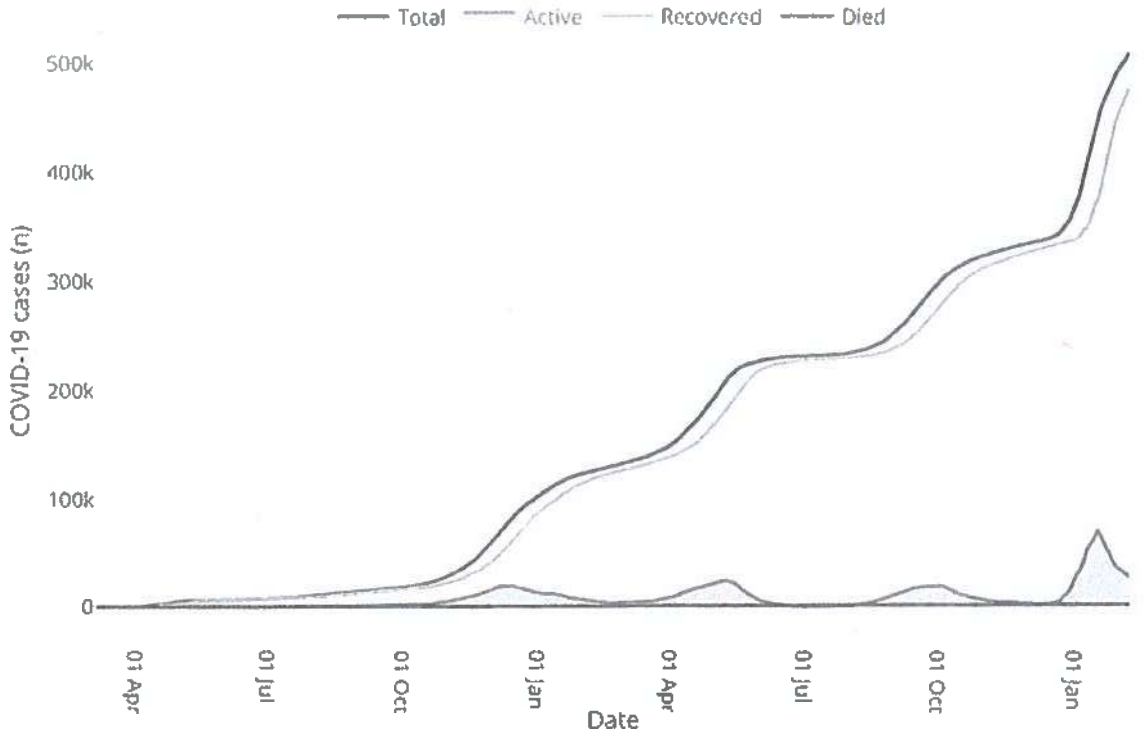

Figure 4: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day and case status. Recovered is based on the assumption that a person is recovered 14 days after a particular date (see data notes tab), if they did not experience severe outcomes (hospitalized or deceased). Cases are under investigation and numbers may fluctuate as cases are resolved. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

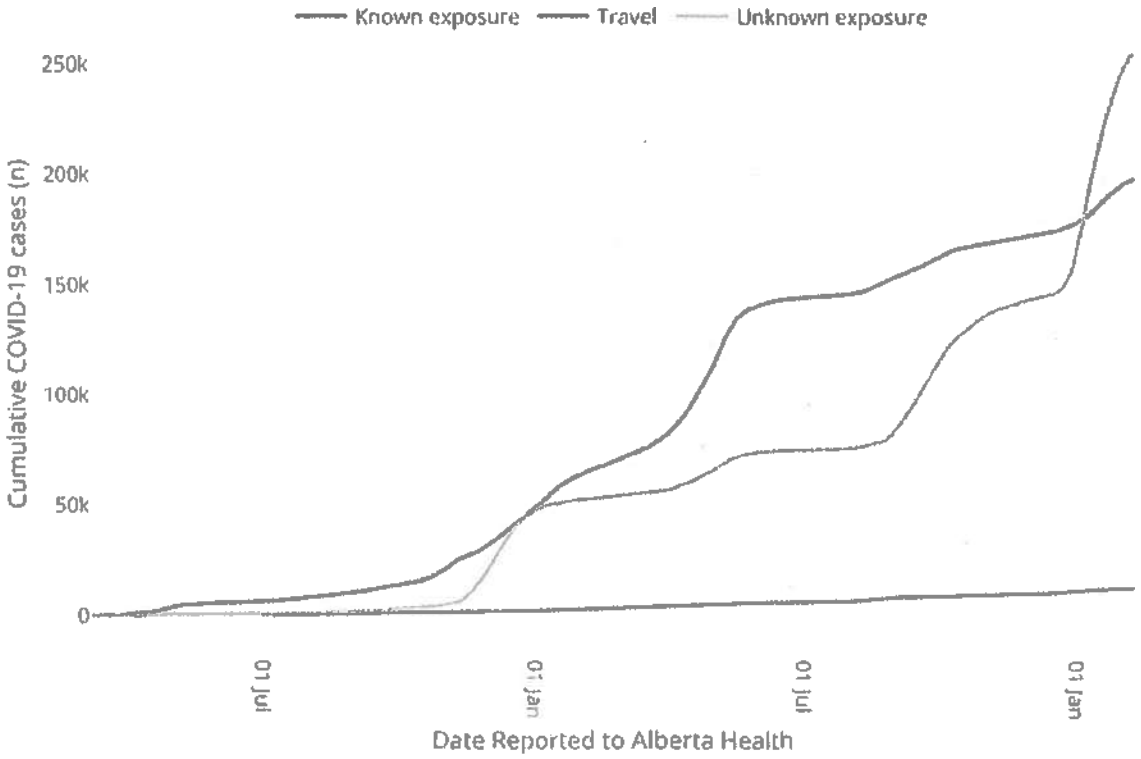

Figure 5: Cumulative COVID-19 cases in Alberta by route of suspected acquisition. Only includes COVID-19 cases where case report forms have been received. Suspected community refers to cases where there is no known epi-link, setting or travel where the person may have acquired infection. This includes cases where the investigation is still ongoing. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

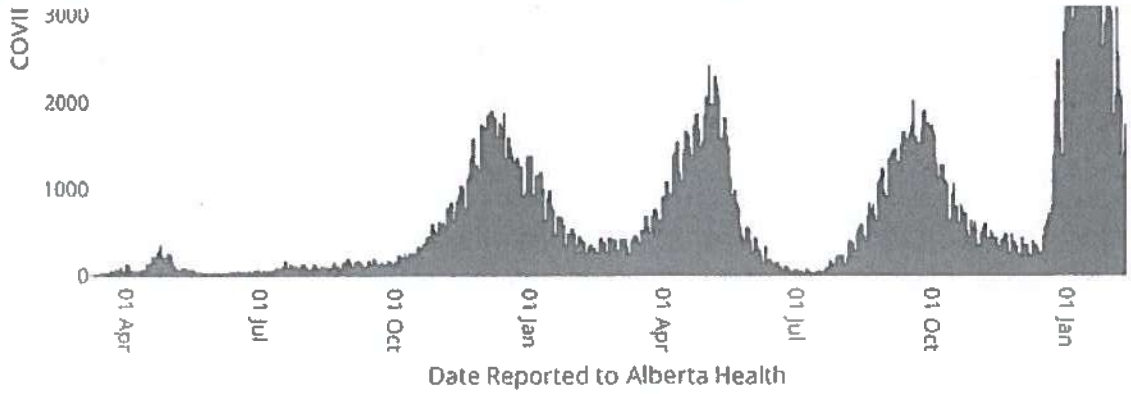

Figure 6: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day and case status. Probable cases include cases where the lab confirmation is pending. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights | New Cases | Total Cases | Characteristics | Vaccine Outcomes | Severe outcomes | Comorbidities | Healthcare capacity | Geospatial | Travel history | Laboratory testing | Variants of Concern | Data export | Data notes

Summary

- The median age range is 34 years (0-121)

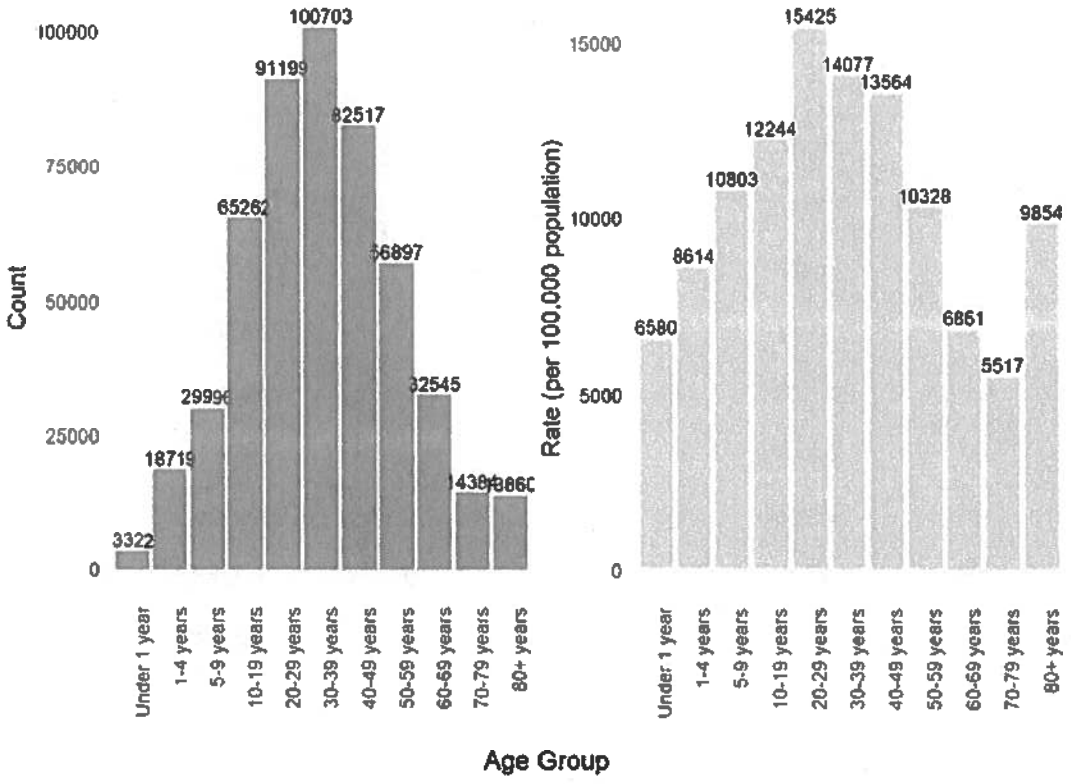

Figure 7: Number and rate of COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group

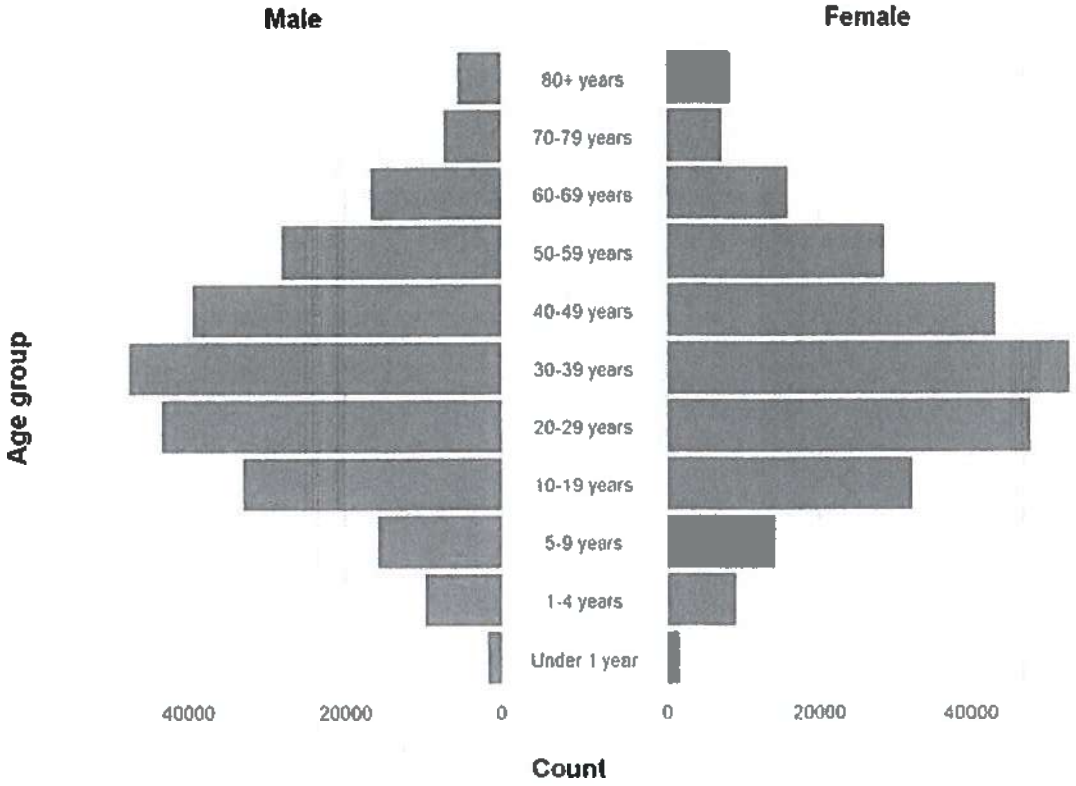

Figure 8: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group and gender

Table 1. COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group and gender

	Gender
	Female		Male		Unknown		All
Age	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent
Under 1 year	1,510	0	1,807	0	5	0	3,322	1
1-4 years	8,964	2	9,744	2	11	0	18,719	4
5-9 years	14,163	3	15,823	3	10	0	29,996	6
10-19 years	32,328	6	32,873	6	61	0	65,262	13
20-29 years	47,778	9	43,304	8	117	0	91,199	18
30-39 years	53,024	10	47,606	9	73	0	100,703	20
40-49 years	43,128	8	39,349	8	40	0	82,517	16
50-59 years	28,694	6	28,175	6	28	0	56,897	11
60-69 years	15,823	3	16,701	3	21	0	32,545	6
70-79 years	7,129	1	7,247	1	8	0	14,384	3
80+ years	8,375	2	5,475	1	10	0	13,860	3
Unknown	160	0	142	0	12	0	314	0

	Gender
	Female		Male		Unknown		All
Age	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent
All	261,076	51	248,246	49	396	0	509,718	100

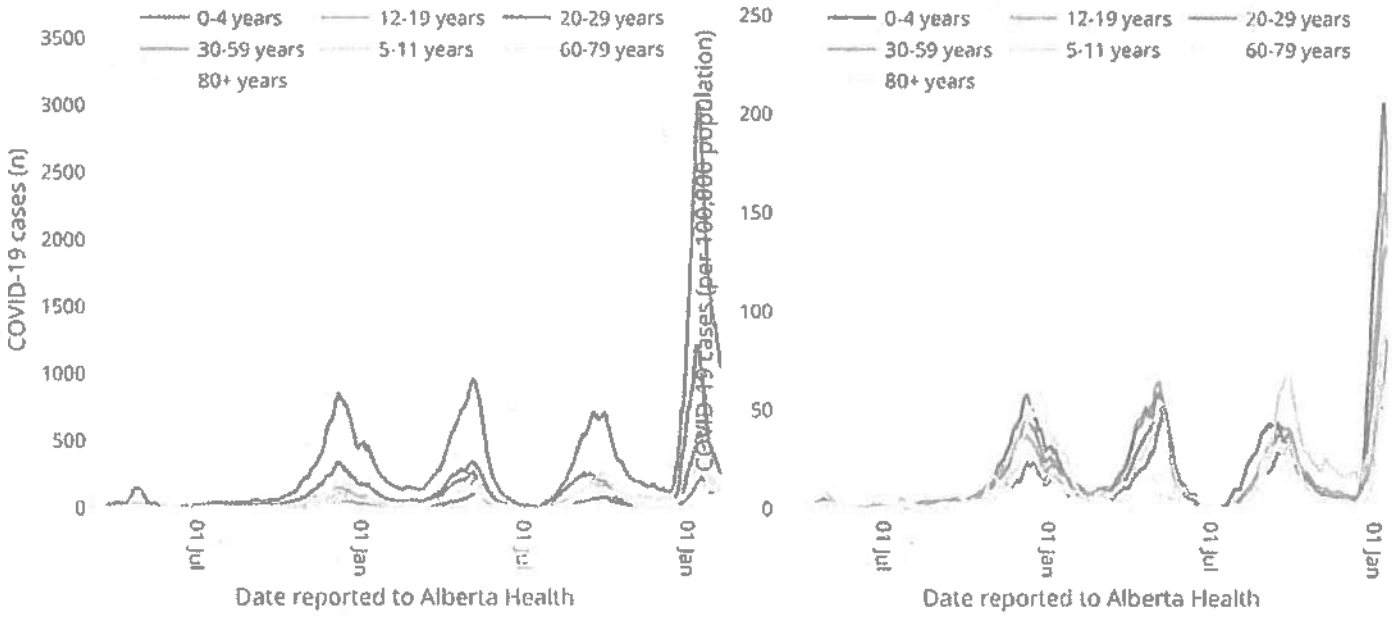

Figure 9: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group. First and second panels display counts (7-day rolling average) and rate per 100,000 (7-day rolling average), respectively.

Healthcare Workers

Table 2. Healthcare workers among COVID-19 cases

	Total	Active	Recovered	Died
Calgary Zone	13981	1471	12506	4
Central Zone	3676	467	3209	0
Edmonton Zone	12174	1131	11040	3
North Zone	2599	331	2267	1
South Zone	2520	420	2098	2
Unknown	2	0	2	0

Note:

Status of Healthcare workers is self-reported and might be different from other sources. Please note these are not necessarily healthcare workers who were infected at work.

	Total	Active	Recovered	Died
Alberta	34952	3820	31122	10

Note:
Status of Healthcare workers is self-reported and might be different from other sources. Please note these are not necessarily healthcare workers who were infected at work.

Symptoms

Table 3. Symptoms reported among COVID-19 cases

Symptom	Count	Percent
Cough	117547	25.2
Headache	87913	18.9
Sore Throat	78306	16.8
Nasal Congestion	70351	15.1
Malaise	58022	12.5
Chills	57320	12.3
Runny Nose	55468	11.9
Fever	51590	11.1
Asymptomatic	46821	10.1
Pain	42062	9
Loss Of Taste/Smell	37842	8.1
Other	31662	6.8
Myalgia	26741	5.7
Difficulty Breathing	22908	4.9
Decreased Appetite	21661	4.6
Diarrhea	17511	3.8
Nausea	15803	3.4
Sneezing	11940	2.6
Dizziness	9836	2.1
Chest Pain	8745	1.9
Vomiting	7252	1.6

Note:
Symptom prevalence based on enhanced case report forms.

Symptom	Count	Percent
Arthralgia	4617	1
Prostration	3735	0.8
Irritability/Confusion/Altered Mental State	3441	0.7
Pharyngeal Exudate	3058	0.7
Conjunctivitis	2195	0.5
Anorexia	1561	0.3
Tachypnea	797	0.2
Abnormal Lung Asculation	703	0.2
Nose Bleed	518	0.1
Hypotension	324	0.1
Seizures	92	0
Encephalitis	24	0
Total Cases With Symptom Data Available	465850

Note:
Symptom prevalence based on enhanced case report forms.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights | New Cases | Total Cases | Characteristics | Vaccine Outcomes | Severe outcomes | Comorbidities | Healthcare capacity | Geospatial | Travel history | Laboratory testing | Variants of Concern | Data export | Data notes

- Since Jan 1, 2021, 0.6% of people with one dose (20,733/3,546,680) were diagnosed with COVID-19 14 days after the first immunization date
- Since Jan 1, 2021, 4.1% of people with two doses (136,426/3,306,246) were diagnosed with COVID-19 14 days after the second immunization date
- Since Jan 1, 2021, 1.8% of people with three doses (27,153/1,499,676) were diagnosed with COVID-19 14 days after the third immunization date
- 54.7% of cases (222,147/406,459) since Jan 1, 2021 were unvaccinated or diagnosed within two weeks from the first dose immunization date
- 67.8% of hospitalized cases (11,379/16,781) since Jan 1, 2021 were unvaccinated or diagnosed within two weeks from the first dose immunization date
- 67.3% of COVID-19 deaths (1,451/2,155) since Jan 1, 2021 were unvaccinated or diagnosed within two weeks from the first dose immunization date

Table 4. COVID-19 vaccine effectiveness in Alberta by vaccine manufacturer

Vaccine	Vaccine Effectiveness: Partial (95% CI)	Vaccine Effectiveness: Complete (95% CI)
AstraZeneca	61% (58 to 63%)	89% (89 to 90%)
Moderna	81% (80 to 82%)	91% (90 to 91%)
Pfizer	75% (74 to 76%)	90% (90 to 90%)

Table 5. COVID-19 vaccine effectiveness against variants of concern in Alberta

Variant of Concern	Vaccine Effectiveness: Partial (95% CI)	Vaccine Effectiveness: Complete (95% CI)
B.1.1.7 UK Variant	76% (75 to 77%)	90% (88 to 91%)
B.1.617 Variant	57% (51 to 63%)	89% (89 to 90%)
P1 Brazilian Variant	72% (67 to 76%)	88% (80 to 93%)

Note:
(a) Vaccine effectiveness estimates include 95% confidence intervals (CI) and describes the protection against symptomatic infection. Vaccine effectiveness for hospitalization and death could have different estimates.
(b) Vaccine effectiveness estimates for some variants are not provided due to limited sample sizes, which make estimates unstable and difficult to interpret. Information on other variants will be provided when estimates become stable.

(c) Partial vaccination: people are considered partially vaccinated 14 days after their first dose of a two dose series (for vaccines that require two doses)

(d) Effectiveness: how well a vaccine prevents the outcome of interest in the real world

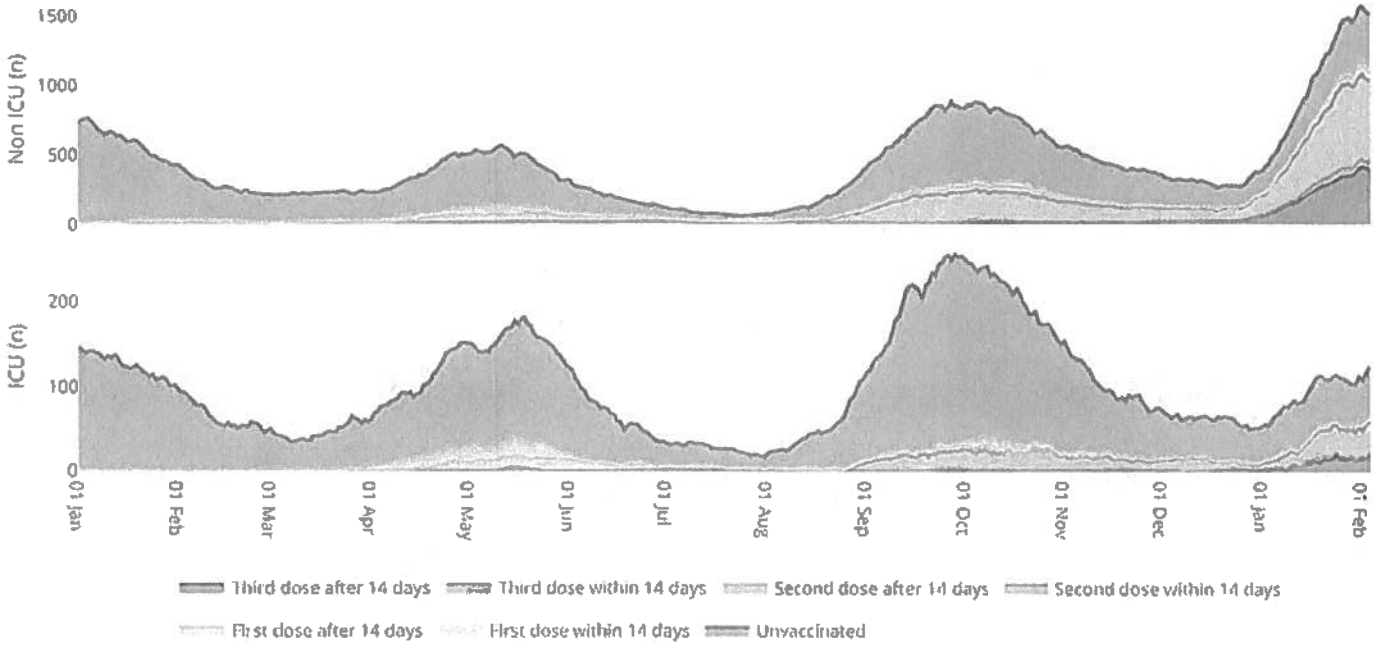

Figure 10: Current non-ICU (top) and ICU(bottom) by vaccine status.

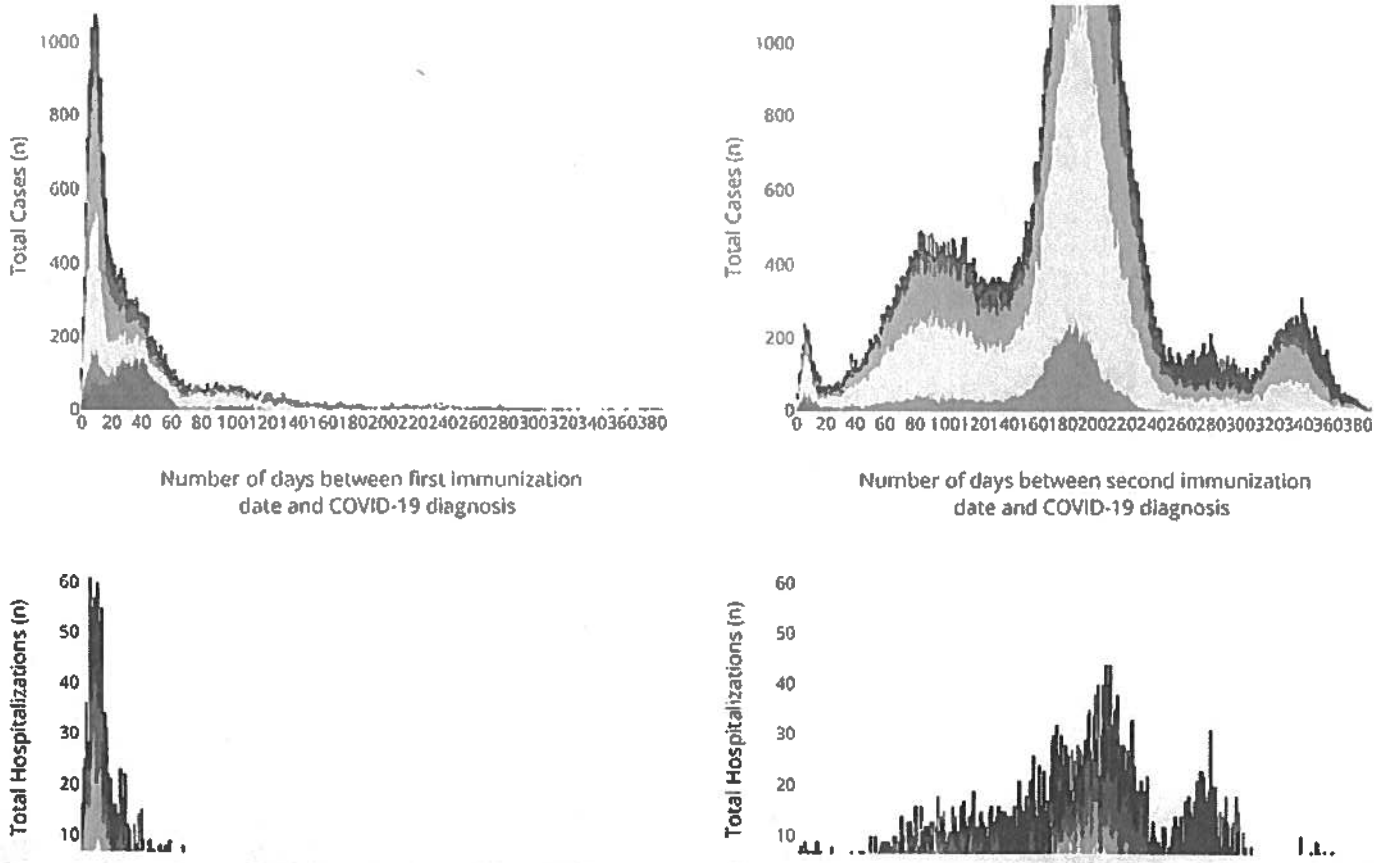
Note:

Time from immunization date to COVID diagnosis date (or Date reported to Alberta Health). COVID-19 hospitalizations reported are not due to immunization events.



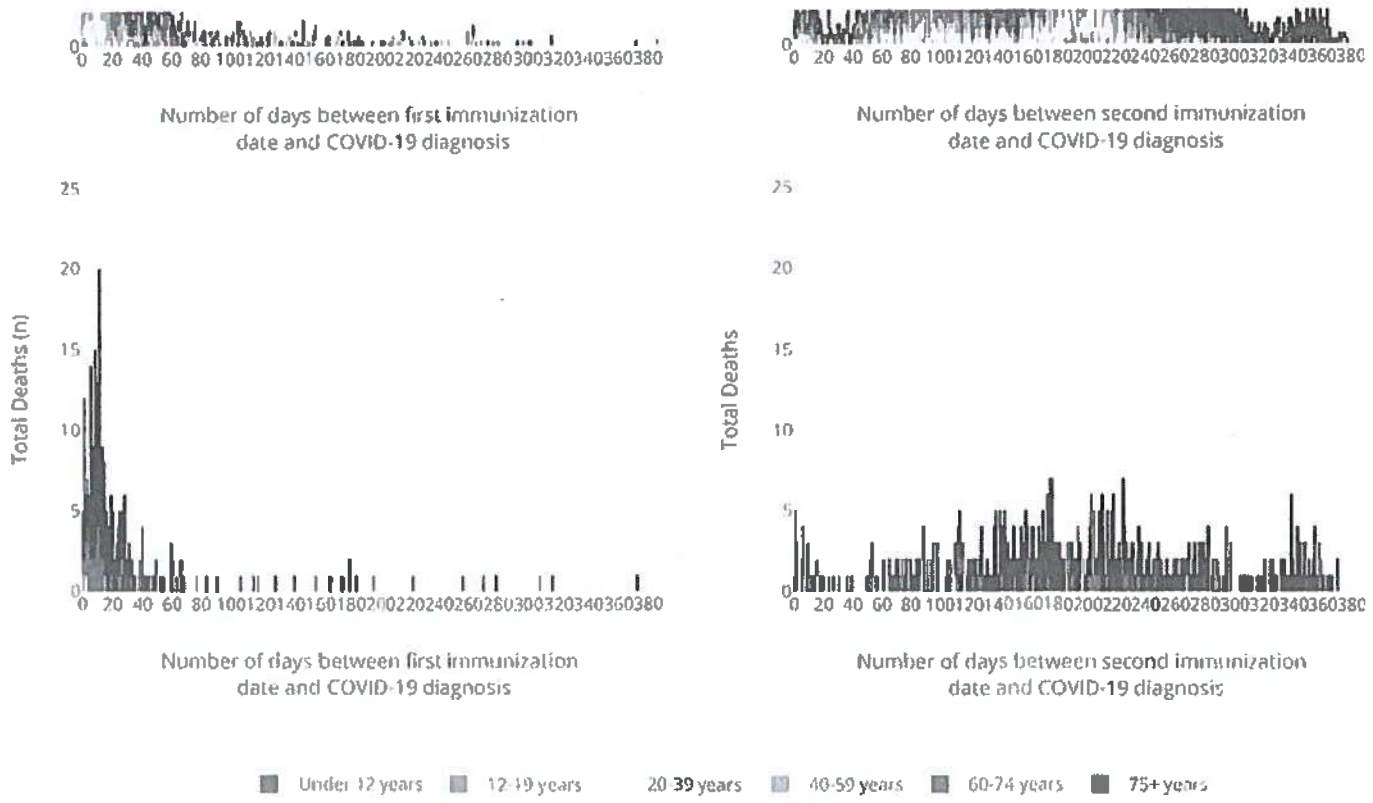


Figure 11: Time from first dose (left) and second dose immunization (right) to COVID-19 diagnosis by age group:
TOP: cases
MIDDLE: of those who became hospitalized
BOTTOM: of those who died from COVID-19
Note: First dose immunization also includes people who became a case prior to their second dose immunization date. COVID-19 hospitalizations reported are not due to immunization events.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Summary

- Average age for COVID cases that died is 78 years (range: 1-107)
- Average age for COVID cases hospitalized with an ICU stay is 56 years (range: 0-99)
- Average age for COVID cases hospitalized is 59 years (range: 0-104)
- Average age for COVID cases not hospitalized is 34 years (range: 0-121)

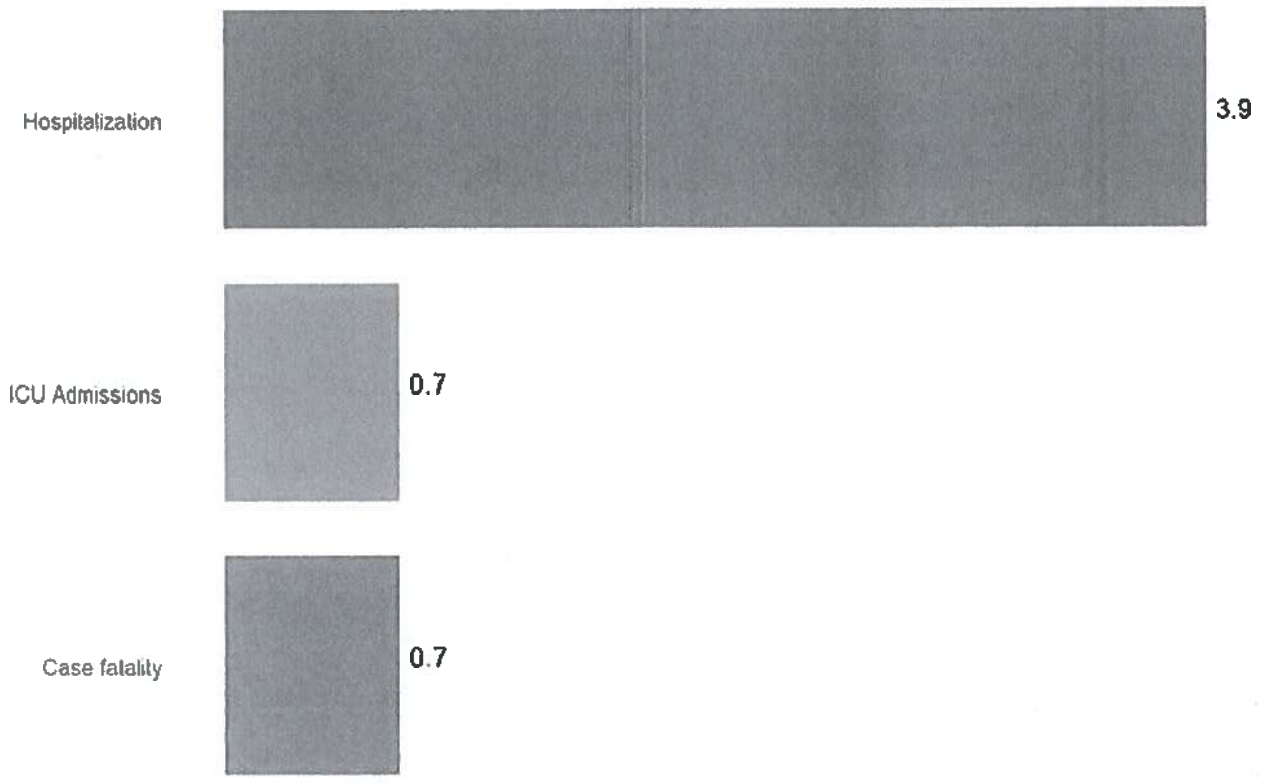

Figure 12: Rate of total hospitalizations, ICU admissions, and deaths among COVID-19 cases in Alberta

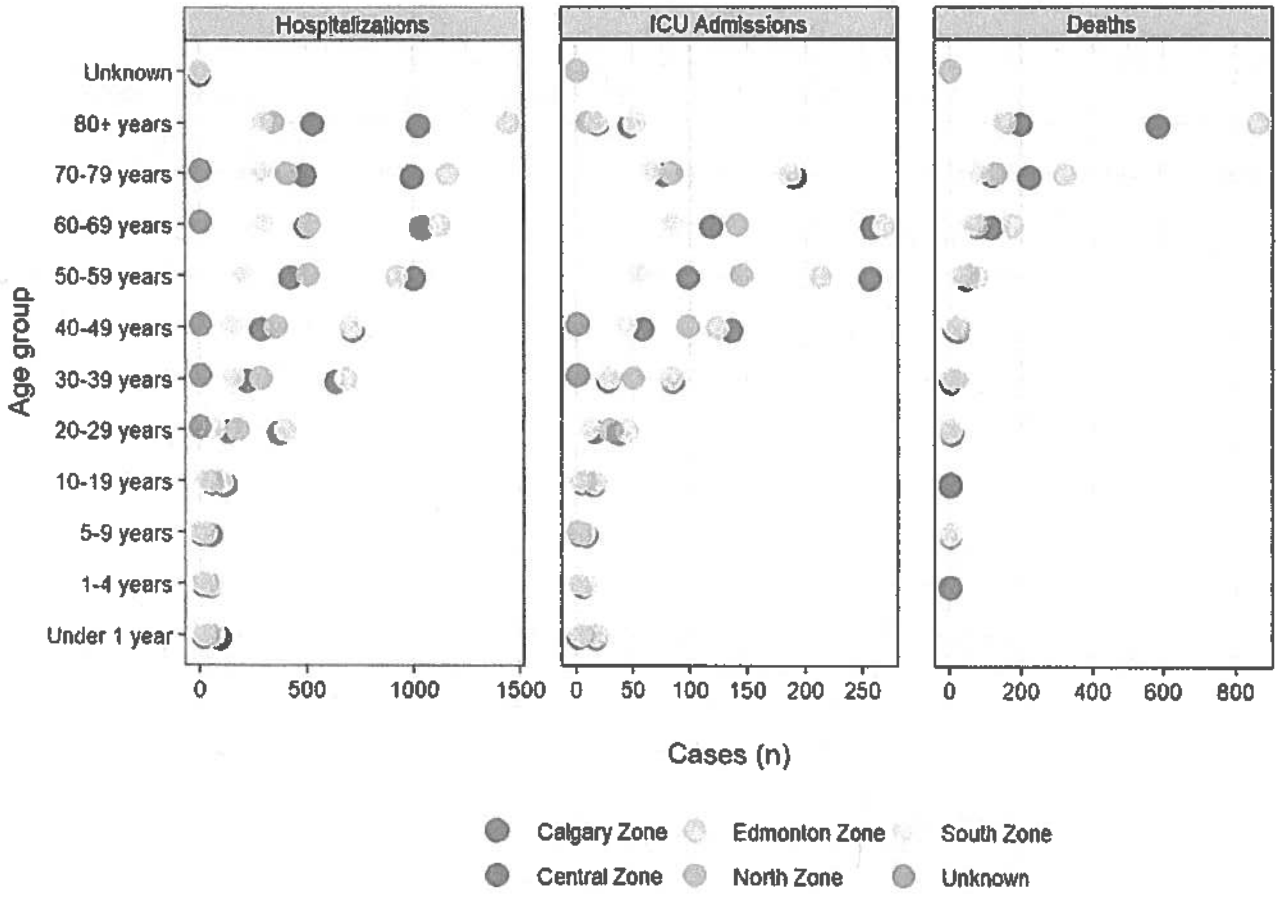

Figure 13: Total hospitalizations, ICU admissions and deaths among COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group and zone. Each ICU admission is also included in the total number of hospitalizations.

Table 6. Total hospitalizations, ICU admissions and deaths (ever) among COVID-19 cases in Alberta by Zone

Zone	Cases	Hospitalized		ICU		Deaths
	Count	Count	Case rate	Count	Case rate	Count	Case rate
Alberta	509718	19640	3.9	3383	0.7	3686	0.7
Calgary Zone	206337	6083	2.9	1054	0.5	998	0.5
Central Zone	50671	2692	5.3	424	0.8	456	0.9
Edmonton Zone	163289	6681	4.1	1021	0.6	1468	0.9
North Zone	56246	2697	4.8	570	1.0	438	0.8

Note:
Based on total hospitalizations and ICU admissions ever.
Each ICU admission is also included in the total number of hospitalization
Zone is based on patient postal code of residence.
Case rate (per 100 cases)

Zone	Cases	Hospitalized		ICU		Deaths
	Count	Count	Case rate	Count	Case rate	Count	Case rate
South Zone	32119	1481	4.6	312	1.0	326	1.0
Unknown	1056	6	0.6	2	0.2	0	0.0

Note:
Based on total hospitalizations and ICU admissions ever.
Each ICU admission is also included in the total number of hospitalization
Zone is based on patient postal code of residence.
Case rate (per 100 cases)

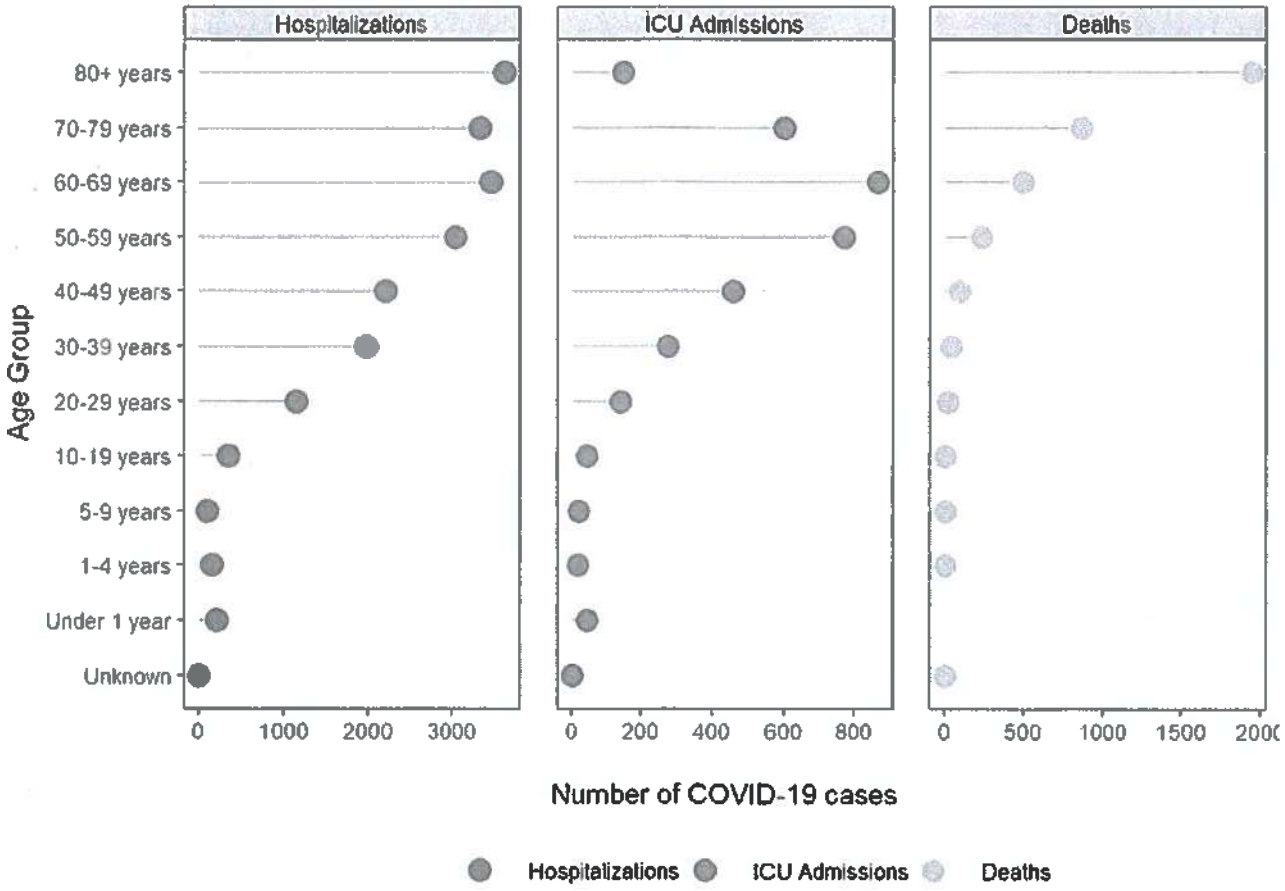

Figure 14: Total hospitalizations, ICU admissions and deaths (ever) among COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group. Each ICU admission is also included in the total number of hospitalizations.This is based on totals rather than current hospitalizations and ICU admissions.

Table 7. Total Hospitalizations, ICU admissions and deaths (ever) among COVID-19 cases in Alberta by age group

Age Group	Cases	Hospitalized	ICU	Deaths

Age Group	Cases	Hospitalized		Pop.	ICU		Pop.	Deaths		Pop.
	Count	Count	Case rate	rate	Count	Case rate	rate	Count	Case rate	rate
Total	509718	19640	3.9	444.3	3383	0.7	76.5	3686	0.7	83.4
Under 1 year	3322	223	6.7	441.7	44	1.3	87.2	0	0.0	0.0
1-4 years	18719	165	0.9	75.9	18	0.1	8.3	1	0.0	0.5
5-9 years	29996	103	0.3	37.1	20	0.1	7.2	2	0.0	0.7
10-19 years	65262	350	0.5	65.7	44	0.1	8.3	2	0.0	0.4
20-29 years	91199	1146	1.3	193.8	138	0.2	23.3	18	0.0	3.0
30-39 years	100703	1981	2.0	276.9	275	0.3	38.4	40	0.0	5.6
40-49 years	82517	2207	2.7	362.8	459	0.6	75.5	93	0.1	15.3
50-59 years	56897	3040	5.3	551.8	768	1.3	139.4	234	0.4	42.5
60-69 years	32545	3459	10.6	729.3	867	2.7	182.8	496	1.5	104.6
70-79 years	14384	3338	23.2	1280.2	602	4.2	230.9	861	6.0	330.2
80+ years	13860	3621	26.1	2574.3	146	1.1	103.8	1937	14.0	1377.1
Unknown	314	7	2.2	NA	2	0.6	NA	2	0.6	NA

Note:

Based on total hospitalizations and ICU admissions ever.

Row percent is out of the number of cases in each age group.

Each ICU admission is also included in the total number of hospitalization

Case rate (per 100 cases)

Population rate (per 100,000 population)

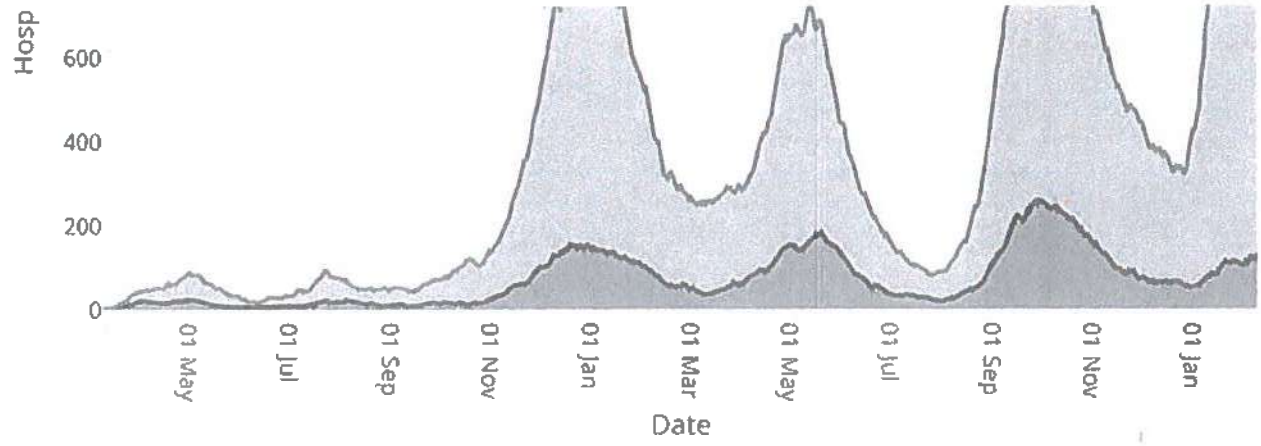

Figure 15: Number of current COVID-19 patients in hospital, ICU and non-ICU

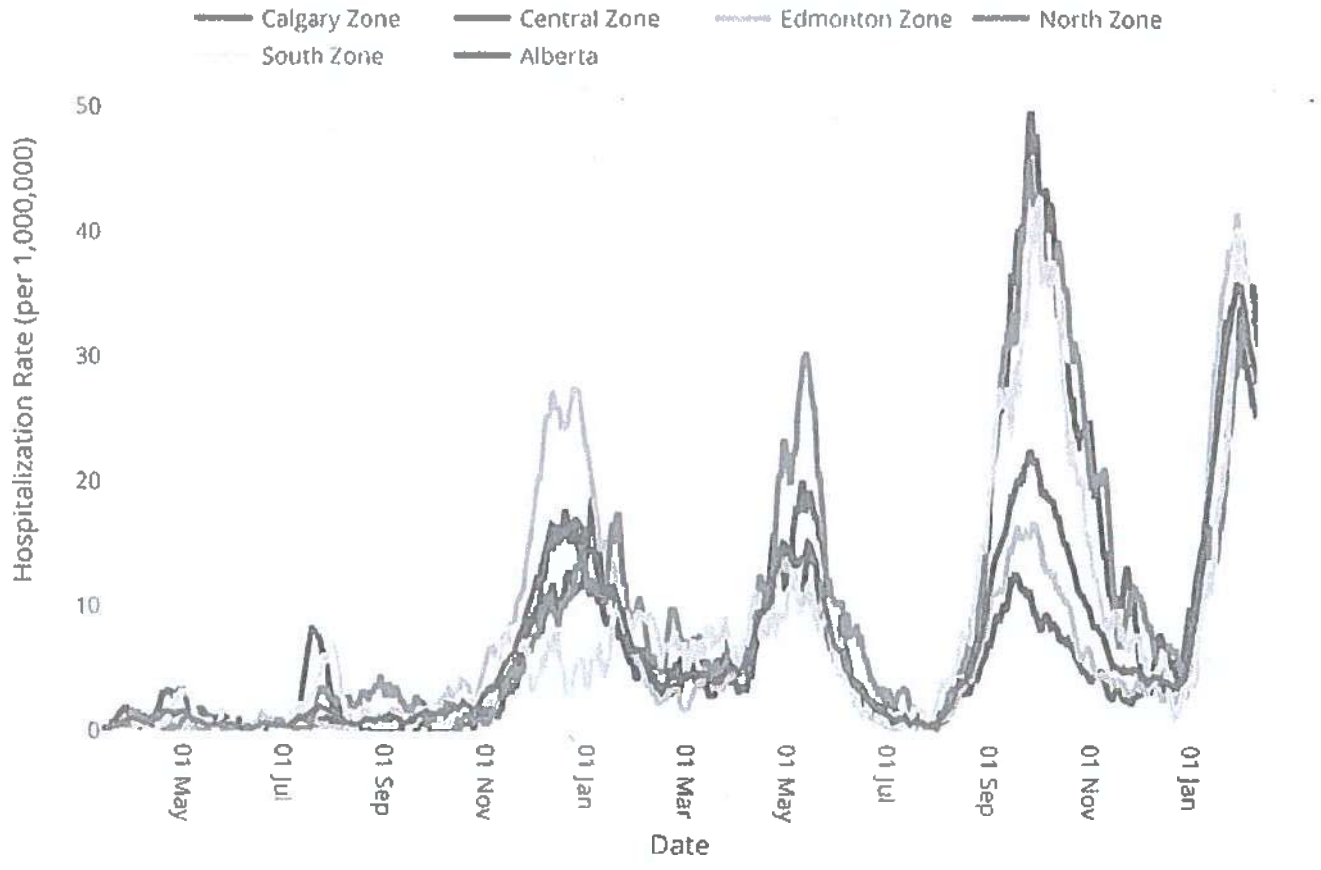

Figure 16: Rate of new hospitalizations (7-day rolling average, average of current day and previous six days) by admission date in Alberta and by zone

30

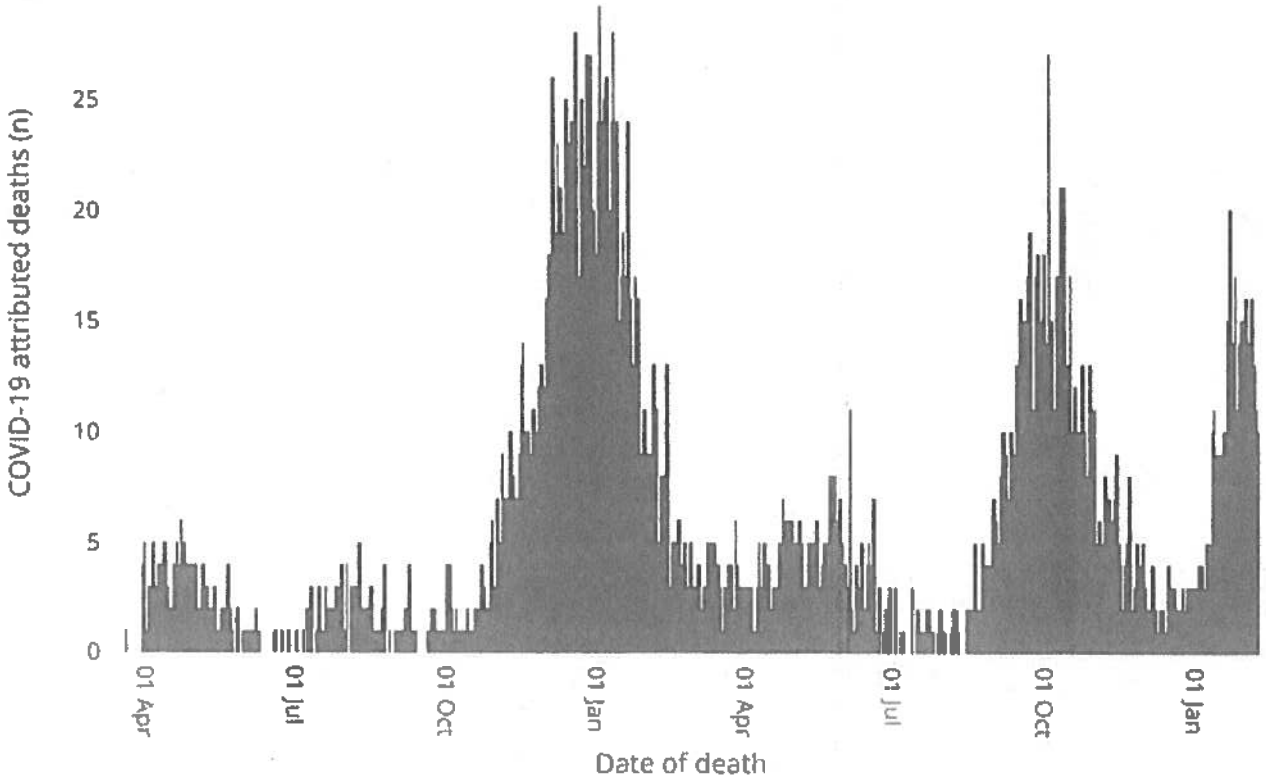

Figure 17: Daily COVID-19 attributed deaths. Data are subject to change; when death date is unavailable the date reported to Alberta Health is used until a death date is known.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights New Cases Total Cases Characteristics Vaccine Outcomes
Severe outcomes Comorbidities Healthcare capacity Geospatial Travel history
Laboratory testing Variants of Concern Data export Data notes

Table 8. Number and percent of health conditions among COVID-19 deaths. Data updated on 2022-02-07.

Condition	Count	Percent
Hypertension	3024	82.0%
Cardio-Vascular Diseases	1951	52.9%
Renal Diseases	1924	52.2%
Diabetes	1663	45.1%
Respiratory Diseases	1459	39.6%
Dementia	1383	37.5%
Cancer	862	23.4%
Stroke	676	18.3%
Liver Diseases	164	4.4%
Immuno-Deficiency Diseases	142	3.9%

Note:
One individual can have multiple conditions.

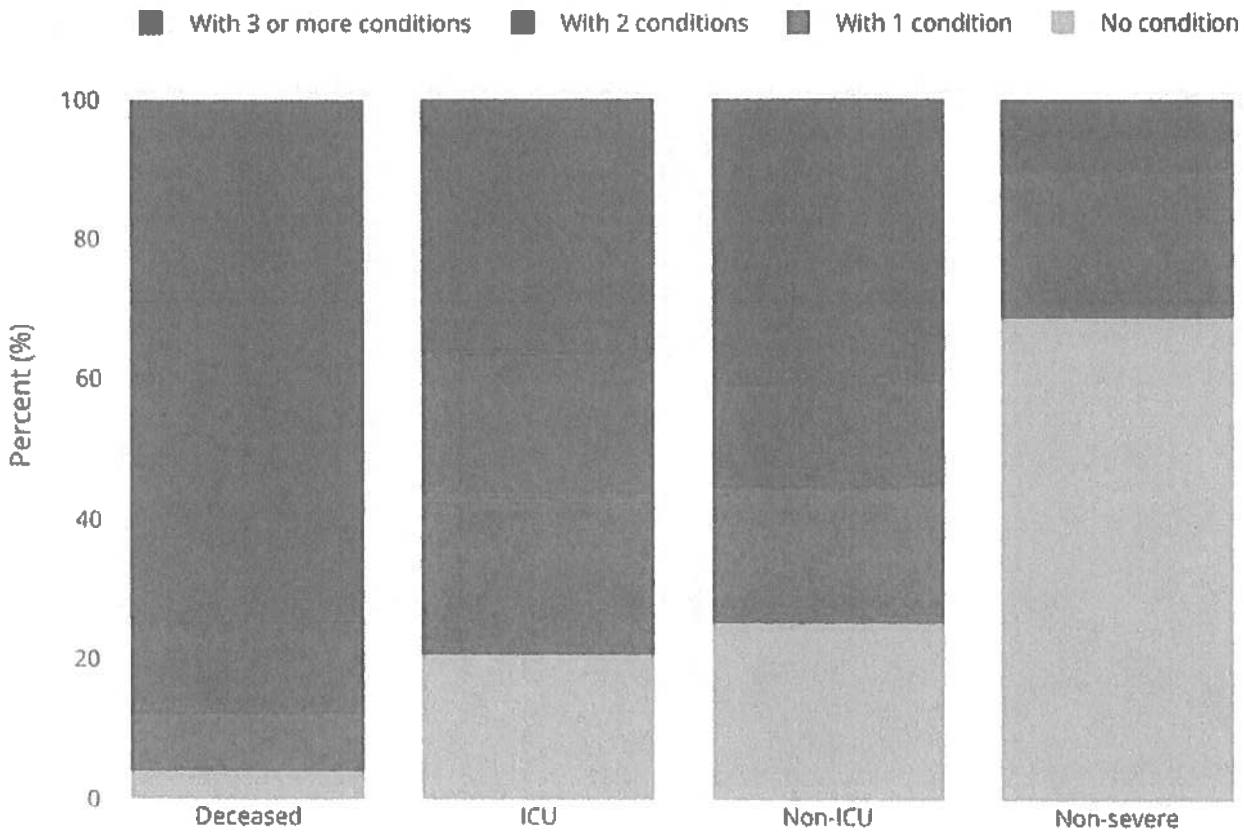

Figure 18: Percent of COVID-19 cases with no comorbidities, one comorbidity, two comorbidities, or three or more comorbidities by case severity (non-severe, hospitalized but non-ICU, ICU but not deceased, and deceased), all age groups and both sexes combined, all Alberta. Comorbitities included are: Diabetes, Hypertension, COPD, Cancer, Dementia, Stroke, Liver cirrhosis, Cardiovascular diseases (including IHD and Congestive heart failure), Chronic kidney disease, and Immuno-deficiency. Data updated on 2022-02-07.

Table 9. Number and percent of COVID-19 cases with no comorbidities, one comorbidity, two comorbidities, or three or more comorbidities by case severity (non-severe, hospitalized but non-ICU, ICU but not deceased, and deceased), all age groups and both sexes combined, Alberta. Comorbitities included are: Diabetes, Hypertension, COPD, Cancer, Dementia, Stroke, Liver cirrhosis, Cardiovascular diseases (including IHD and Congestive heart failure), Chronic kidney disease, and Immuno-deficiency. Data updated on 2022-02-07.

	Non-Severe		Non-ICU		ICU		Deaths
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
No condition	336545	68.8%	3687	25.2%	523	20.7%	148	4.0%
With 1 condition	100184	20.5%	2791	19.1%	579	22.9%	304	8.2%

	Non-Severe		Non-ICU		ICU		Deaths
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
With 2 conditions	30015	6.1%	2410	16.5%	520	20.6%	503	13.6%
With 3 or more conditions	22150	4.5%	5722	39.2%	906	35.8%	2731	74.1%

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights | New Cases | Total Cases | Characteristics | Vaccine Outcomes | Severe outcomes | Comorbidities | Healthcare capacity | Geospatial | Travel history | Laboratory testing | Variants of Concern | Data export | Data notes

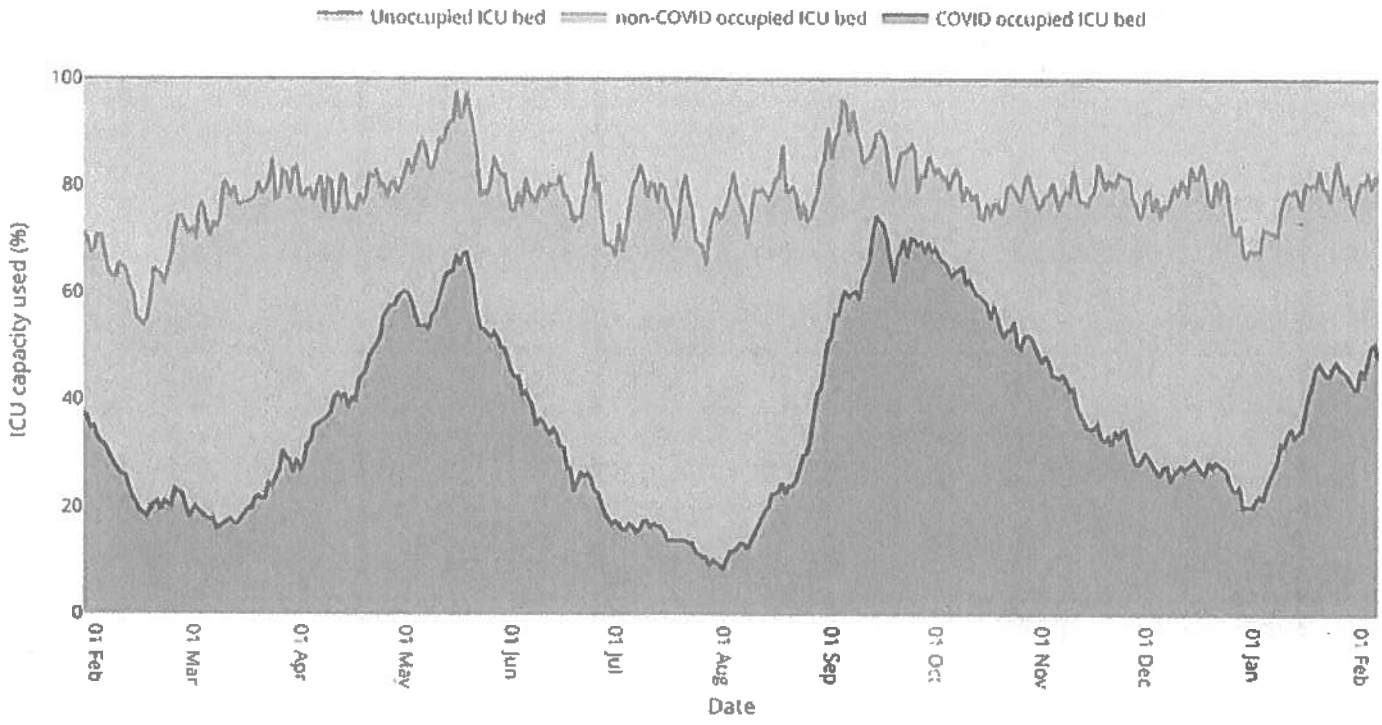

Figure 19: Intensive Care Unit (ICU) bed capacity. Data included may only be available at a lagged interval. As a result, the number of COVID occupied ICU beds on a particular day may not match the number reported elsewhere on the dashboard.

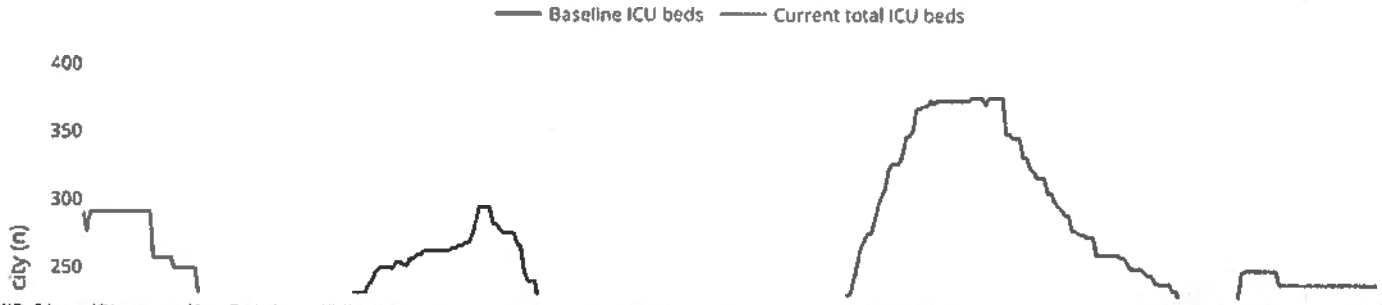

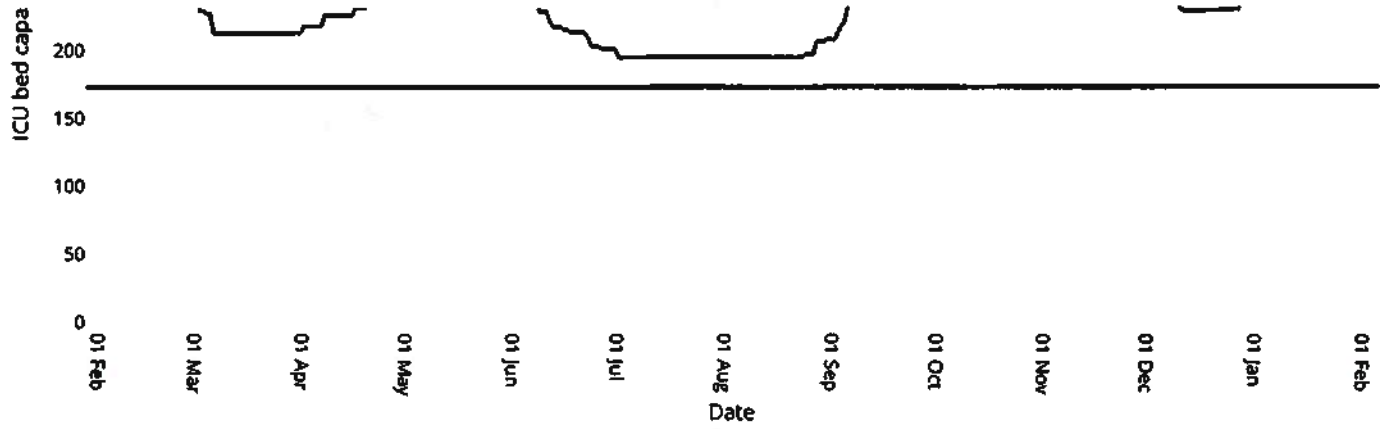

Figure 20: Total ICU bed capacity over time. Data included may only be available at a lagged interval. As a result, the number of COVID occupied ICU beds on a particular day may not match the number reported elsewhere on the dashboard.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Summary

- The percent of cases from the Calgary Zone is 40%

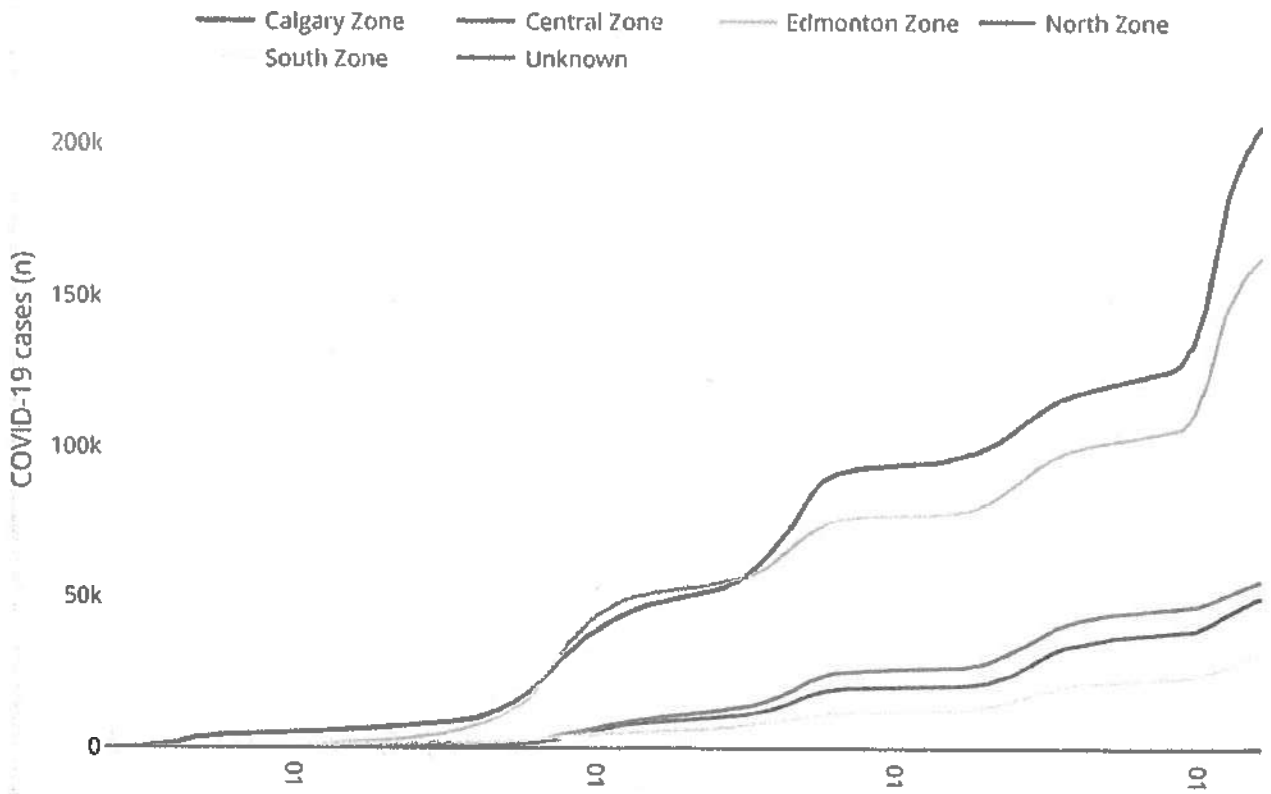

Figure 21: Cumulative COVID-19 cases in Alberta by zone and date reported to Alberta Health. Cases without a postal code or incorrect postal codes are labelled as unknown.

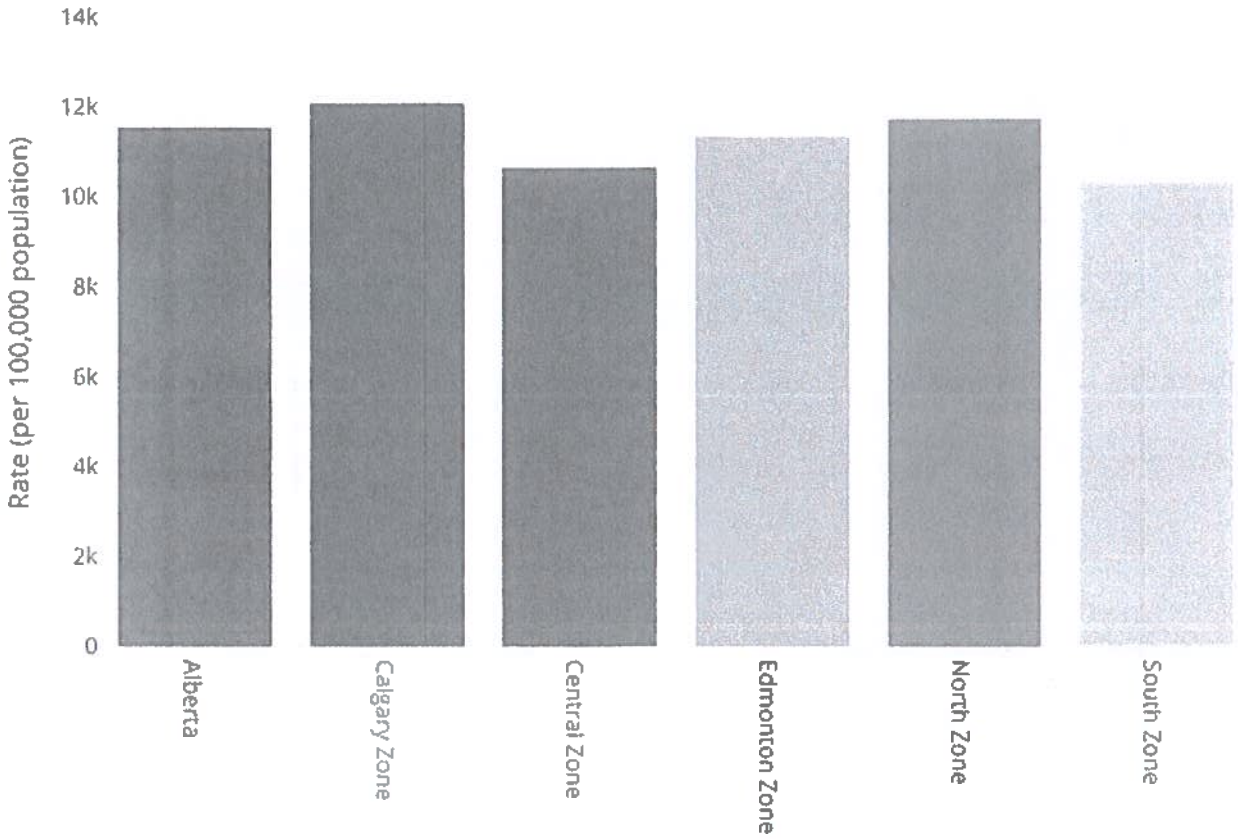

Figure 22: Rate of COVID-19 cases (per 100,000 population) in Alberta and by zone

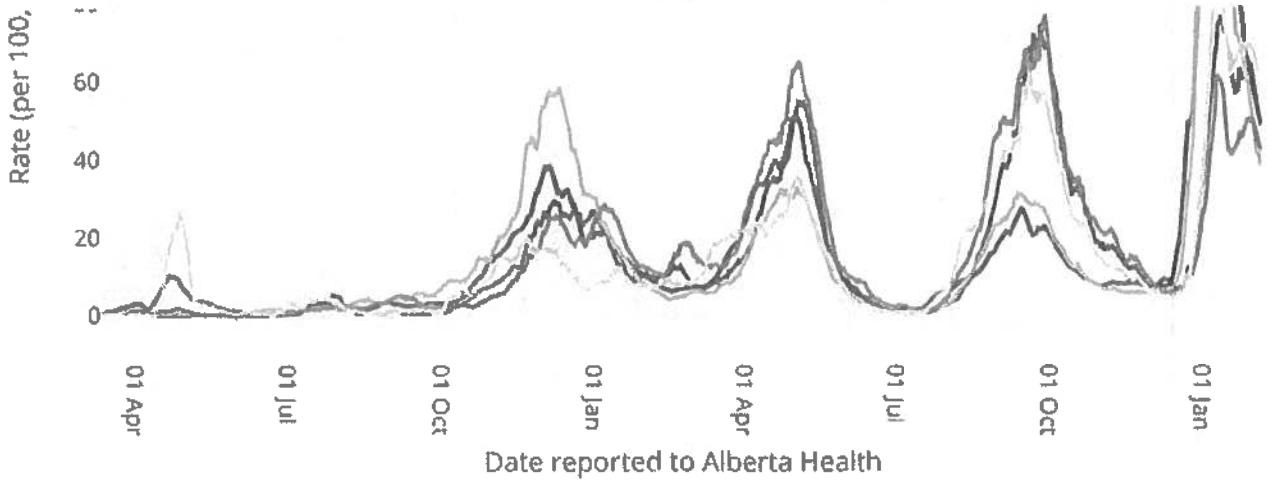

Figure 23: Seven day rolling-average for rates of COVID-19 (per 100,000 population) in Alberta by zone

Table 10. COVID-19 cases in Alberta by zone

Zone	Count	Percent
Calgary Zone	206,337	40
Central Zone	50,671	10
Edmonton Zone	163,289	32
North Zone	56,246	11
South Zone	32,119	6
Unknown	1,056	0
All	509,718	100

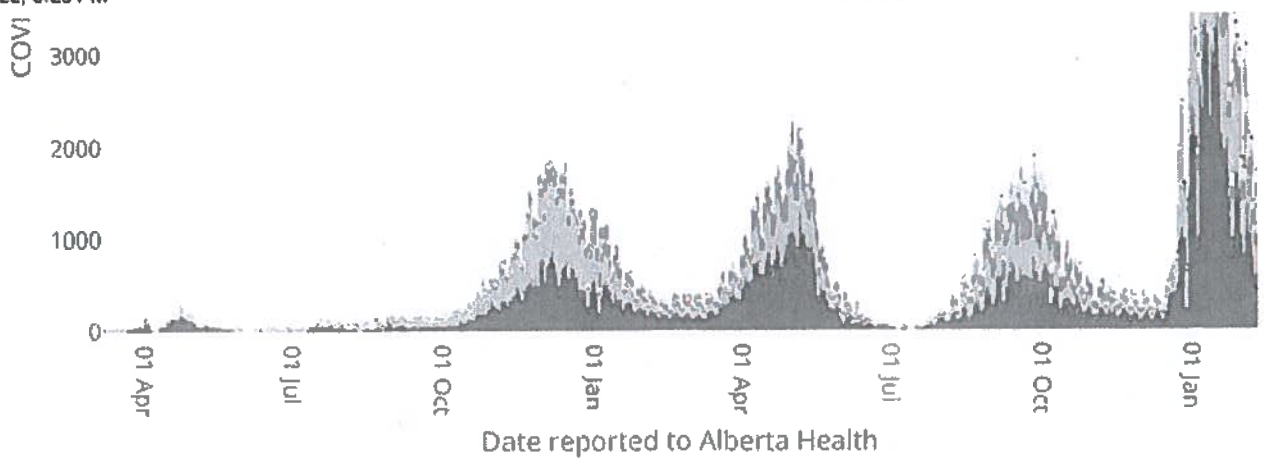

Figure 24: COVID-19 cases in Alberta by zone date reported to Alberta Health

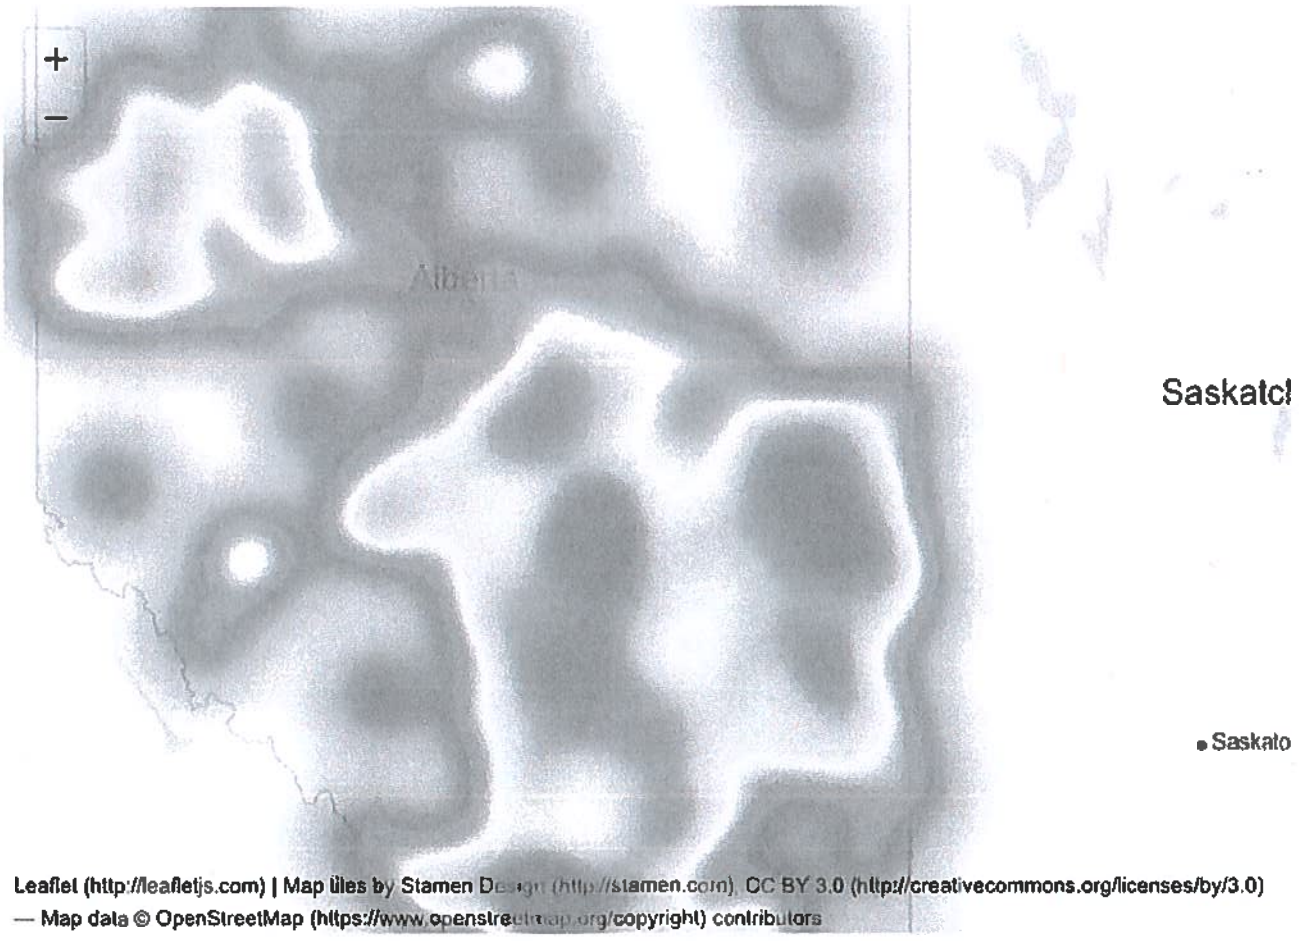
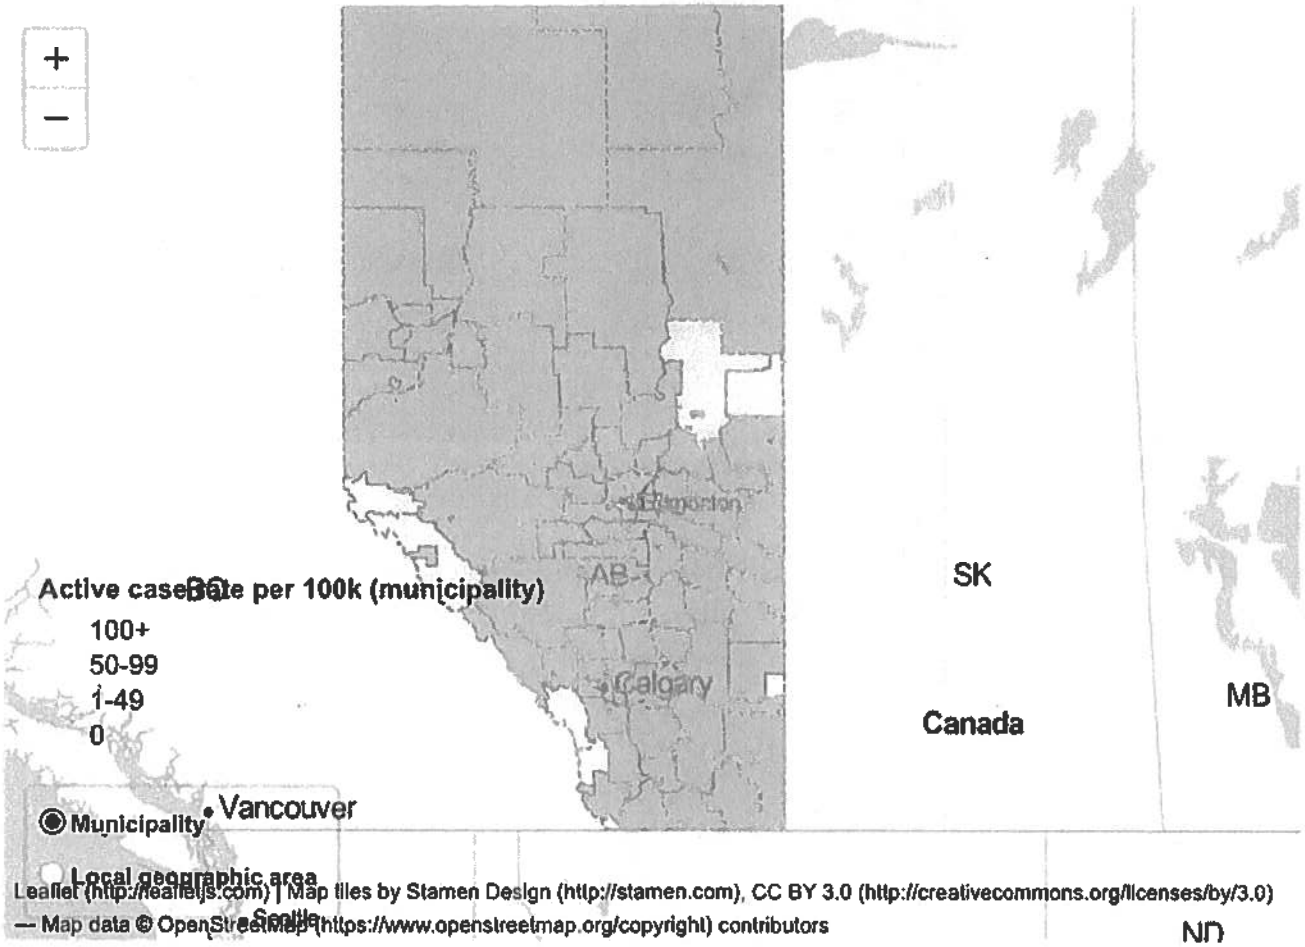
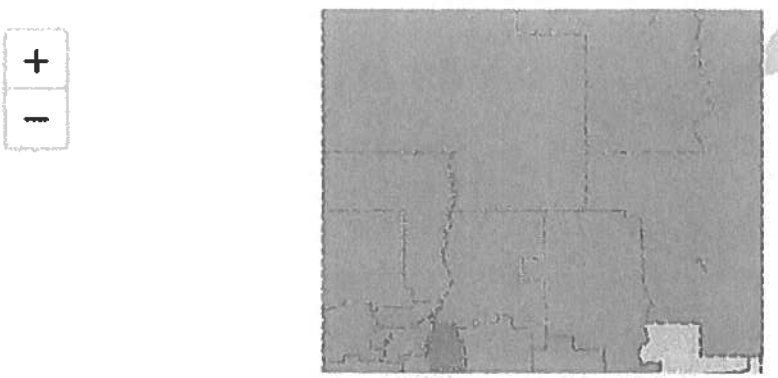
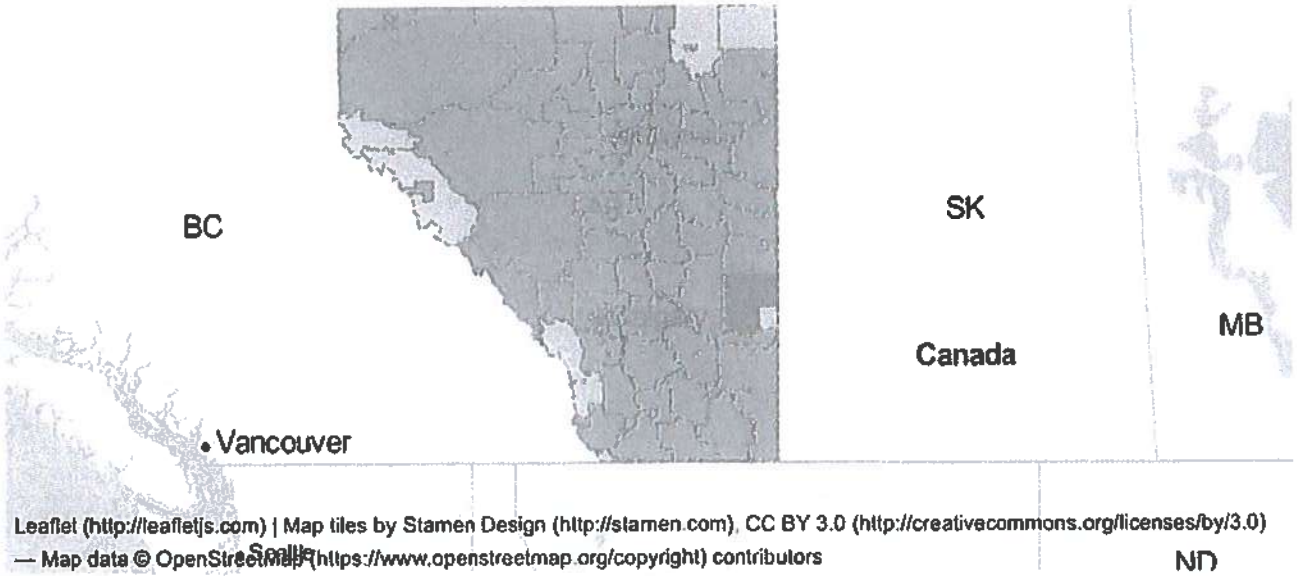


Only active cases are included. Postal codes are not exact locations of cases and are based on patient residence; random noise is applied for privacy. Cases without a postal code or incorrect postal codes are not included. Postal code information missing/invalid for: 379 case(s).



Geographies can be displayed by municipality or local geographic area (LGA). When viewing by municipality, regions are defined by metropolitan areas, cities, urban service areas, rural areas, and towns with approximately 10,000 or more people; smaller regions (i.e. villages, and reserves) are incorporated into the corresponding rural area. Cases without a postal code or incorrect postal codes are not included. Location information missing/invalid for: 2443 case(s).





Comparison restricted to active cases. Unknown exposure defined as cases that are not linked to travel or a known contact/setting of exposure to COVID-19.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Summary

- 1.135610^{4} (2%) were acquired through travel outside of Alberta
- United States was reported the most frequently (n = 2048; 18%).

Table 11. Country of travel among travel-acquired cases

Country	Number (n)	Percent (%)
Domestic only	6,113	54
International	2,900	26
International - USA only	1,926	17
Missing	417	4

Note:
Cases may have travelled to multiple countries

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights | New Cases | Total Cases | Characteristics | Vaccine Outcomes | Severe outcomes | Comorbidities | Healthcare capacity | Geospatial | Travel history | Laboratory testing | Variants of Concern | Data export | Data notes

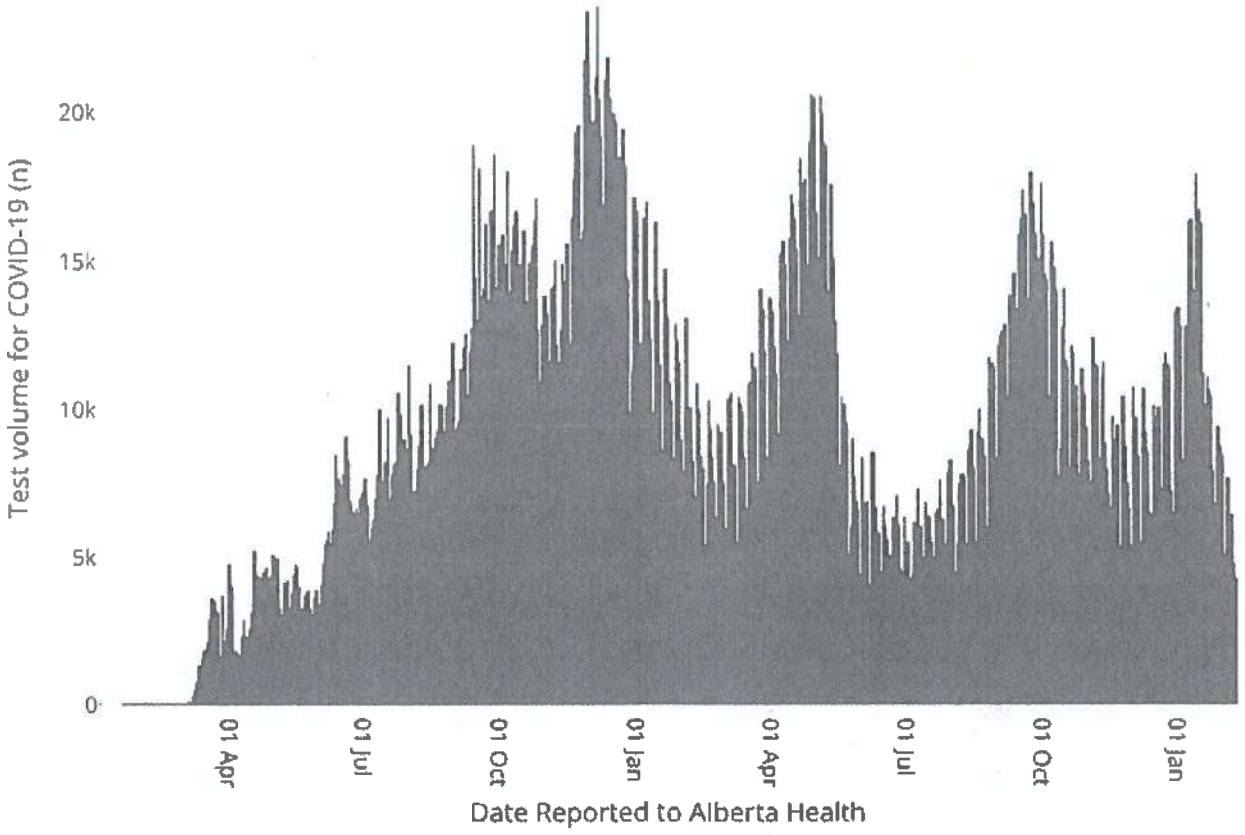


Figure 25: Tests performed for COVID-19 in Alberta by day. Tests can be performed for the same person multiple times.

Table 12. COVID-19 testing in Alberta

	Number (n)
Test volume	6,793,485
People tested	2,717,900

Table 13. People tested for COVID-19 in Alberta by zone

Zone	Count	Percent
Calgary Zone	1,075,920	40
Central Zone	245,643	9
Edmonton Zone	859,300	32
North Zone	260,016	10
South Zone	172,089	6
Unknown	104,932	4
All	2,717,900	100

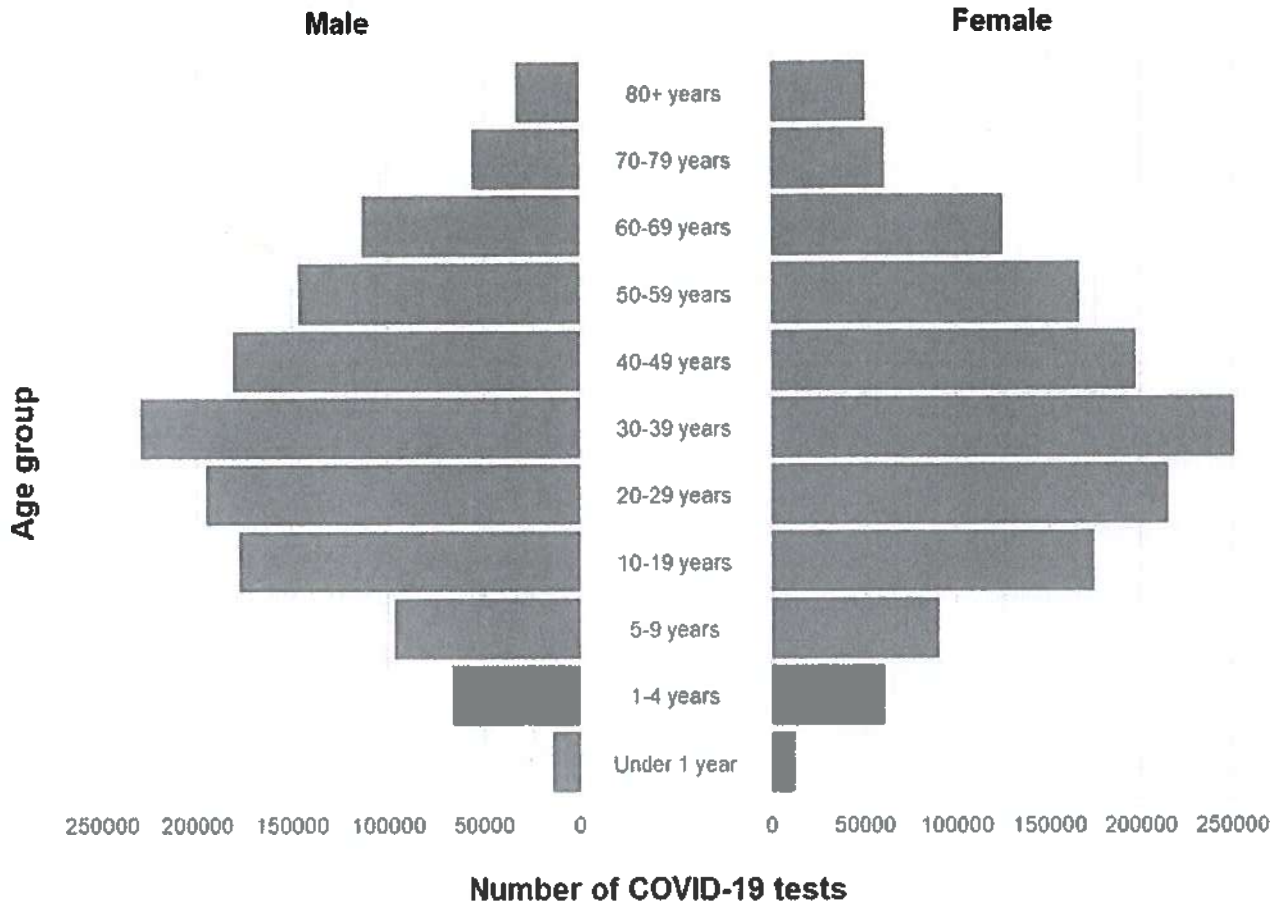

Figure 26: People tested for COVID-19 in Alberta by age group and gender

Table 14. People tested for COVID-19 in Alberta by age group and gender

	Gender
	Female		Male		Unknown		All
Age	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent
Under 1 year	12,447	0	14,436	1	35	0	26,918	1
1-4 years	60,549	2	66,687	2	89	0	127,325	5
5-9 years	89,757	3	96,849	4	135	0	186,741	7
10-19 years	174,373	6	177,583	7	484	0	352,440	13
20-29 years	215,316	8	195,348	7	778	0	411,442	15
30-39 years	251,049	9	229,657	8	768	0	481,474	18

Note:
Count represents the number of people tested

	Gender
	Female		Male		Unknown		All
Age	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent	Count	Percent
40-49 years	197,584	7	180,697	7	567	0	378,848	14
50-59 years	166,889	6	145,901	5	474	0	313,265	12
60-69 years	125,151	5	112,963	4	285	0	238,399	9
70-79 years	60,779	2	56,040	2	100	0	116,919	4
80+ years	49,753	2	32,606	1	142	0	82,501	3
Unknown	574	0	617	0	436	0	1,628	0
All	1,404,221	52	1,309,384	48	4,293	0	2,717,900	100

Note:
Count represents the number of people tested

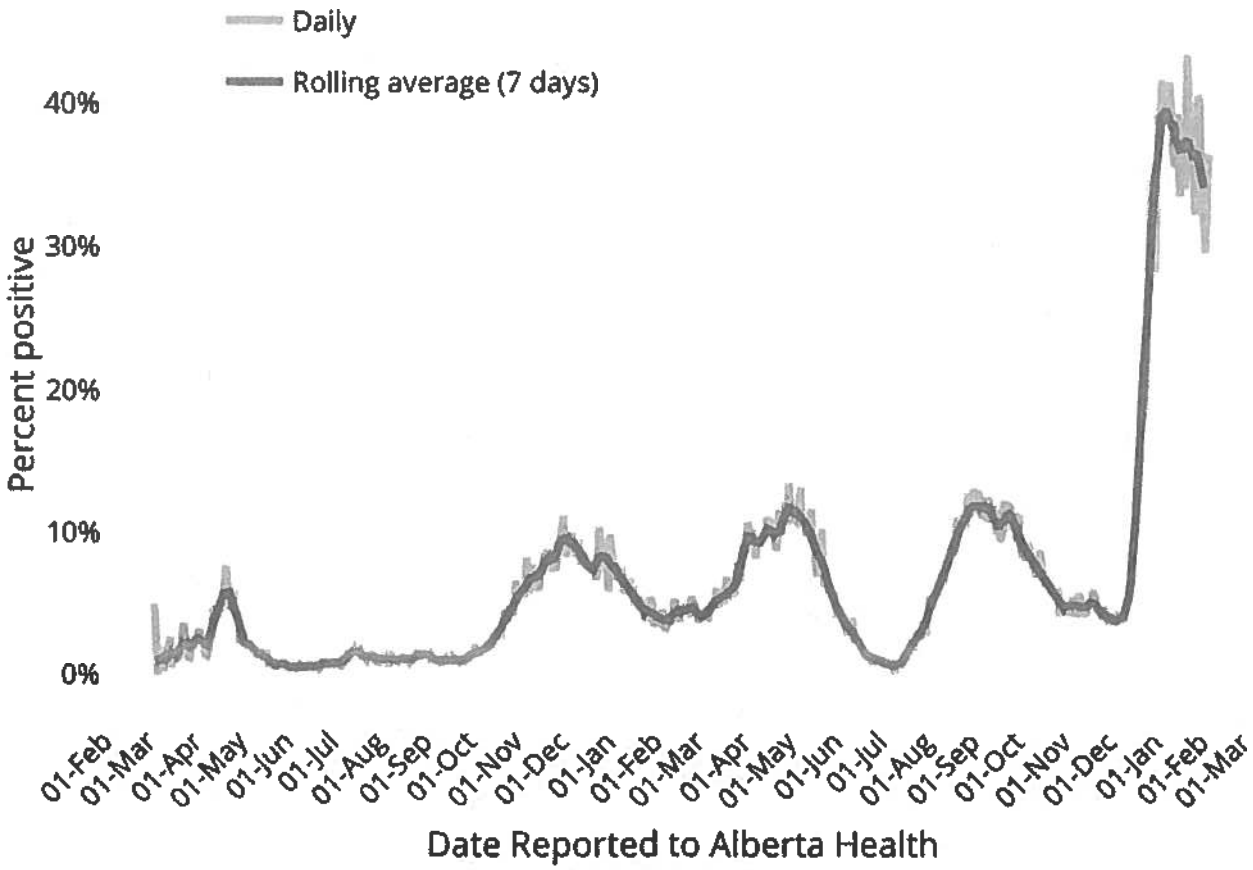

Figure 27: Cumulative and daily test positivity rate for COVID-19 in Alberta.

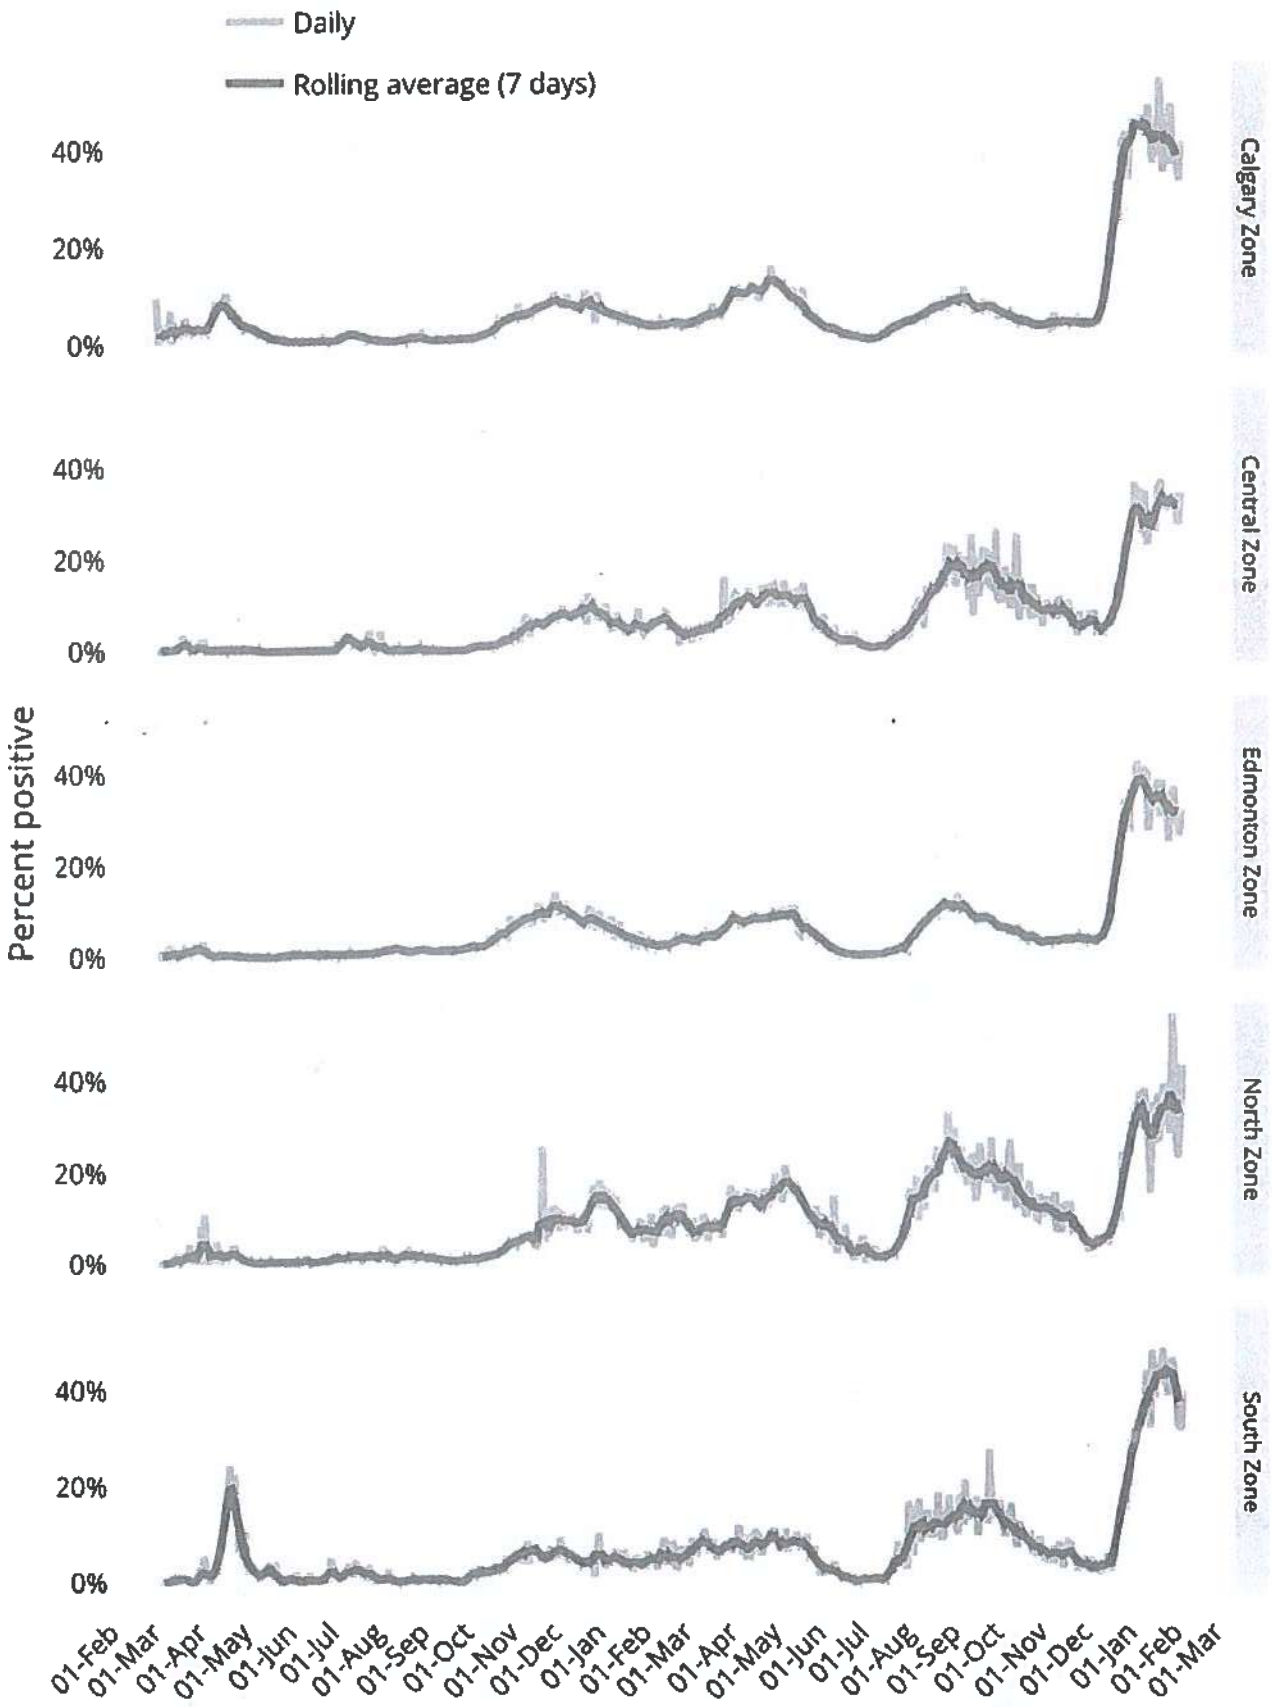

Date Reported to Alberta Health

Figure 28: Positivity rate for COVID-19 in Alberta by zone.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Summary

NOTE: People are identified as COVID-19 cases prior to variant of concern identification. As such, variant of concern reporting is delayed compared to date the case was reported to Alberta Health.

Due to the large number of positive COVID-19 cases, the lab screened a sample of positive cases between May 1, 2021 and May 31, 2021, September 9, 2021 and November 23, 2021, and after December 23rd, 2021.

- 142,420 variants of concern identified
  - 1351 active cases
  - 1,470 died

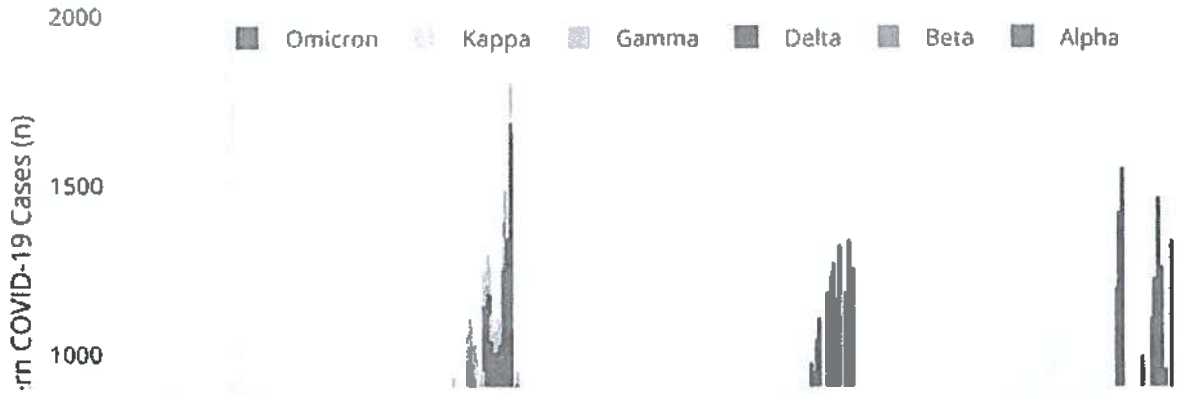

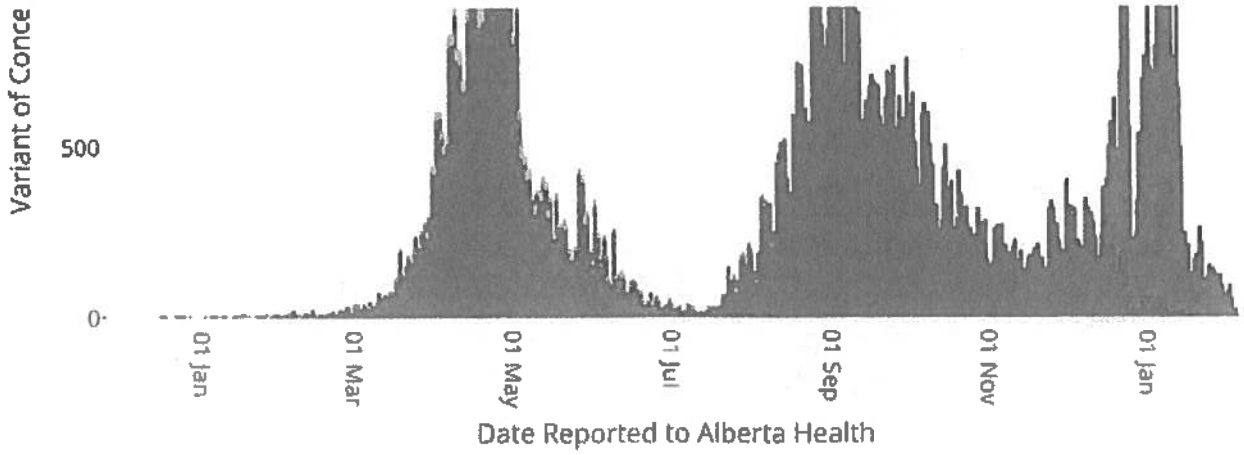

Figure 29: Variant of concern COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day. Note: cases are identified as COVID-19 positive prior to being identified as a variant of concern. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

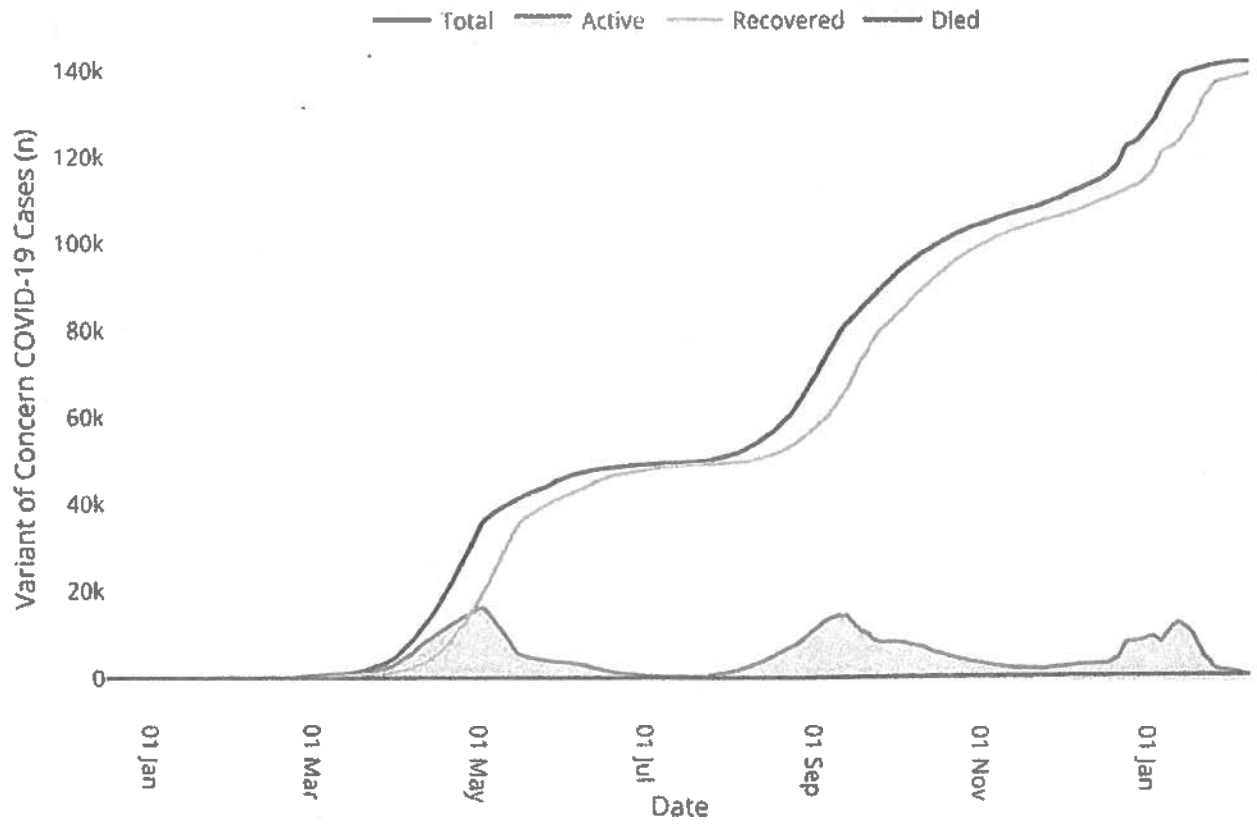

Figure 30: Variant of concern COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day and case status. Recovered is based on the assumption that a person is recovered 14 days after a particular date (see data notes tab), if they did not experience severe outcomes (hospitalized or deceased). Cases are under investigation and numbers may fluctuate as cases are resolved. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

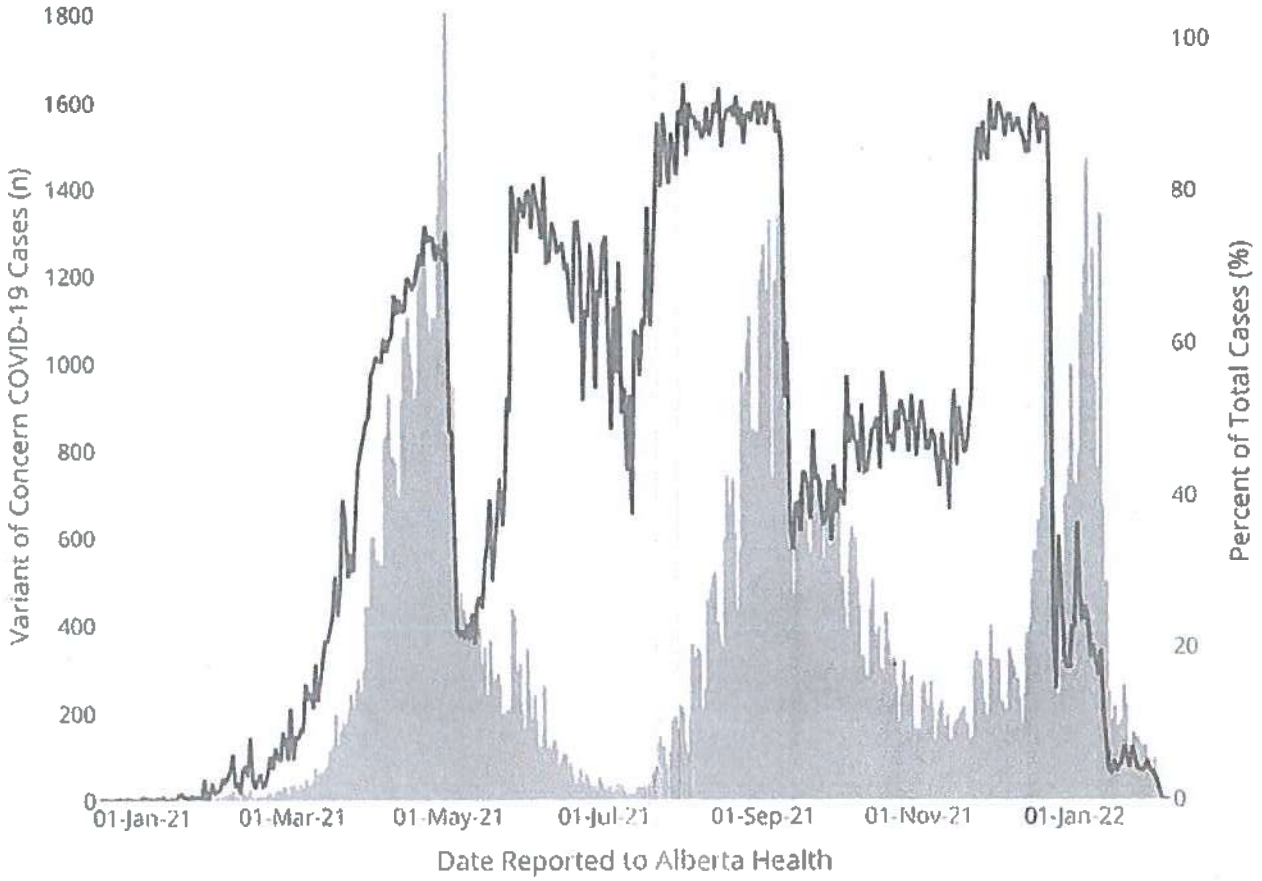

Figure 31: Variant of concern COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day. The bars represent new variant of concern (VOC) cases by day, while the line indicates the proportion of variant of concern cases identified compared to other cases of COVID-19. Note: cases are identified as COVID-19 positive prior to being identified as a variant of concern strain. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

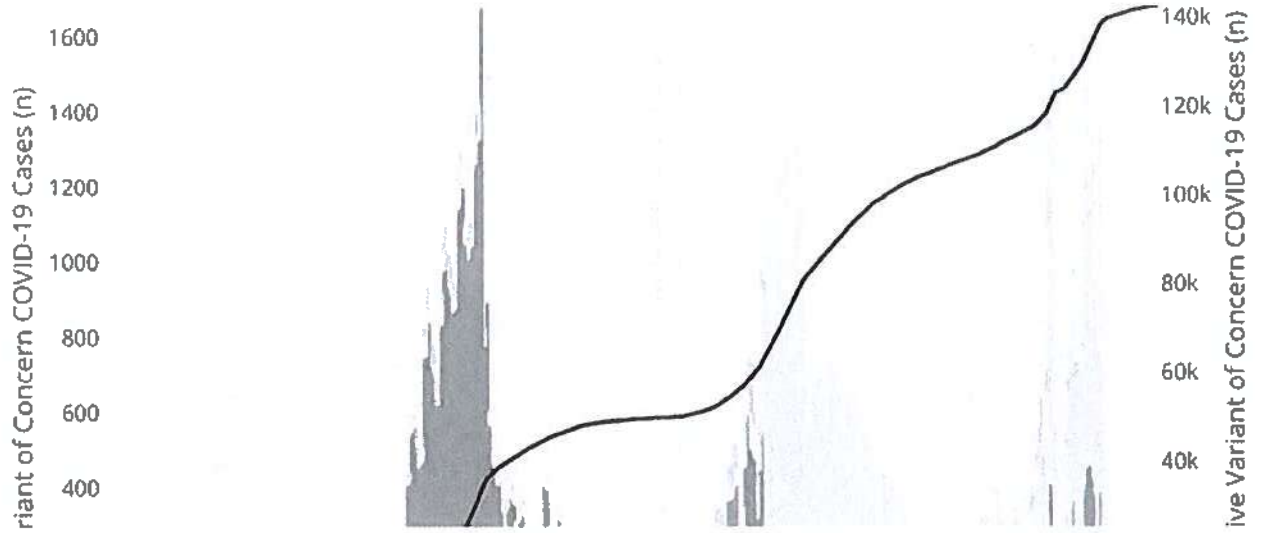

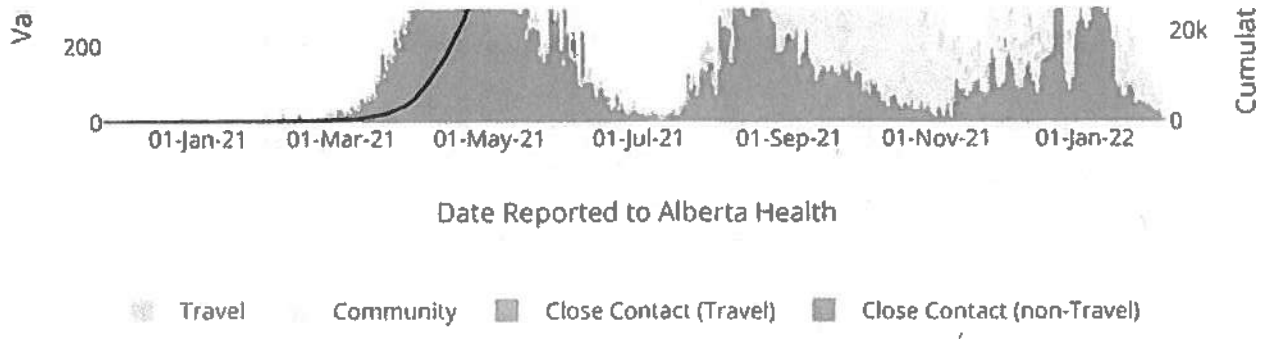

Figure 32: Variant of concern COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day, by exposure type. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

Geospatial

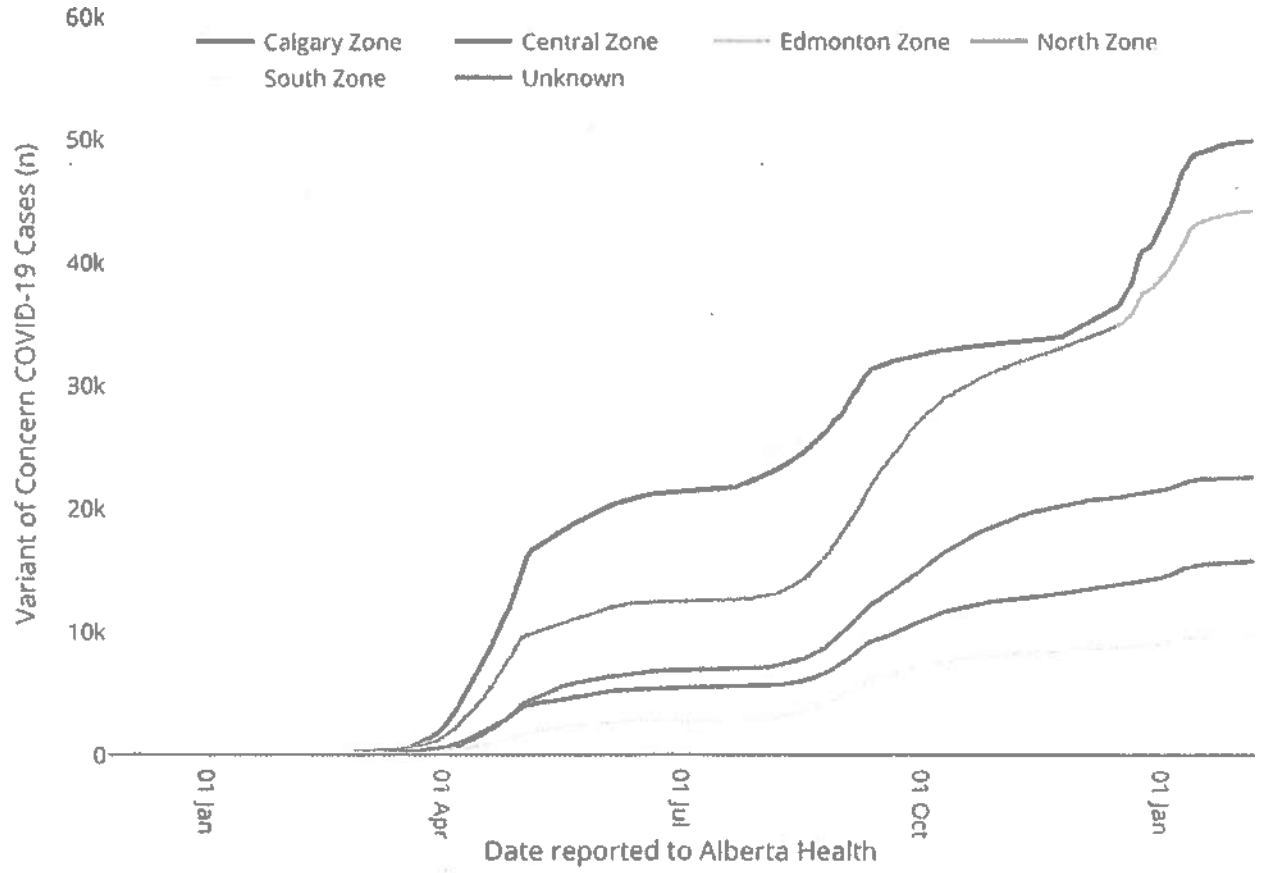

Figure 33: Cumulative variant of concern COVID-19 cases in Alberta by zone and date reported to Alberta Health. Cases without a postal code or incorrect postal codes are labelled as unknown. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

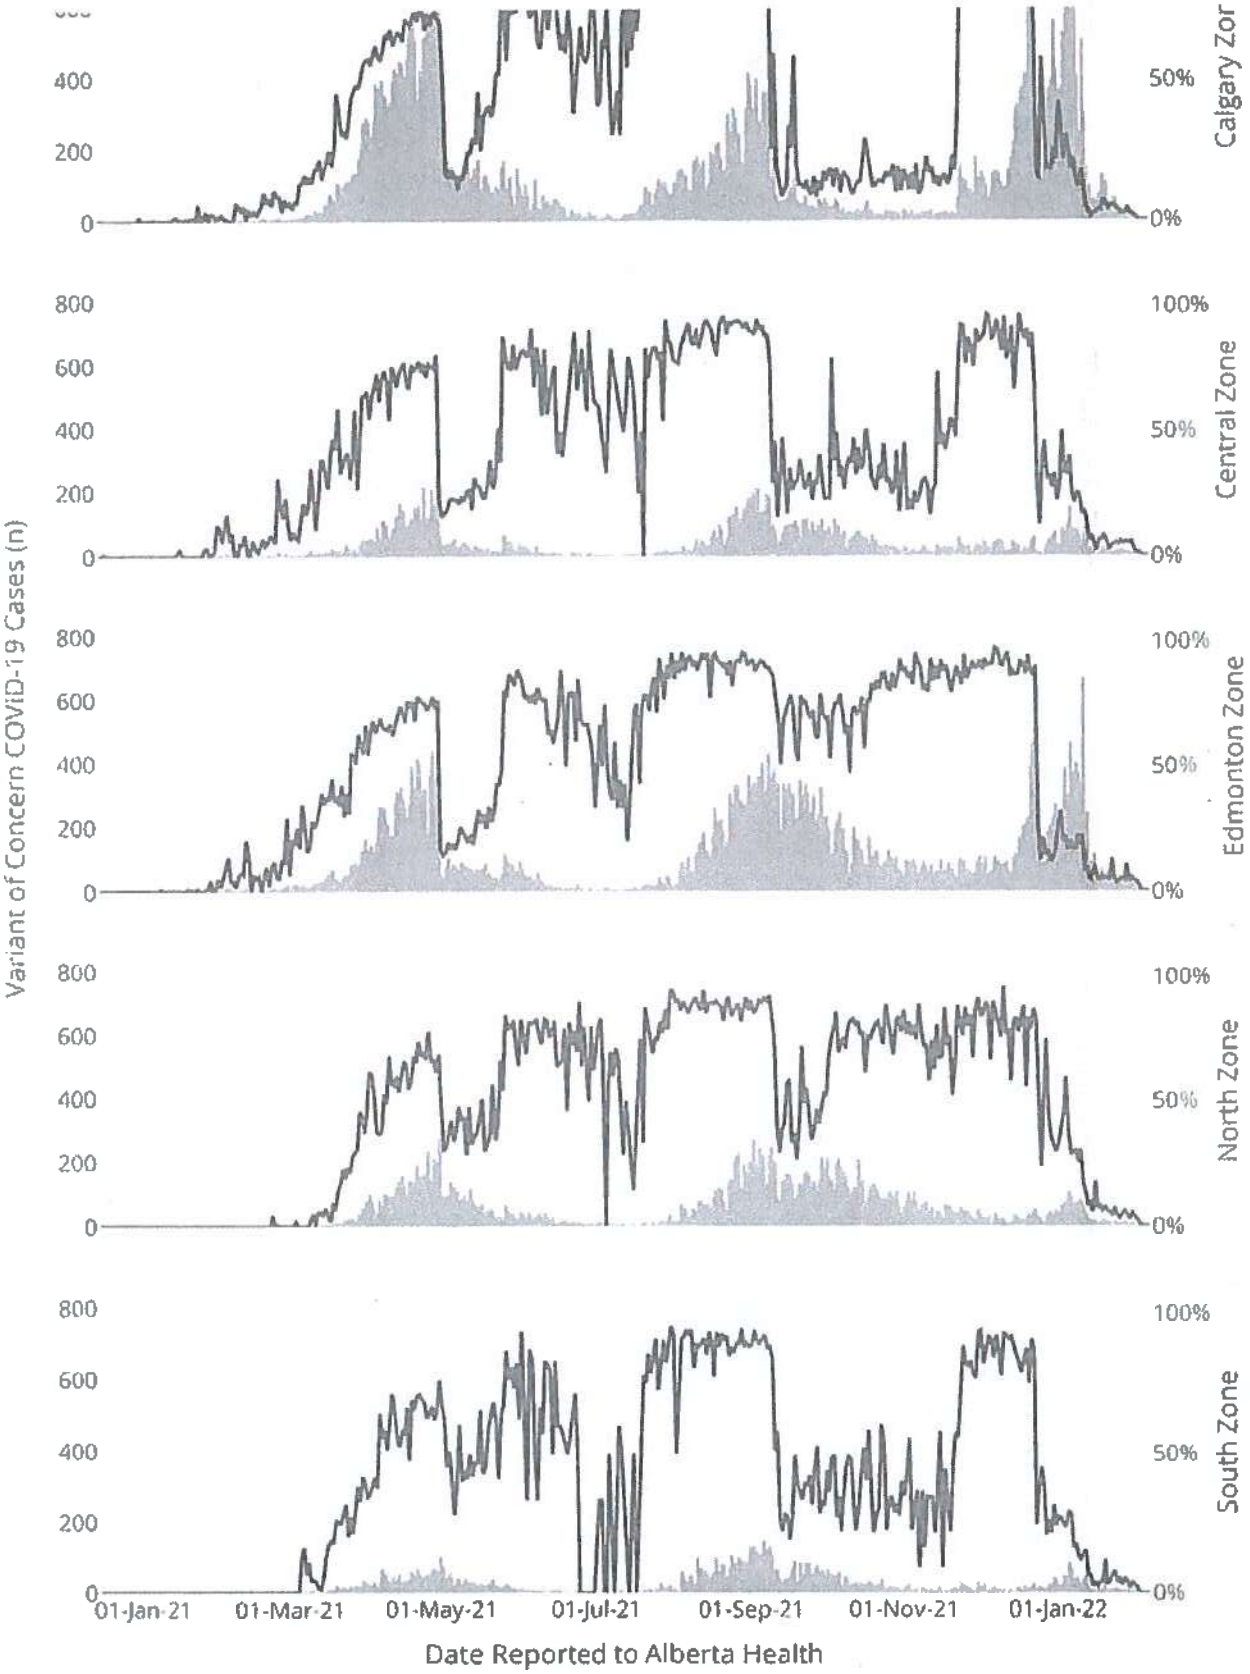

Figure 34: Variant of concern COVID-19 cases in Alberta by day and by zone. The bars represent new variant of concern (VOC) cases by day, while the line indicates the proportion of variant of concern cases identified compared to other cases of COVID-19. Note: cases are identified as COVID-19 positive prior to being identified as a variant of concern strain. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

Table 15. Variants of concern COVID-19 cases identified in Alberta and by Zone

Zone	Alpha	Beta	Delta	Gamma	Kappa	Omicron	Total
Calgary Zone	20,045	79	16,381	804	6	12,528	49,843
Central Zone	5,458	2	8,565	192	0	1,604	15,821
Edmonton Zone	11,429	65	22,948	1,063	13	8,692	44,210
North Zone	6,253	34	14,173	768	0	1,387	22,615
South Zone	2,686	0	6,137	97	0	971	9,891
Unknown	0	0	4	0	0	36	40
Alberta	45,871	180	68,208	2,924	19	25,218	142,420

Table 16. Variants of concern COVID-19 cases identified among active cases in Alberta and by Zone

Zone	Delta	Omicron	Total
Calgary Zone	10	432	442
Central Zone	4	158	162
Edmonton Zone	0	517	517
North Zone	3	126	129
South Zone	2	99	101
Unknown	0	0	0
Alberta	19	1,332	1,351

Note: Active cases are now based on information on a sample of positive cases only and should be interpreted with caution.

Table 17. Variants of concern COVID-19 cases identified who are active, recovered, or died in Alberta and by Zone

Zone	Active	Died	Recovered	Total
Calgary Zone	442	317	49,084	49,843
Central Zone	162	280	15,379	15,821

Zone	Active	Died	Recovered	Total
Edmonton Zone	517	425	43,268	44,210
North Zone	129	255	22,231	22,615
South Zone	101	193	9,597	9,891
Unknown	0	0	40	40
Alberta	1,351	1,470	139,599	142,420

Where Disease Was Likely Acquired

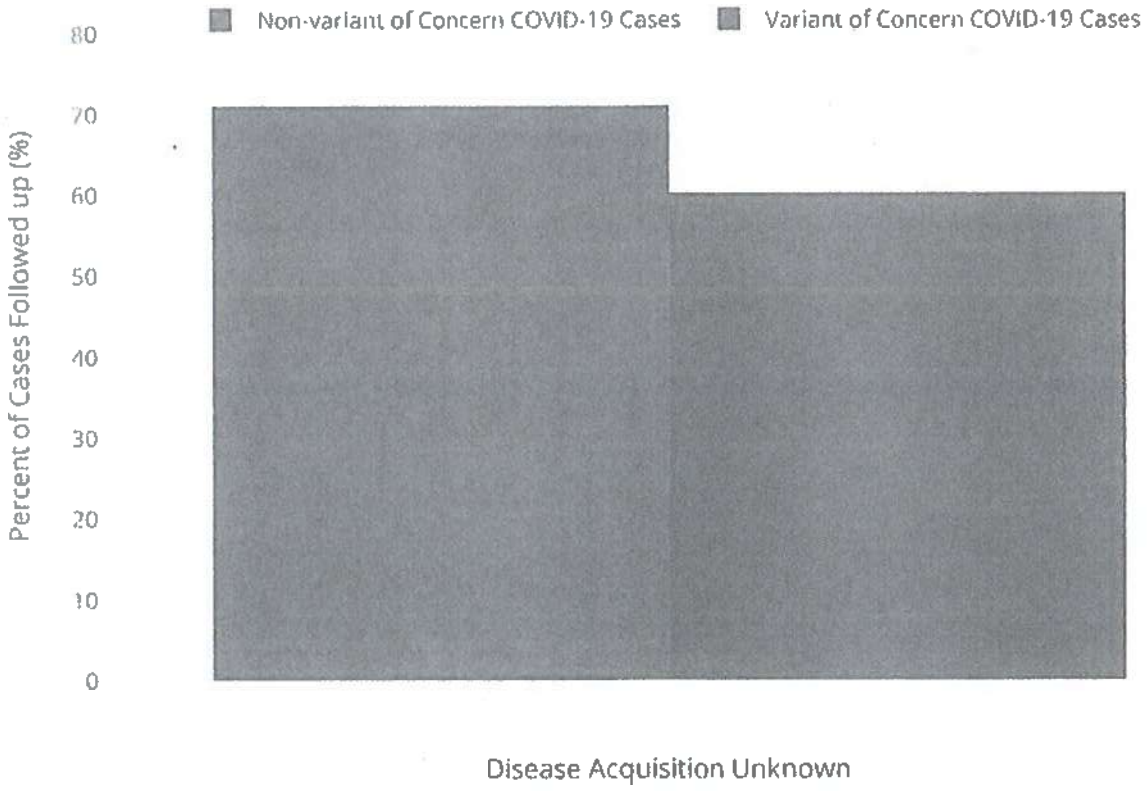

Figure 35: Percent of variants of concern (VOCs) and non-VOCs who were followed up and have an unknown place of disease acquisition. February 07, 2022.

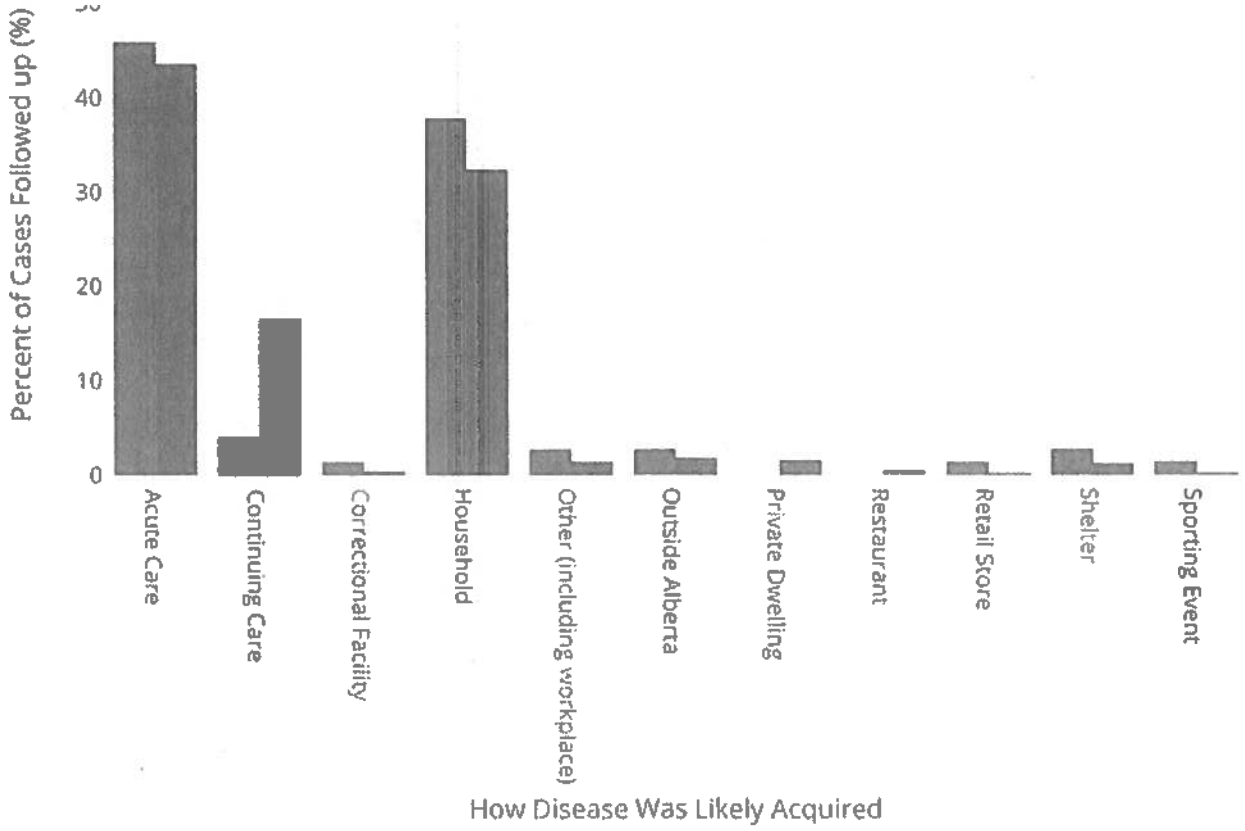

Figure 36: Where disease was likely acquired among active cases who have been followed-up with a known place of acquisition among variants of concern (VOCs) and non-VOCs. February 07, 2022.

Laboratory Testing

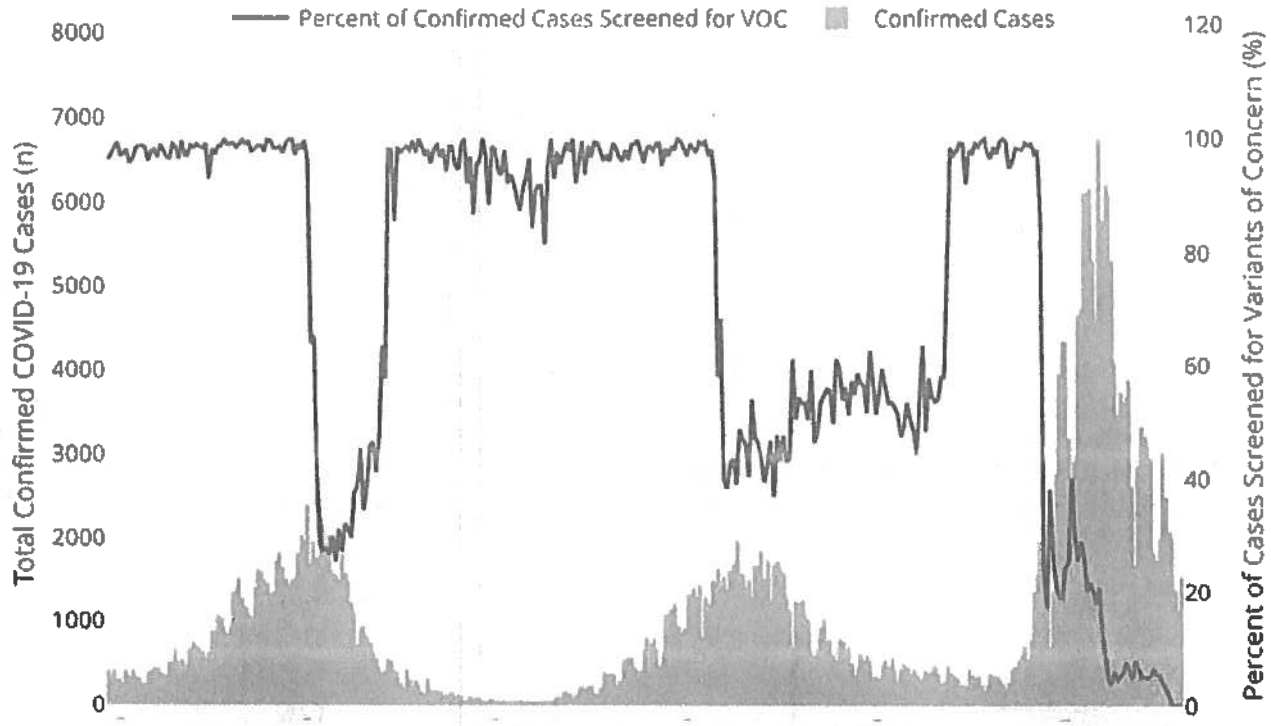

Figure 37: Total confirmed COVID-19 cases and percent of cases screend for variants of concern by day. Note: cases are identified as COVID-19 positive prior to being identified as a variant of concern. Data included up to end of day February 07, 2022.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Highlights | New Cases | Total Cases | Characteristics | Vaccine Outcomes | Severe outcomes | Comorbidities | Healthcare capacity | Geospatial | Travel history | Laboratory testing | Variants of Concern | Data export | Data notes

Visit this link (https://www.alberta.ca/stats/covid-19-alberta-statistics.htm#data-export) to access various data-sets in csv format.

Analytics and Performance Reporting Branch
Epidemiology and Surveillance Unit
2022-February-08 12:01

COVID-19 in Alberta

Data sources

The Provincial Surveillance Information system (PSI) is a laboratory surveillance system which receives positive results for all Notifiable Diseases and diseases under laboratory surveillance from Alberta Precision Labs (APL). The system also receives negative results for a subset of organisms such as COVID-19. The system contains basic information on characteristics and demographics such as age, zone and gender. The Communicable Disease Reporting System (CDRS) at Alberta Health and the Communicable Disease Outbreak Management (CDOM) system at Alberta Health Services contains information on COVID-19 cases. Data Integration and Measurement Reporting (DIMR) database at Alberta Health Services contains up to date information on people admitted and discharged from hospital in Alberta. Information such as hospitalizations and ICU admissions are received through enhanced case report forms sent by Alberta Health Services (AHS).

Definitions

Recovered

Active and recovered status is a surveillance definition to try to understand the number of active cases in the population. It is not related to clinical management of cases. It is based on the assumption that a case is recovered 14 days after a particular date. For confirmed cases, specimen collected date is used and for probable cases date reported to Alberta Health is used. If a case is hospitalized, the recovered date is when their symptoms have resolved based on case follow-up, or 10 days after being discharged.

COVID-19 Deaths

A death resulting from a clinically compatible illness, in a probable or confirmed COVID-19 case, unless there is a clear alternative cause of death identified (e.g., trauma, poisoning, drug overdose).

A Medical Officer of Health or relevant public health authority may use their discretion when determining if a death was due to COVID-19, and their judgement will supersede the above criteria.

A death due to COVID-19 may be attributed when COVID-19 is the cause of death or is a contributing factor.

Lab Positivity

COVID-19 percent positivity in Alberta is calculated using the Test Over Test method, which is the same method employed by the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The calculation is as follows:

Daily Number of Positive Tests / (Daily Number of Positive Tests + Daily Number of Negative Tests) Q/RT-PCR tests are the only COVID-19 tests included in this calculation.

https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/lab/resources/calculating-percent-positivity-faq.html (https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/lab/resources/calculating-percent-positivity-faq.html)

Comorbidities

The following comorbitities are included in respective analyses: Diabetes, Hypertension, COPD, Cancer, Dementia, Stroke, Liver cirrhosis, Cardiovascular diseases (including IHD and Congestive heart failure), Chronic kidney disease, and Immuno-deficiency.

Disclaimer

The content and format of this report are subject to change. Cases are under investigation and numbers may fluctuate as cases are resolved. Data included in the interactive data application are up-to-date as of end of day February 07, 2022.

TAB 11

Alberta Government

Alberta Health
March 2, 2022
AR 199655

ADVICE TO HONOURABLE JASON COPPING
MINISTER OF HEALTH
COVID-19 Measures in Schools
For Information

ISSUE
The use of public health measures to reduce the risk of COVID-19 transmission in schools.

PURPOSE
To provide information and analysis regarding public health measures implemented in schools and their impact on COVID-19 transmission, with a focus on Alberta cases and data.

ANALYSIS
- Public health measures implemented in Alberta have impacted the transmission of COVID-19 within schools and their surrounding communities, and this is consistent with similar evidence reported in the literature.
- Analysis of research literature indicates wearing masks can be effective in contributing to reducing the transmission of COVID-19 in public and community settings; however, the impact of masking in schools is less clear.
  - The range of policies in place across different jurisdictions limits the ability to evaluate the impact of specific measures for daycare or school settings due to variability in the combination of measures implemented.
  - It is difficult to determine the effect of removing or changing one measure (e.g. masking), as many of the studies examining COVID-19 incidence in schools had layered infection prevention and control measures in place.
- Studies found that transmission in schools has remained limited under a wide range of prevention measures, such as masking, cohorting, cancelling higher-risk activities, distancing, hygiene protocols, reduced class size, and enhanced ventilation.
- While in-person schooling carries an increased risk of infection for household members, studies looking at this outcome have shown mitigation measures like teacher masking, daily symptom screening, and the closure of extra-curricular activities were associated with significant reduction in risk.
- According to observed Alberta data, which could be influenced by factors other than masking, school boards without mask mandates at the start of the school year (September 2021) had three times more outbreaks in their schools in the first few months of the school year.
  - In addition, case and hospitalization rates per 100,000 population in Alberta for children (five to 11 years old) and adults (30 to 59 years old) were lower in areas where mask mandates were required.
- One specific outbreak in Westglen School in Edmonton (fall 2021) illustrates that a school outbreak can lead to increased spread within the local community (71 cases: one staff member and 70 students, see Figure 1).
  - The outbreak was opened September 23 (reported 10 per cent absenteeism and a positive case on September 20). Some symptomatic children continued to attend school until they moved to online learning on September 24.

- This outbreak has had a significant effect on case counts in the neighbourhood; while cases in Edmonton were stabilizing and decreasing, cases in the T5M postal code reversed trend, increasing significantly after the Westglen outbreak.
  - 66/94 (70 per cent) of all cases with the T5M postal code reported between September 17 and 26 are linked to the outbreak or are family members of outbreak cases.

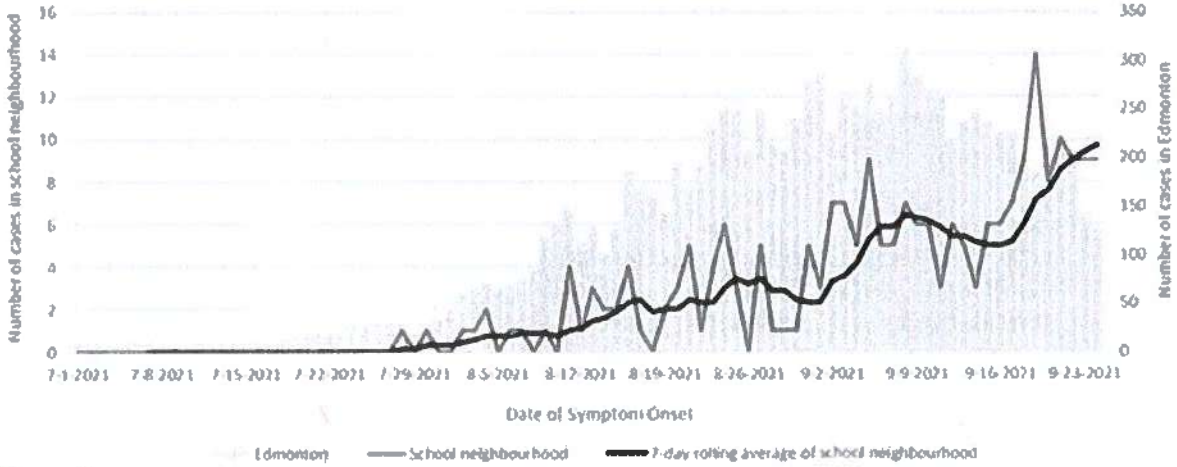

Figure 1: Number of cases in the neighbourhood surrounding the Westglen school and the City of Edmonton

- Additional information on the impact of COVID-19 measures in schools is attached (Attachments 1 and 2).

BACKGROUND

- Alberta Health has provided guidance to schools with the intent of reducing the risk of transmission. Most mandatory school measures were lifted on February 14, 2022, and the remaining mandatory measures were removed on March 1.
- Alberta Health has prepared guidance documents that include the following recommended practices:
  - Encouraging vaccination for eligible students and staff;
  - Active daily symptom screening of all staff, students, visitors, and volunteers;
  - Cohorting for kindergarten through grade six classes;
  - Increased hand hygiene;
  - Increased and enhanced cleaning; and
  - Increased distancing where possible to reduce crowding.

ATTACHMENTS

1. COVID Measures in Schools Alberta Data
2. COVID Measures in Schools Literature Summary

CONTACT:

Drafted by: Susan Novak, Policy and Planning Section Chief, 780-860-2144
Approved by: Ethan Bayne, Incident Commander, Alberta Heath EOC, 780-217-1826

Questions

- Outbreaks in schools with and without mask mandates.
- Provide Alberta school data comparing last year and this year.

Overall Themes

- This data is observational, and therefore able to only identify correlation, not causation. There are multiple factors that influence COVID transmission that could also be impacting the trends identified below.
- School boards without mask mandates have 3 times more outbreaks in their schools, on average.
    - Case and hospitalization rates per 100,000 population lower in areas where mask mandates are required in both children (5-11 year old) and adults (30-59 years old).
    - Hospitalization rates per 100,000 population are lower in adults (30-59 years old) in areas with mask mandates.
- The outbreak in Westglen school in Edmonton (Fall 2021) is an example that illustrate that a school outbreak can lead to increased spread within the local community.
- Hospitalization rate per 100,000 population are higher (<10 years old) and comparable (10-19 years old) in the fifth wave compared to other waves.

Analysis: Masks Mandates

School boards without mask mandates had 3 times more outbreaks in their schools, on average.

Table 1. Top 10 school Boards with the highest proportion of outbreaks in their schools as of Sept 27, 2021.

School Board	Municipality	N Schools	N Outbreaks	Percent of schools with outbreaks (%)*	Mask mandate at start of school?
The Lakeland Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Bonnyville	8	6	75%	N

The Wild Rose School Division	Rocky Mountain House	17	11	65%	N
The Grande Prairie School Division	Grande Prairie	20	11	55%	N
The Grande Prairie Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Grande Prairie	13	7	54%	N
The High Prairie School Division	High Prairie	13	6	46%	N
The Parkland School Division	Stony Plain	25	11	44%	N
The Holy Family Catholic Separate School Division	Peace River	9	4	44%	N
The Black Gold School Division	Nisku	31	11	35%	N
The Sturgeon School Division	Morinville	17	6	35%	N
The St. Thomas Aquinas Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Leduc	12	4	33%	N

* This is the same as the rate of outbreaks per 100 schools

Table 2. Schools with the 10 lowest proportions of outbreaks in their schools as of Sept 27, 2021.

School Board	Municipality & Area	N Schools	N Outbreaks	Percent of schools with outbreaks (%)*	Mask mandate at start of school?
The Greater St. Albert Roman Catholic Separate School Division	St. Albert	18	1	6%	Yes
The Northland School Division	Peace River	21	1	5%	Yes
The Edmonton School Division	Edmonton	232	12	5%	Yes
The Calgary School Division	Calgary	256	11	4%	Yes
The Edmonton Catholic Separate School Division	Edmonton	103	3	3%	Yes
The Rocky View School Division	Airdrie	52	1	2%	N
The Calgary Roman Catholic Separate School Division	Calgary	120	1	1%	Yes
The Wetaskiwin School Division	Wetaskiwin	22	0	0	N
The Aspen View School Division	Athabasca	18	0	0	N
The Canadian Rockies School Division	Canmore	8	0	0	Yes

* This is the same as the rate of outbreaks per 100 schools

Table 3. Average percent of outbreaks per school board, by mask mandate status.

Mask mandate at start of school?	Average percent of outbreaks per school board
Implemented after 1st week	19.7
N	23.4
Y	7.3

A comparison of geographies with and without mask mandates

Method:

- "Masks Required" is defined as communities where 75% of schools required masks from the start of the school year (excludes francophone and private schools).
- "Other" is defined as communities that did not meet the 75% cut-off and/or do not require mask mandates. Note: small towns that had 1 of each public school, separate school, and private school would not meet the 75% cut-off.
- Limitations
    - Did not account for community vaccine coverage. This may impact hospitalization rate by communities in schools that have and do not have mask mandates.
    - Mask mandates were not available for all boards.

Results:

- Case and hospitalization rates per 100,000 population lower in areas where mask mandates are required in both children (5-11 year old) and adults (30-59 years old) (See Figure 1).
- Hospitalization rates per 100,000 population are lower in adults (30-59 years old) in areas with mask mandates (See Figure 1).

COVID-19 – COVID and Schools

Figure 1. Rate of COVID-19 cases (Left) and hospitalization rates (right) per 100,000 population in children, 5-11 years old (top) and adults, 30-59 years old (bottom) by mask mandates in school.

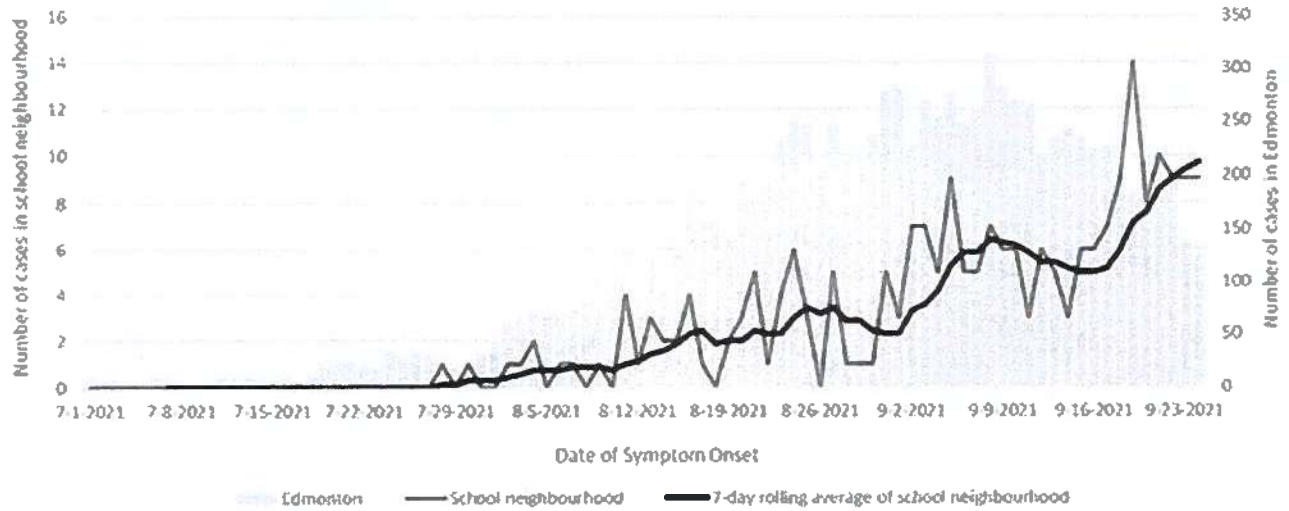
NOTE: this work was done October 2021, prior to vaccine availability for 5-11 year olds. The 30-59 year olds were selected based on potential impacts on households.

Analysis: Westglen School

September 28, 2021

- 71 cases
  - 1 staff member, 70 students.
    - Staff member (music teacher) was not immunized.
    - Students spread roughly evenly across grades 1-6 .
  - The outbreak opened Sept 23rd – they had reported 10% absenteeism and a positive case on Mon Sept 20th.
    - Symptomatic children continued to attend school until they moved to online learning Sept 24th.
  - Even young children likely transmitted to their families.
    - As of Sept 26th, 14 families had additional cases in their families, the index case (ie earliest onset date) was an adult only once (7%).
      - 7 (50%) - index case was a child age 5-9.
      - 6 (43%) – index was a child age 10-12.
  - This outbreak has had a significant effect on case counts in the neighbourhood; while cases in Edmonton were stabilizing and decreasing, cases in the T5M postal code reversed trend, increasing significantly after the Westglen outbreak (See Figure 2).
    - 66/94 (70%) of all cases with the T5M postal code reported between Sept 17-26 are linked to the outbreak or are family members of outbreak cases.

Figure 2. Number of cases in the neighbourhood surrounding the school and the City of Edmonton.



Analysis: Hospitalizations

Definition of waves:

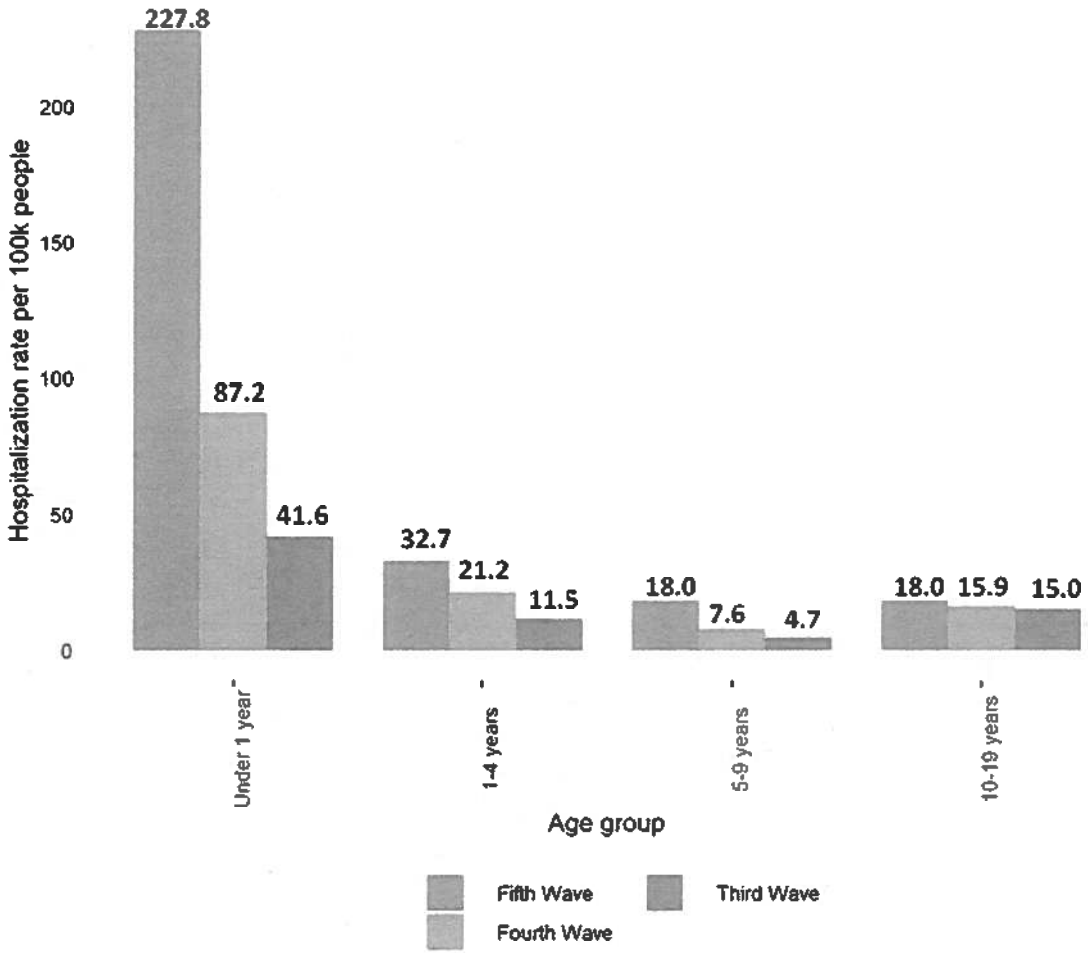
Third Wave: Feb 6, 2021 to July 9, 2021.
Fourth Wave: July 10, 2021 to December 15, 2021.
Fifth Wave: December 16, 2021 – Current.

Summary:

- Hospitalization rate per 100,000 population are higher (<10 years old) and comparable (10-19 years old) in the fifth wave compared to other waves.

COVID-19 – COVID and Schools

Figure 3. Hospitalization Rate per 100,000 population comparison across wave three to five among people under 20 years old.



School Masking Evidence Summary

Copied from Scott Fullmer's email dated February 7, 2022

Summary

1. According to the research literature, wearing masks can be effective in contributing to reducing transmission of COVID-19 in public and community settings. This is informed by a range of research, including randomised control trials, contact tracing studies, and observational studies.
2. The evidence for protection from masks, in schools is less direct, but taken together with available evidence from all settings, there is support for the conclusion that face coverings in schools can contribute as part of a host of measures to reduce transmission. What data do exist have been interpreted into guidance in many different ways. The World Health Organization, for example, does not recommend masks for children under age 6. The European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control recommends against the use of masks for any children in primary school. In North America masking in schools was part of public health guidelines as schools returned after the first and second waves.
3. Studies find that transmission in schools has remained limited and comparable to the wider community under a wide range of prevention measures such as masking, cohorting, cancelling higher-risk activities, distancing, hygiene protocols, reduced class size and enhanced ventilation.
4. The studies available were performed prior to the emergence of the Omicron VOC.

Systematic Reviews of Multiple Measures

The evergreen MacMaster University literature review (49 studies) (August 2021) reports wide variability in policies in place across different jurisdictions limiting the ability to evaluate the impact of specific measures or make best practice recommendations for daycare or school settings due to variability in the combination of measures implemented. However, implementation of infection control measures is critically important to reducing transmission, especially when community transmission rates are high.

- There is evidence that wearing masks, maintaining at least 3ft of distance (especially amongst staff), restricting entry to the school to others, cancelling extracurriculars, introducing outdoor instruction, and daily symptom screening reduce the number of cases within schools;
- There are inconsistent findings for associations between ventilation, and class size.
- Hybrid or part-time in-person learning appears to be associated with higher incidence compared to full-time in-person.

In July 2021, European Centre for Disease Control and Prevention published its second update to its review of COVID-19 in children and the role of school settings in transmission. The review examined case-based epidemiological surveillance analysis from The European Surveillance System, grey, pre-print and peer reviewed scientific literature, focusing on studies published in 2021; and modelling of the effects of closing schools on community transmission based on data from the ECDC-Joint Research Centre (JRC) Response Measures Database.

- Similar to the literature review produced by Macmaster University, this report that implementing multiple physical distancing and hygiene measures can significantly reduce the possibility of transmission within schools (high confidence), including

- De-densification (classroom distancing, staggered arrival times, cancellation of certain indoor activities, especially among other students)
- Hygiene measures (handwashing, respiratory etiquette, cleaning, ventilation, and face masks for certain age groups).
- Timely testing and isolation or quarantine of symptomatic cases is important. Rapid antigen tests should be considered

The latest Cochrane literature review examined evidence is up to December 2020 on which measures implemented in the school setting allow schools to safely reopen, stay open, or both, during the COVID-19 pandemic. The review suggests that many measures implemented in the school setting can have positive impacts on the transmission of SARS-CoV-2, and on healthcare utilisation outcomes related to COVID-19.

- Measures reducing the opportunity for contacts: by reducing the number of students in a class or a school, opening certain school types only (for example primary schools) or by creating a schedule by which students attend school on different days or in different weeks, the face-to-face contact between students can be reduced.
  - All 23 studies showed reductions in the spread of the virus that causes COVID-19 and the use of the healthcare system. Some studies also showed a reduction in the number of days spent in school due to the intervention.
- Measures making contacts safer: by putting measures in place such as face masks, improving ventilation by opening windows or using air purifiers, cleaning, handwashing, or modifying activities like sports or music, contacts can be made safer.
  - Five (of 11) of these studies combined multiple measures, which means we cannot see which specific measures worked and which did not. Most studies showed reductions in the spread of the virus that causes COVID-19; some studies, however, showed mixed or no effects.
- Surveillance and response measures: screening for symptoms or testing sick or potentially sick students, or teachers, or both, and putting them into isolation (for sick people) or quarantine (for potentially sick people).
  - Twelve (of 13) studies focused on mass testing and isolation measures, while two looked specifically at symptom-based screening and isolation. Most studies showed results in favour of the intervention, however some showed mixed or no effects.
- Multicomponent measures: measures from categories 1, 2 and 3 are combined.
  - Three studies assessed physical distancing, modification of activities, cancellation of sports or music classes, testing, exemption of high-risk students, handwashing, and face masks. Most studies showed reduced transmission of the virus that causes COVID-19, however some showed mixed or no effects.

Transmission Compared to the Community

These four studies in Vancouver, Georgia, and Italy were some of the earlier studies in the first/second wave that found that students were less of a risk for secondary infections compared to teachers however, teachers rates of infection were no higher than other members of the community in occupations outside the home.

- Vancouver (Oct 2020-May 2021) Goldfarb et al. seroprevelance study showed no detectable increase in SARS-CoV-2 infections in school staff working in Vancouver public schools following a period of widespread community transmission compared to the community. These findings corroborate claims that, with appropriate mitigation strategies in place, in-person schooling is not associated with significantly higher risk for school staff.

- Of the 1,556 school staff who had their blood sample tested, 2.3% tested positive for antibodies. This percentage was similar to the number of infections in a reference group of blood donors matched by age, sex and area of residence.
- NPIs: (Physical distancing, Enhanced cleaning, Enhanced ventilation, Cohorts, Screening (staff and students), Regular surface cleaning, Unidirectional flow of students, Masks (not mandatory until Feb 2021 for grades 6-12 and for grades 4-12 in Apr 2021), Hand hygiene (hand sanitizer in classrooms and common areas), Quarantine policies, Staggered recess and lunch breaks)

- Georgia CDC Study –USA (Dec 2020-Jan 2021) Gettings, J.R., et al. found that masking teachers was associated with a statistically significant decrease in COVID transmission, but masking students was not.
  - NPI's: (enhanced cleaning, enhanced ventilation, hand hygiene, masks – except during sports, and physical distancing)
  - Highest Secondary Attack Rates were:
    - Indoor High-contact sports settings - 23.8%
    - staff meetings/lunches - 18.2%
    - Elementary school classrooms 9.5%
  - Lowest Secondary Attack Rates:
    - Asymptomatic Students – 2.3%
    - Elementary Students – 2.7%
  - The SAR was higher for staff 13.1% vs student index cases 5.8% and for symptomatic 10.9% vs asymptomatic index cases 3.0
  - In school settings, J. Gettings et al. point out that in addition to masking, schools that improved ventilation through dilution methods alone, COVID-19 incidence was 35% lower, whereas in schools that combined dilution methods with filtration, incidence was 48% lower.
- Georgia – USA (Dec 2020-Jan 2021) J. A. W. Gold et al. examined incidence in a Georgia school district during December 1, 2020–January 22, 2021 identified nine clusters of COVID-19 cases involving 13 educators and 32 students at six elementary schools. Two clusters involved probable educator-to-educator transmission that was followed by educator-to-student transmission in classrooms and resulted in approximately one half (15 of 31) of school-associated cases. Preventing SARS-CoV-2 infections through multifaceted school mitigation measures and COVID-19 vaccination of educators is a critical component of preventing in-school transmission.
  - NPI's: (Masks - except while eating, Plastic dividers on desks but students sat less than 3 feet apart).
- Italy (Sept 30 2020-Feb 2021) Gandini et al. performed a cross-sectional and prospective cohort study in Italy during the second COVID-19 wave (from September 30, 2020 until at least February 28, 2021. Incidence and positivity were lower amongst elementary and middle school students compared to general population; incidence was higher in high school students in 3 of 19 regions. Incidence in teachers was no different from other occupations after adjusting for age.
  - NPI's: (Ban on sports and music, Frequent ventilation, Hand hygiene, Masks (staff, high school students), Negative test following exposure (some schools), Physical distancing (1m between seats), Reduced school hours, Temperature check, Unidirectional flow of students).

Impact of Multiple Mitigation Measures

These observational studies that assess the use of multiple interventions in schools and are a good example of the kinds of studies that show mixed results (as was noted in the systematic reviews)

- Utah – USA (Dec 2020-Jan 2021) R. B. Hershow et al. reviewed K-6 schools opening in Salt Lake County, Utah, from Dec 3 – Jan 21, 2021. Despite high community incidence and an inability to space students' classroom seats ≥6 ft apart, this investigation found low SARS-CoV-2 transmission and no school-related outbreaks in 20 Salt Lake County elementary schools with high student mask use and implementation of multiple strategies to limit transmission.
  - NPIs: (6ft distance, High mask use (86%), 81% in-person learning, Plexiglass barriers for teachers, Staggered mealtimes)
  - Other studies, similar to the Utah in North Carolina, Wisconsin, and Missouri, isolated the impact of masks specifically, but showed that taken together mitigation strategies reduced transmission.
- Florida, New York, Mass – USA (2020-21) E. Oster et al reported on the correlation of mitigation practices with staff and student COVID-19 case rates in Florida, New York, and Massachusetts during the 2020-2021 school year focusing on student density, ventilation upgrades, and masking. Ventilation upgrades are correlated with lower rates in Florida but not in New York. Did not find any correlations with mask mandates. All rates are lower in the spring, after teacher vaccination is underway.
  - NPI's Varied by state: (Cohorts, Enhanced ventilation, Masks, Reduced student density, Physical distancing (6 ft.), Symptom screening, Temperature checks)
- USA All States (Dec 2020-Feb 2021) J. Lessler et al. For every additional measure implemented there was a decrease in odds of a positive test (adjusted OR: 0.93, 95% CI=0.92,0.94); symptoms screening was associated with the greatest risk reduction. When 7 or more IPAC measures were implemented, risk largely disappeared (with a complete absence of risk with 10 or more IPAC measures). Among those reporting 7 or more mitigation measures, 80% reported student/teacher mask mandates, restricted entry, desk spacing and no supply sharing. Outdoor instruction, restricted entry, no extracurriculars, and daily symptom screening were associated with significant risk reductions.
  - NPI's : (Cancelled extracurriculars, Closed common spaces (playgrounds, cafeterias), Cohorting, Masks, Physical distancing (extra space, separators between desks), Reduced class size, Restricted entry, Symptom screening)
- A Science Magazine Summary on in-person schooling concludes that in-person schooling carries with it increased COVID-19 risk to household members; but also evidence that common, low cost, mitigation measures can reduce this risk
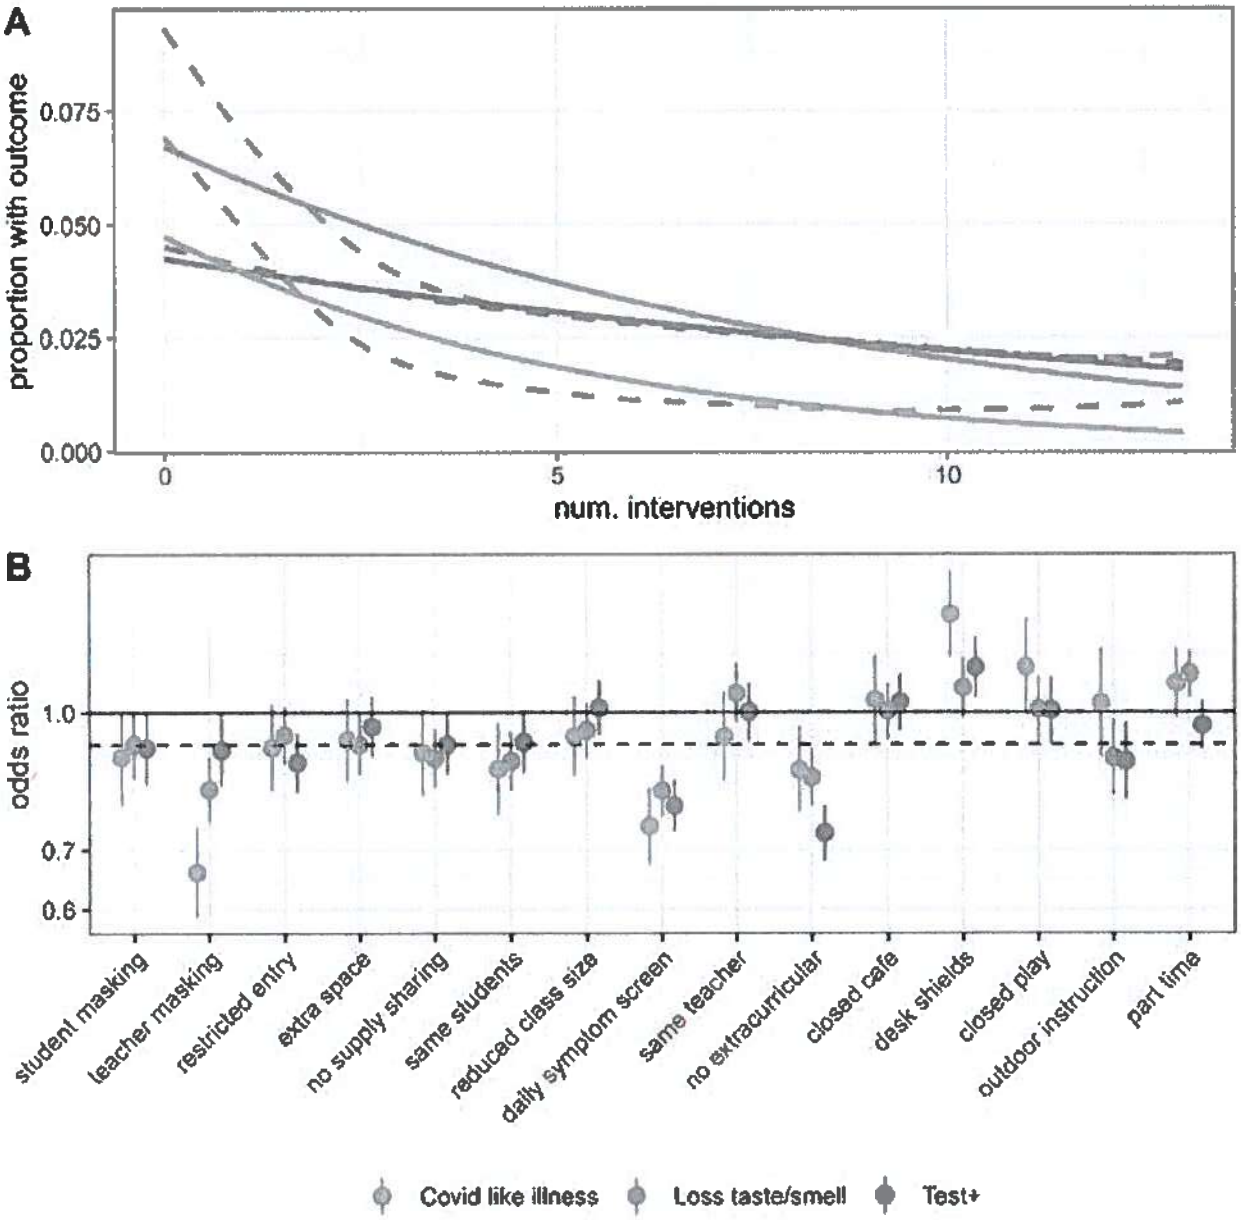
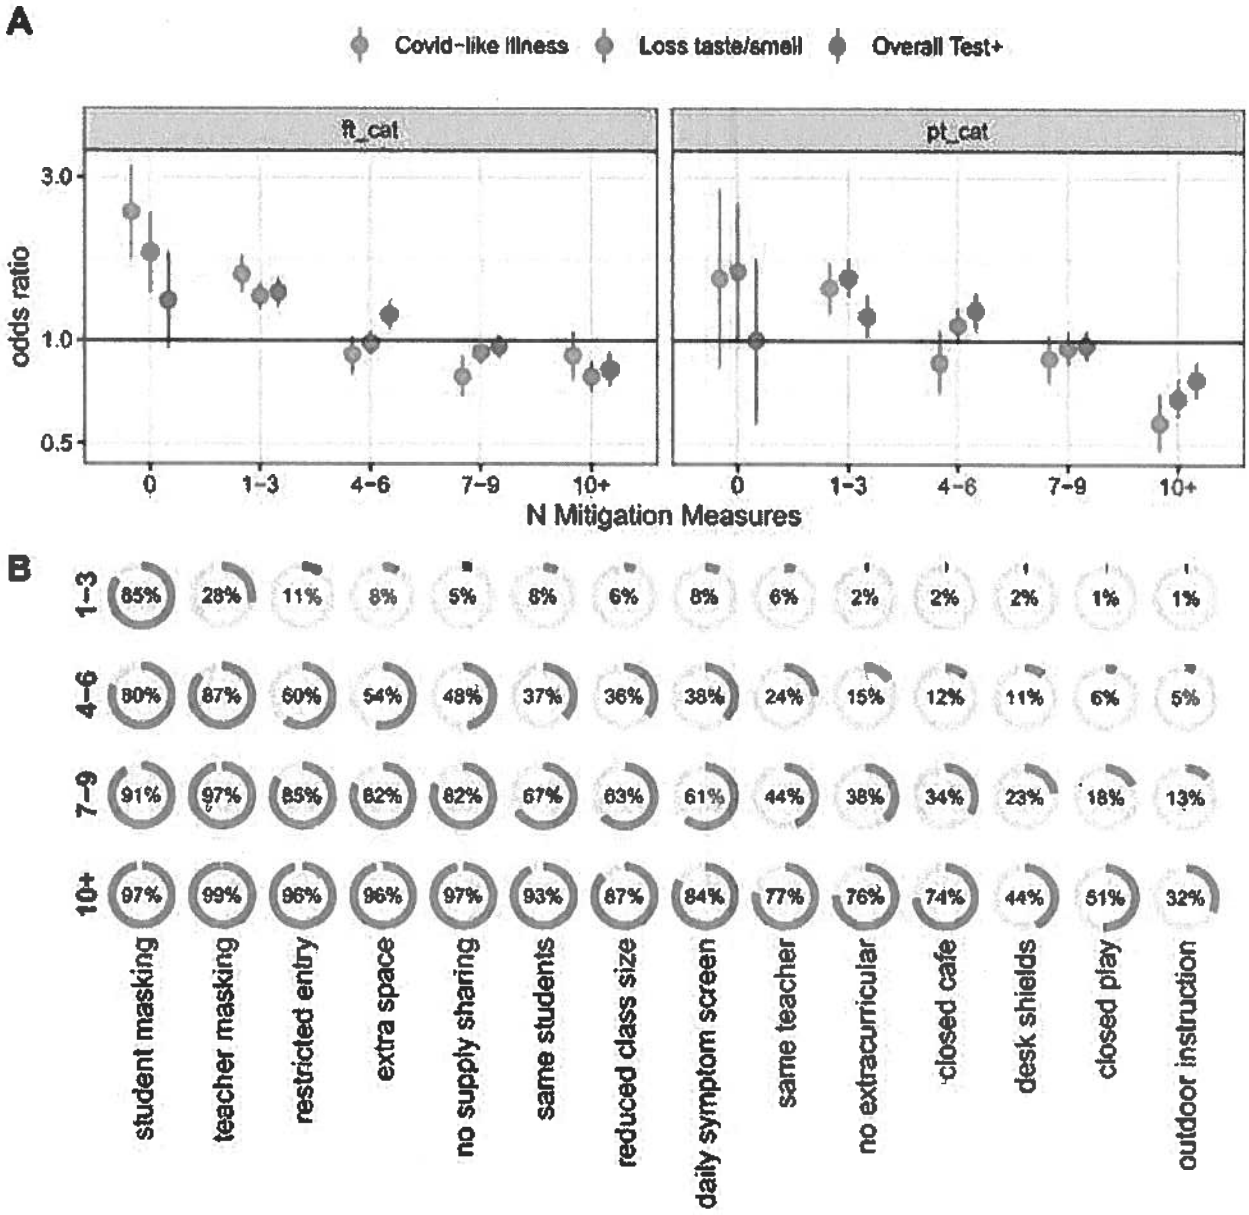
  - School-based mitigation measures are associated with significant reductions in risk, particularly daily symptoms screens, teacher masking, and closure of extra-curricular activities.
  - A positive association between in-person schooling and COVID-19 outcomes persists at low levels of mitigation, but when seven or more mitigation measures are reported, a significant relationship is no longer observed.
    - Regression treating each individual mitigation measure as having an independent effect shows that daily symptom screening is clearly associated with greater risk reductions than the average measure with some evidence that teacher mask mandates and cancelling extra-curricular activities are also associated with larger reductions than average.

- In contrast, closing cafeterias, playgrounds and use of desk shields are associated with lower risk reductions (or even risk increases); however this may reflect saturation effects as these are typically reported along with a high number of other measures. Notably, part-time in-person schooling is not associated with a decrease in the risk of COVID-19-related outcomes compared to full-time in-person schooling after accounting for other mitigation measures.





Evidence on Masking Alone

In community settings the conclusion on the effectiveness of face coverings to reduce transmission of COVID-19 in community settings is informed by a range of research, including transferable insight from other contagious diseases, modelling studies, laboratory experiments, contact tracing studies, and observational studies. The addition of randomised control trials and substantially more individual-level observational studies has increased the strength of the conclusions and strengthens the evidence for the effectiveness of face coverings in reducing the spread of COVID-19 in the community, through source control, wearer protection, and universal masking.

There are only 2 RCTs that have been done during the pandemic on masking (1 non-peer-reviewed report, both rated as medium quality) provided evidence on the effectiveness of face coverings to reduce transmission of COVID-19, for universal masking (Bangladesh) and 1 for wearer protection (Denmark).[1]

- Denmark RCT in Spring 2020 (H. Bundgaard et al.) The first was conducted in Denmark in the spring of 2020 and found no significant effect of masks on reducing COVID-19 transmission
  - Adults who spent 3 hours or more a day outside the home and did not wear a face covering while at work were randomised either to wearing study-provided surgical masks outside the home or no intervention.
  - There was a small, non-significant reduction in COVID-19 infections reported in the group that wore surgical masks: 42 of 2,392 participants (1.8%) developed COVID-19 in the intervention group compared with 53 of 2,470 participants (2.1%) in the control group.
  - The study was inconclusive, reporting a non-significant reduction in COVID-19 infections from wearer protection using surgical masks, but the results lacked precision due to an insufficiently large sample size and low prevalence in the study population, so few participants developed COVID-19.
- Bangladesh RCT in 2021 (J. Abaluck et al.) - reported that surgical masks (but not cloth) were modestly effective at reducing rates of symptomatic infection. However, neither of these studies included children, let alone vaccinated children.
  - Randomized trial involving nearly 350,000 people across rural Bangladesh. The study's authors found that surgical masks — but not cloth masks — reduced transmission of SARS-CoV-2 in villages where the research team distributed face masks and promoted their use.
  - The study linked surgical masks with an 11% drop in risk, compared with a 5% drop for cloth. That finding was reinforced by laboratory experiments whose results are summarized in the same preprint. The data show that even after 10 washes, surgical masks filter out 76% of small particles capable of airborne transmission of SARS-CoV-2, says Mushfiq Mobarak, an economist at Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut, and a co-author of the study. By contrast, the team found that 3-layered cloth masks had a filtration efficiency of only 37% before washing or use.
- The UK PHE has produced two literature reviews on masking
  - In community they assembled a committee to evaluate this evidence from their most recent literature review on face coverings in community included 25 studies (including 9 preprints and 2 non-peer reviewed reports): 2 randomised controlled trials (RCTs) and 23 observational studies. The evidence predominantly suggests that face coverings reduce the spread of COVID-19 in the community.
    - Respiratory Evidence Panel: evidence suggests that all types of face coverings are, to some extent, effective in reducing transmission of SARS-CoV-2 in both healthcare and public, community settings – this is through a combination of source control and protection to the wearer (high confidence).

[1] Both studies were used to guide previous advice on masking in Alberta, both excluded children

Classification: Protected A

Eight contact tracing studies suggested that contacts of primary cases were less likely to develop COVID-19 if either the primary case or the close contact, or both, wore a face covering.

11 observational association studies had mixed results, with 6 studies suggesting face coverings were associated with reduced COVID-19 transmission and 5 suggesting no statistically significant association.

- In the school setting (Jan 2022) they conducted a literature review as well as publishing the results of their own study that looked at schools with mask mandates in secondary schools. The literature review on the Evidence of associations between COVID-19 and the use of masks in educational settings was inconclusive, but some studies showed higher rates of COVID-19 in schools without mask requirements for students.
    - "The new study presented in this report is a comparison of covid absence rates 2-3 weeks later in 123 schools which introduced masks on the 1st October 2020 with covid absence rates in 1192 schools which did not have a policy of mask wearing in school.
    - There were several differences between the two sets of schools included in this study including the covid absence rates at the start of the study (the schools which introduced masks had much higher rates). The researchers tried to adjust for these factors in their analysis.
        - No Reduction in the UK with Masks in Schools: Schools where face coverings were used in October 2021 saw a reduction two to three weeks later in Covid absences from 5.3% to 3% - a drop of 2.3 percentage points.
        - In schools which did not use face coverings absences fell from 5.3% to 3.6% - a fall of 1.7 percentage points (not statistically significant)
- Public Health Ontario has also assessed most of this evidence as well and summarized that several studies found that mask mandates in schools have been associated with lower incidence of SARS-CoV-2 infection. Many of the studies examining COVID-19 incidence in schools had layered Infection prevention and control measures in place, so it was challenging to measure the independent Impact of mask-wearing.

There are 3 commonly cited studies (all rated as low quality) assessing whether wearing a face covering was effective in schools in the UK, US and Germany in autumn and winter 2020, and in a summer camp in the US in summer 2020. These results provide less direct evidence of the effectiveness of face coverings than either the RCTs or contact tracing, but still provide evidence on the difference in COVID-19 transmission between people who did and did not wear face coverings in school and summer camp settings.

- California Study: D. Cooper et al. in a prospective cohort study in the US assessed whether face coverings were effective as universal masking in four schools in Autumn to Winter 2020 found SARS-CoV-2 infections in 17 learners (N=320) only during the surge. School A (97% remote learners) had the highest infection (10/70, 14.3%, $p<0.01$) and IgG positivity rates (13/66, 19.7%). School D (93% on-site learners) had the lowest infection and IgG positivity rates (1/63, 1.6%). Mitigation compliance [physical distancing (mean 87.4%) and face covering (91.3%)] was remarkably high at all schools.
- Germany Study: Theuring et al. in a cross-sectional study in Germany (n=177 primary school students, n=175 secondary school students and n=142 staff members) assessed whether face coverings were effective as wearer protection in 12 primary and 12 secondary schools in Germany in November 2020. It concluded that prevalence increased with inconsistent facemask-use in school, walking to school, and case-contacts outside school.
- US Summer Camp Study: S. Suh et al. conducted a cross-sectional study (n=486 US summer camps comprising 89,635 campers) assessed whether face coverings were effective as universal masking in 486 summer camps in the US in summer 2020. It found in both single and multi-NPI analyses, the risk of COVID-19 cases was lowest when campers always wore facial coverings.

More recent evidence from Delta Wave and CDC Commissioned Studies

- To demonstrate any independent effect of masks on COVID-19 transmission requires comparing communities with similar vaccination rates or statistically controlling for differences in vaccination rates or other covariates. Without making these adjustments, it is difficult to attribute differences in case rates, or differences in in-school transmission, to mask wearing in school.
- When CDC examined the evidence on school transmission, it concluded that the preponderance of the available evidence from United States schools indicates that even when students were placed less than 6 feet apart in classrooms, there was limited SARS-CoV-2 transmission *when other layered prevention strategies were consistently maintained; notably, masking and student cohorts.
  - The Oct 2021 Arizona CDC Study (M. Jehn et al.) in the Maricopa and Pima Counties concluded that schools without mask mandates were more 3.5 times likely to have COVID-19 outbreaks than schools with mask mandates. The study noted that given the high transmissibility of the SARS-CoV-2 B.1.617.2 (Delta) variant, universal masking, in addition to vaccination of all eligible students, staff members, and faculty and implementation of other prevention measures, remains essential to COVID-19 prevention in K–12 settings.
    - However, the study has been found to have numerous flaws as pointed out in this Atlantic Article – including a failure to quantify the size of outbreaks and failure to report testing protocols for the students. They also do not control for different vaccination rates in the counties, meaning that vaccination could have played a bigger role than masking.
  - Another Oct 2021 CDC study by S. E. Budzyn et al. found that U.S. counties without mask mandates saw larger increases in pediatric COVID-19 cases after schools opened, but again did not control for important differences in vaccination rates, stating it will be done at a later date.
    - The study examined 520 counties from July to September, 62% of which didn't have a school mask requirement.
    - Over the two-week period before and after school started, counties with school mask requirements saw their COVID-19 rates rise by 16 daily cases per 100,000 children, on average.
    - Meanwhile, counties without school mask requirements saw their COVID-19 rates rise by 35 daily cases per 100,000 children, as shown in the chart below.

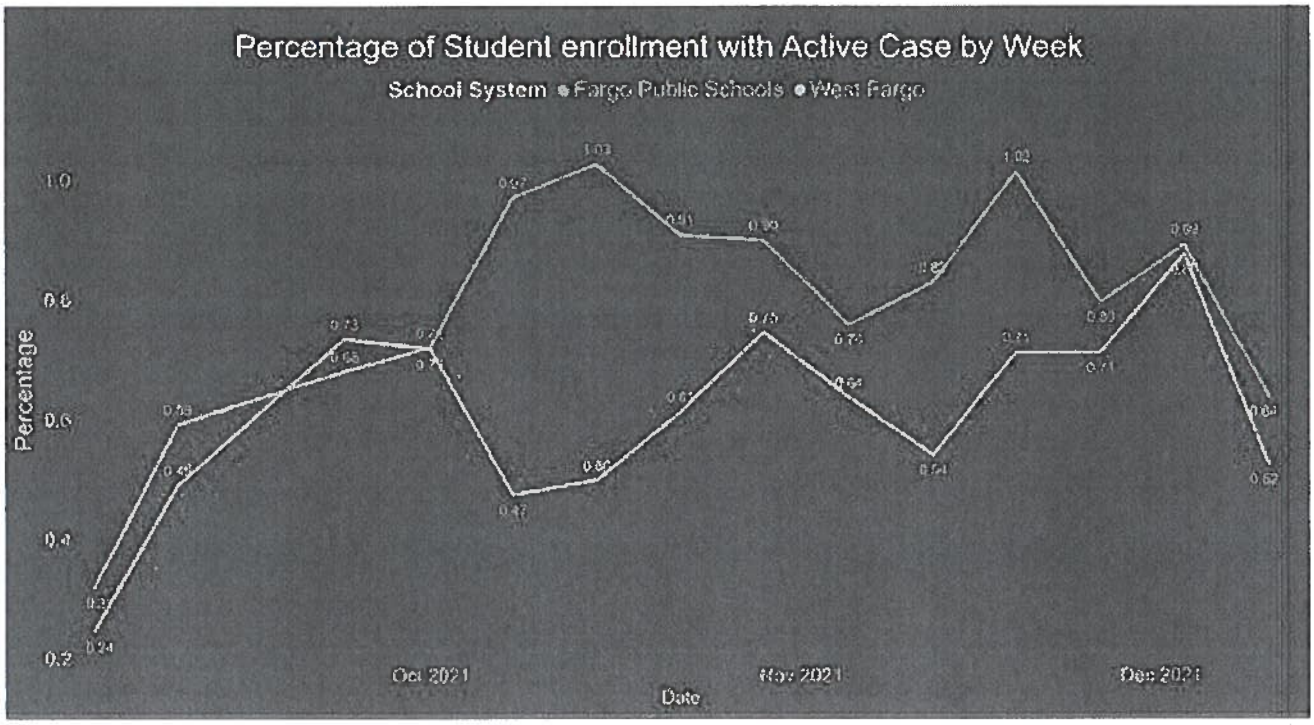
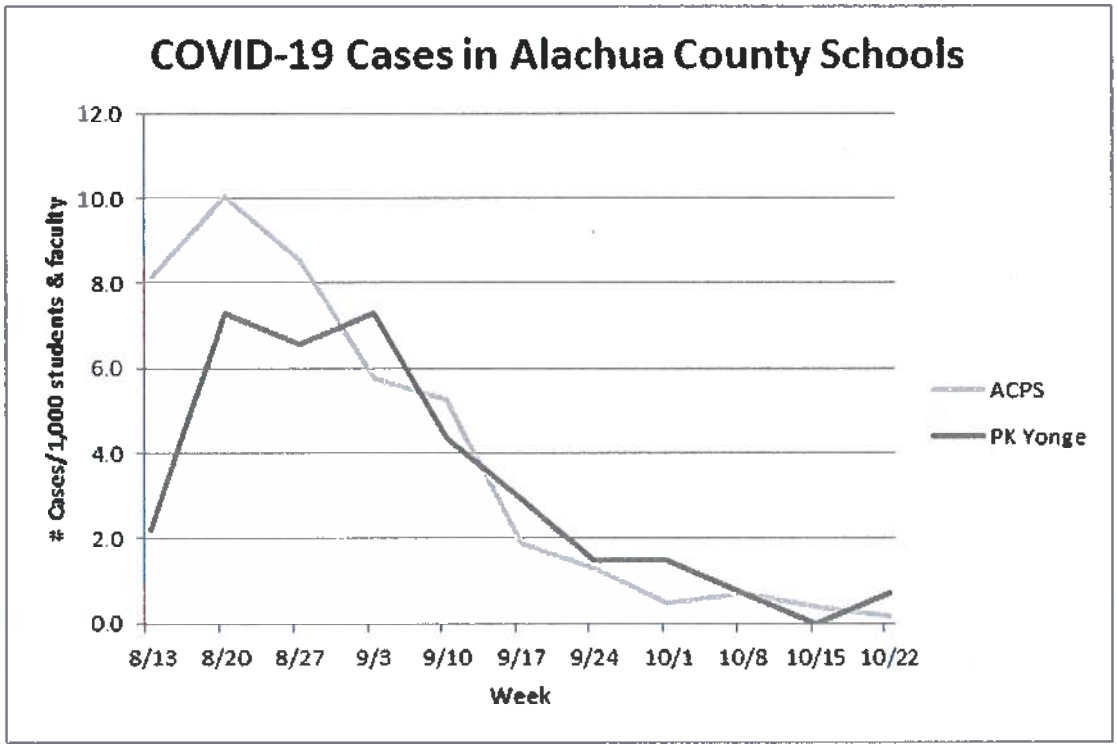
These smaller studies are often shared online to show that there isn't a difference between schools that mask during the Delta variant's spread in the US:

- In Tennessee, two neighboring counties with similar vaccination rates, Davidson and Williamson, have virtually overlapping case-rate trends in their school-age populations, despite one having a mask mandate and one having a mask opt-out rate of about 23 percent.
- Another recent analysis of data from Cass County, North Dakota by Tracy Hoeg, comparing school districts with and without mask mandates, concluded that mask-optional districts had lower prevalence of COVID-19 cases among students this fall.
- Analyses of COVID-19 cases in Alachua County, Florida, also suggest no differences in mask-required versus mask-optional schools.





TAB 12

Appendix 1

Context of COVID-19 in Alberta at time of decision

It is important to remember that masks were never provincially required in children in school in kindergarten to grade 3, so the change to the requirements was for those in grades 4 and above.

Immunization (see TAB 5)

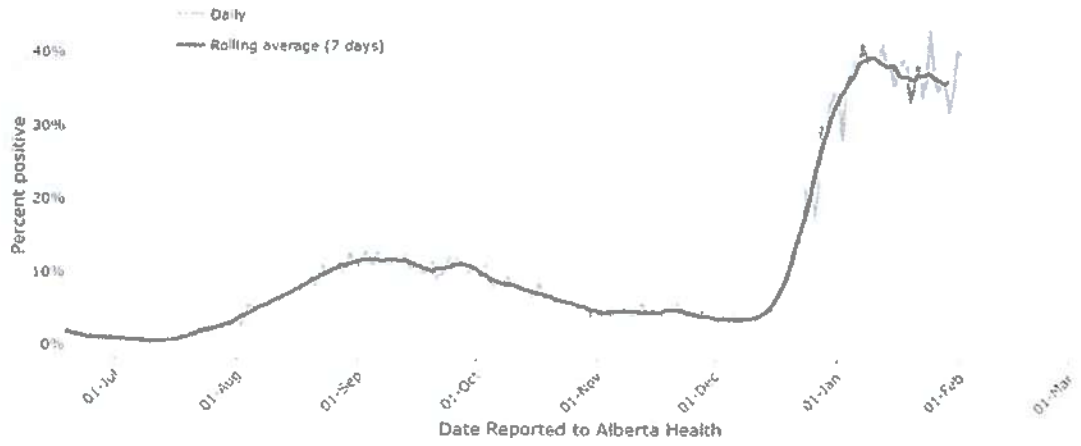
- By February 8, 2022, 46% of children 5-11 years old had received one dose of vaccine while 18% had received two doses. All children in this age group were eligible to receive vaccine, and sufficient time had elapsed for two doses to have been received for those families who chose this layer of protection.
- For 12-19 year olds, 87% had received one dose and 82% had received two doses.

Treatment and testing available

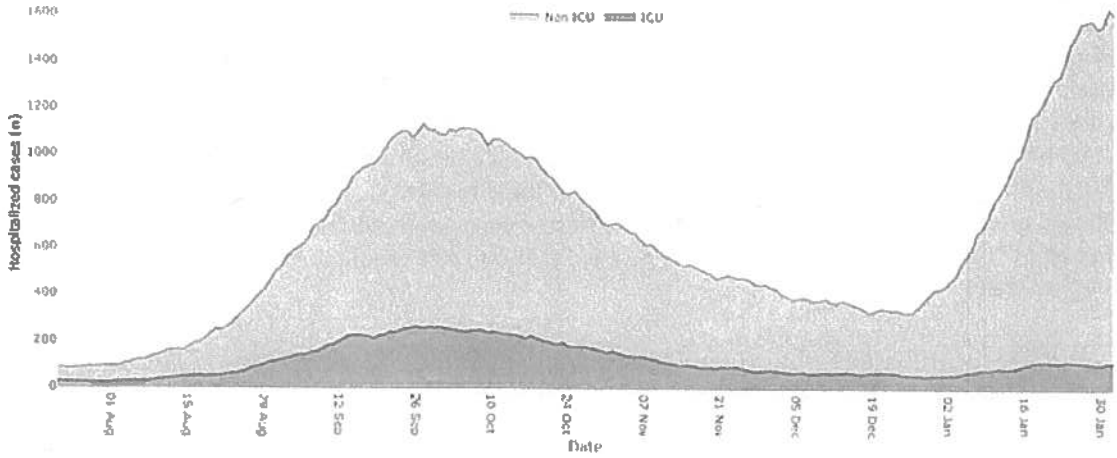
- Rapid Antigen test kits had been made available to families of school-aged children and were being made available to the public for at-home use at participating pharmacies.
- Outpatient treatments were available to prevent the highest risk patients with mild to moderate COVID-19 symptoms from progressing to severe disease.

Cases and hospitalization (see TAB 10)

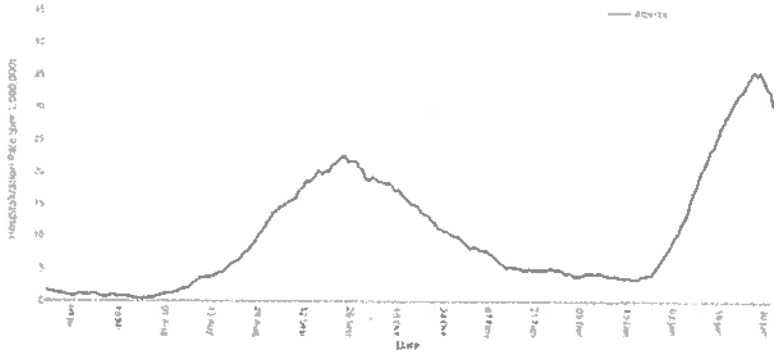
- Daily new case counts were declining from the peak of the Omicron wave.
  Test positivity rate had begun to decline



Hospitalizations were at a plateau



Rate of new hospitalizations was declining



Rate of new hospitalizations (7-day rolling average, average of current day and previous 6 days) by admission date in Alberta and by zone

Evidence of effectiveness of masks in education settings (see TAB 6 and TAB 8)

- Analysis of research literature indicated wearing masks can be effective in contributing to reducing the transmission of COVID-19 in public and community settings; however, the impact of masking in schools was less clear, with mixed results from different studies.
- The range of policies in place across different jurisdictions limited the ability to evaluate the impact of single specific measures for daycare or school settings due to variability in the combination of measures implemented.
- It was difficult to determine the effect of removing or changing one measure (e.g. masking), as many of the studies examining COVID-19 incidence in schools had layered infection prevention and control measures in place.

- Studies found that transmission in schools has remained limited under a wide range of prevention measures, such as masking, cohorting, cancelling higher-risk activities, distancing, hygiene protocols, reduced class size, and enhanced ventilation.
- Alberta data looking at schools that did or didn't have requirements for masks in the fall of 2021, before provincial masking requirements were reinstated, showed more outbreaks in schools without masking requirements than in those with masking requirements. It cannot be definitively concluded that the lack of masking caused more outbreaks, however, as there could be systematic differences in communities that influenced school boards' masking policy decisions that could have also influenced community transmission risk and impacted these results.
- Different groups of clinical experts had come to different conclusions about the importance of school mask mandates as a single intervention, and the balance of benefits and potential risks. For example, see:

    - https://static1.squarespace.com/static/61e5afd7a33d334ec9f84595/t/62115f823054865c6d5497a3/1645305731693/Urgency+of+Normal+Toolkit.pdf

    - https://covid19-sciencetable.ca/wp-content/uploads/2022/01/Ontario-Returns-to-School-An-Overview-of-the-Science_20220112-1.pdf

Negative effects of mask-wearing for children (see TAB 6)

- Masks can disrupt learning and interfere with children's social, emotional, and speech development by impairing verbal and non-verbal communication, emotional signaling, and facial recognition.

Lower risk of severe outcomes for children

- Children are less likely to have a severe outcome if infected with COVID-19. This information can be seen in Table 7 of the Severe Outcomes tab of TAB 10 showing that the rate of COVID-19 hospitalizations in school-aged children is 0.3 per 100 cases in those age 5-9 and 0.5 per 100 cases in those age 10-19. Rates of ICU admissions and deaths are even lower. The severe outcome risks for those in these two age groups is the lowest of all age groups.

Other measures in place to mitigate transmission risk

- While the masking requirement was removed for youth under thirteen years of age in all settings and for students enrolled in kindergarten through grade 12 while attending at a school and participating in curriculum related or extracurricular activities, other measures remained in effect in schools, including:
    - Mandatory symptom screening prior to school attendance, and mandatory isolation for all those with COVID-19 symptoms
    - Cohorting for kindergarten to grade six
    - Physical distancing from those not in their cohort
    - Mandatory masking for adults

- Guidance for schools and school buses supported schools to reduce opportunities for transmission, including:
  - Practices to minimize the risk of transmission of infection among attendees
  - Procedures for rapid response if an attendee developed symptoms of illness
  - Maintenance of high levels of sanitation and personal hygiene.
- Guidance for Schools (K-12) and School Buses https://open.alberta.ca/dataset/eca63dc4-1fd4-4eb4-9e3d-572d6004c0f8/resource/9b2ca09f-5265-48a9-8921-3b03be59d7a9/download/health-covid-19-information-guidance-schools-k12-school-buses-2022-03.pdf
- CMOH Order 02-2022 and CMOH Order 04-2022 (see TABS 3 and 4) required isolation for persons who were symptomatic, asymptomatic but with a positive rapid test result, and confirmed cases of COVID-19. Therefore, children and others in these cases were not permitted to attend school.

Public Context

- Mask requirements for schools was a divisive issue in some communities as increasing numbers of parents and students were protesting mask mandates, including protests staged at schools.

Jurisdictional comparison

- The World Health Organization did not recommend masks for children under age 6.
- The European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control recommended against the use of masks for any children in primary school.
- Some jurisdictions began easing public health measures after reaching their Omicron peak, including Denmark, England, Scotland, Ireland, Norway, South Africa, Finland and Sweden.
- The United Kingdom, Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Norway, and the Netherlands did not require children under the age of 12 to wear masks at any time.
- Mask mandates had been lifted in California, Connecticut Delaware, New Jersey just prior to the change in Alberta.

Decision making process

In the response to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Public Health Act was used in ways and on a scale that did not have a precedent. Given the wide-sweeping implications of CMOH orders that set new legal requirements for the province of Alberta in order to minimize the impacts of the novel virus, processes were put in place to ensure that policy of this nature was substantively informed by decisions made by elected officials in committees of cabinet tasked with directing Alberta's COVID-19 response.

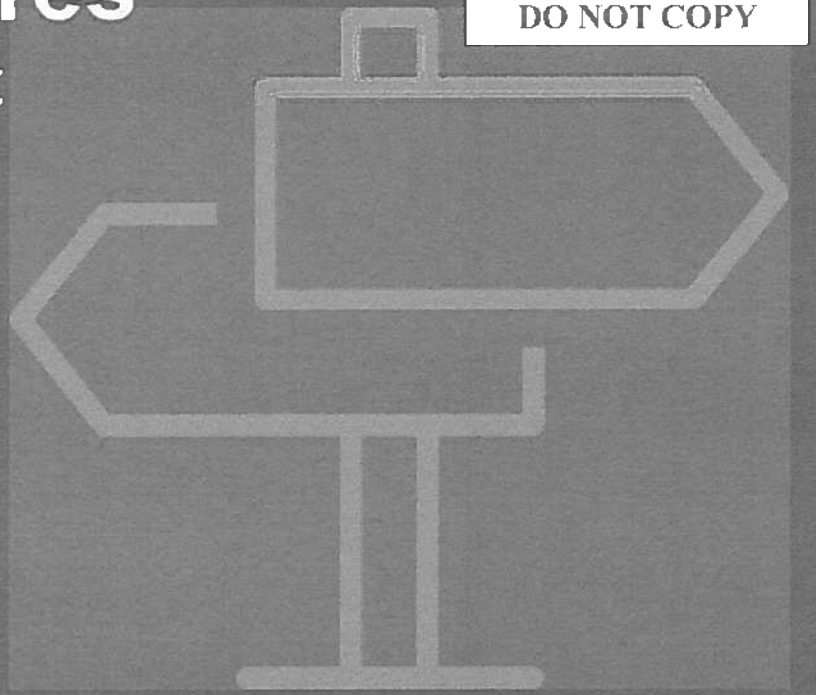
This process involved the CMOH providing advice and recommendations to elected officials on how to protect the health of Albertans. Those elected officials took that advice as one part of the considerations in the difficult decisions that they had to make in response to COVID-19. The final policy decision-making authority rested with the elected officials, and those policy decisions were then implemented through the legal instrument of CMOH Orders. In making the CMOH Orders, the CMOH determined how to operationalize each policy decision.

Given this process described above, in the first submission for this judicial review, the documentation informing CMOH Order 08-2022 was understood to be the information before the Priorities Implementation Committee of Cabinet (PICC) when they determined the next steps in managing COVID-19 in Alberta, and the minutes of the decisions from that committee, which informed the content of CMOH Order 08-2022. Neither of these documents could be released, due to Cabinet confidence.

TAB 13

Endemic Planning – Easing Public Health Measures

Priorities Implementation Cabinet Committee



Alberta Health

Minister Jason Copping

February 8, 2022

For Decision

Alberta

Outline

- Endemic Planning Considerations
- Current State
- Jurisdictional Comparison
- Easing Public Health Measures
  - Alberta Covid Records Consideration

Endemic Planning Considerations

Phases of the Response to COVID-19

Pandemic Phase

Characterized by increased cases with significant levels of severe outcomes, requiring swift government action to protect safety of citizens, measures for mitigating impact and spread, and interventionist government policies in areas of health, economics and social programs.

Transition Phase

Characterized by decline in acceleration of cases, ongoing government surveillance, and a declining reliance on interventionist policies as we approach the endemic phase.

Endemic Phase

Characterized by stable or predictable case increases with decreasing levels of severe outcomes, increased public "tolerance" of the disease, enhanced individual responsibility for managing risk, and public health management focusing on high risk settings.

Endemic Phase

- Pandemics typically move through many waves of transition and heightened response before reaching an endemic state.
- An endemic state does not mean COVID stops impacting the population, but rather that the magnitude of impact is able to be managed within the system.
- Going forward, with no mitigation of community transmission, it is expected that the acute care system will continue to be under strain for several months to come, impacting surgical volumes and other care provision.
- We should expect that future respiratory virus seasons will likely have additive components of seasonal influenza, COVID, and other respiratory illnesses impacting the acute care and public health systems.
- Preparing for possible future variants of concern that may cause severe outcomes will be important, but case suppression will not be the default goal.

COVID-19 Status in Alberta

- COVID-19 in Alberta is coming to the end of the Pandemic Phase, with hospitalizations still putting pressure on the health system.

- We will soon be moving into the Transition Phase.
  - The positivity rate has remained relatively stable in the past few weeks.
  - Hospitalizations seem to be at a plateau, still high and straining the system.

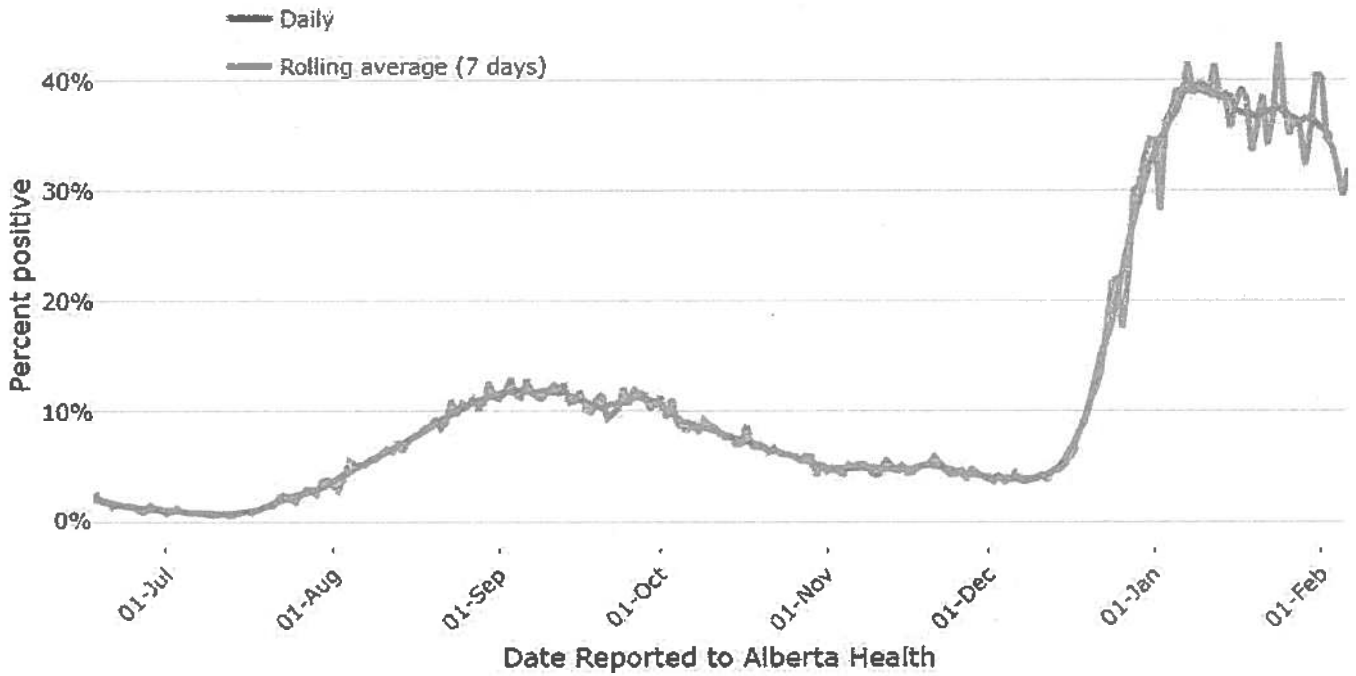
Last Updated: Feb. 7

Omicron Jurisdictional Scan Summary

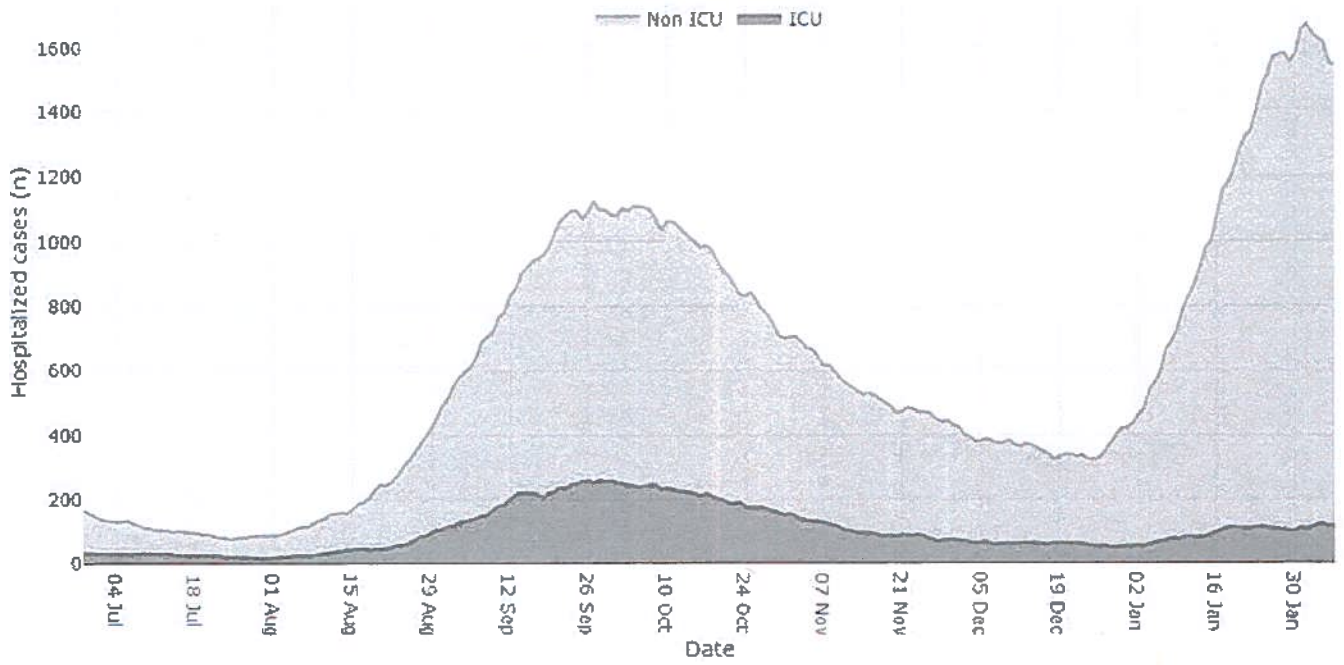
- A few jurisdictions that have reached their Omicron peak have eased most of their public health measures.
  - Denmark – Denmark eased all of their COVID-19 measures despite rising case rates. Their hospital system is coping, but new hospital admissions have increased.
  - England – England has removed all measures. Cases and hospitalizations have continued to fall.
  - Ireland – Ireland has eased most measures but is maintaining the mask mandate and special measures in schools until end February. Case numbers have made a slight rebound, but hospitalizations have continued to fall since the easings took place.
- Some Canadian provinces have announced phased or partial easing of their public health measures. However, most provinces have more restrictive measures than Alberta, and it will take them some time to reduce their measures to Alberta's current level of restrictions.

Current State

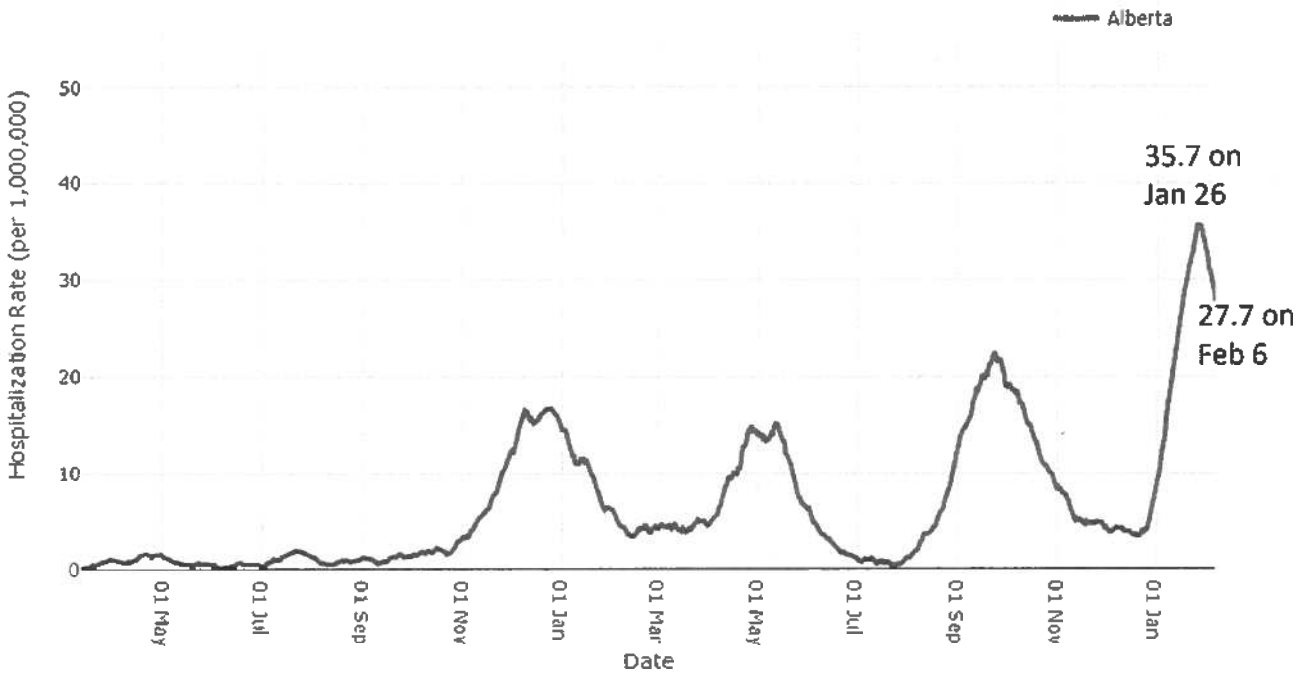
Positivity Rate Trend – As of February 6



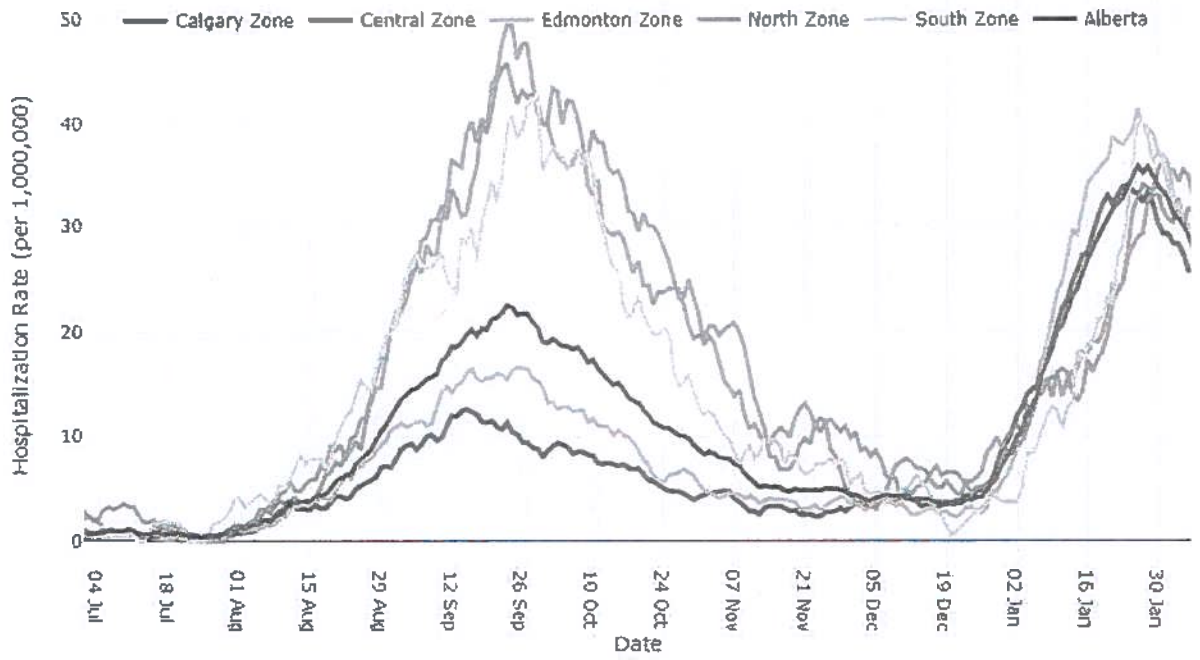
Hospitalizations – As of February 6



Rate of new COVID hospitalizations – As of February 6



Rate of New COVID Hospitalizations – As of February 6



Reasons for Hospitalization Summary

As of February 6

	All Admissions				Last 7 days
	Non-ICU		ICU		Non-ICU		ICU
Reason Type	n	%	n	%	n	%	n	**%
Primary COVID admission	1032	38.6	112	48.9	234	39.7	33	49.3
COVID-contributing admission	542	20.3	60	26.2	134	22.8	23	34.3
Incidental	1062	39.7	57	24.9	209	35.5	11	16.4
Unable to determine	40	1.5	0	0.0	12	2.0	0	0.0
Total	2676	100.0	229	100.0	589	100.0	67	100.0

Note:

* Only hospitalizations with available reason types are included.
* Incidental hospitalizations are those where a COVID-positive person has been hospitalized but their reason for admission was deemed to be unrelated to their COVID diagnosis.
* For recent hospital admissions, there may be a delay in reason type information. This may lead to some fluctuations in day-to-day information for "All Admissions" compared to those reported in the "Last 7 days".

Hospitalization Comparisons

		Alberta Health Public Reporting*			AHS Capacity Report (Internal)
Date		Feb 4	Feb 5	Feb 6	Feb 4	Feb 5	Feb 6
COVID hospitalizations (increase/decrease within report)	ICU	122	116 (-6)	118 (+2)	121	119 (-2)	122 (+3)
	Non-ICU	1,492	1,437 (-55)	1,424 (-13)	1,661	1,630 (-31)	1,620 (-10)
	Total	1,614	1,553 (-61)	1,542 (-11)	--	--	--
Total hospitalizations (increase/decrease within report)	Total ICU	--	--	--	195	193 (-2)	195 (+2)
	Total ICU Occupancy	--	--	--	81%	80% (-1)	81% (+1)
	Total non-ICU	--	--	--	5,247	5,193 (+54)	5,247 (-54)
	Total non-ICU Occupancy	--	--	--	85%	84% (-1)	85% (+1)

*Public health surveillance (population-level impacts reported publicly based on number of people in hospital with COVID) - numbers based on end of day Feb 6.

Wastewater Surveillance – As of February 7

Zone	Testing Site	Previous week trends	Preliminary Signals
South	Lethbridge	Decrease	Increase
	Medicine Hat	Increase	Decrease
	Taber	Increase	Decrease
	Brooks	Decrease	Decrease
Calgary	Airdrie	Increase	Fluctuating, stable trend
	Banff	Decrease	Decrease
	City of Calgary	Decrease	Decrease
	Canmore	Decrease	Increase
	High River	Decrease	Increase
	Okotoks	Decrease	Increase
	Strathmore	Increase	Fluctuating, stable trend
Central	Red Deer	Increase	Decrease
	Lacombe	Fluctuating, stable trend	Decrease
Edmonton	City of Edmonton	Fluctuating, stable trend	Fluctuating, stable trend
	Fort Saskatchewan	Fluctuating, stable trend	Fluctuating, stable trend
North	Fort McMurray	Increase	Decrease
	Grande Prairie	Increase	Increase
	Cold Lake	Decrease	Fluctuating, stable trend
	Edson new	NA	Increase

- The trends reported in this table are based on this rolling average as reported the afternoon of February 4, 2022.
- Overall wastewater concentrations of virus have fluctuated greatly between sampling dates at this time, and therefore any trends may be premature.

Vaccines – As of February 6

- Doses Administered on February 6: 5,965
- Total to date: 8,376,671
- Total pediatric doses (first and second doses): 218,580
- Total third doses: 1,499,682
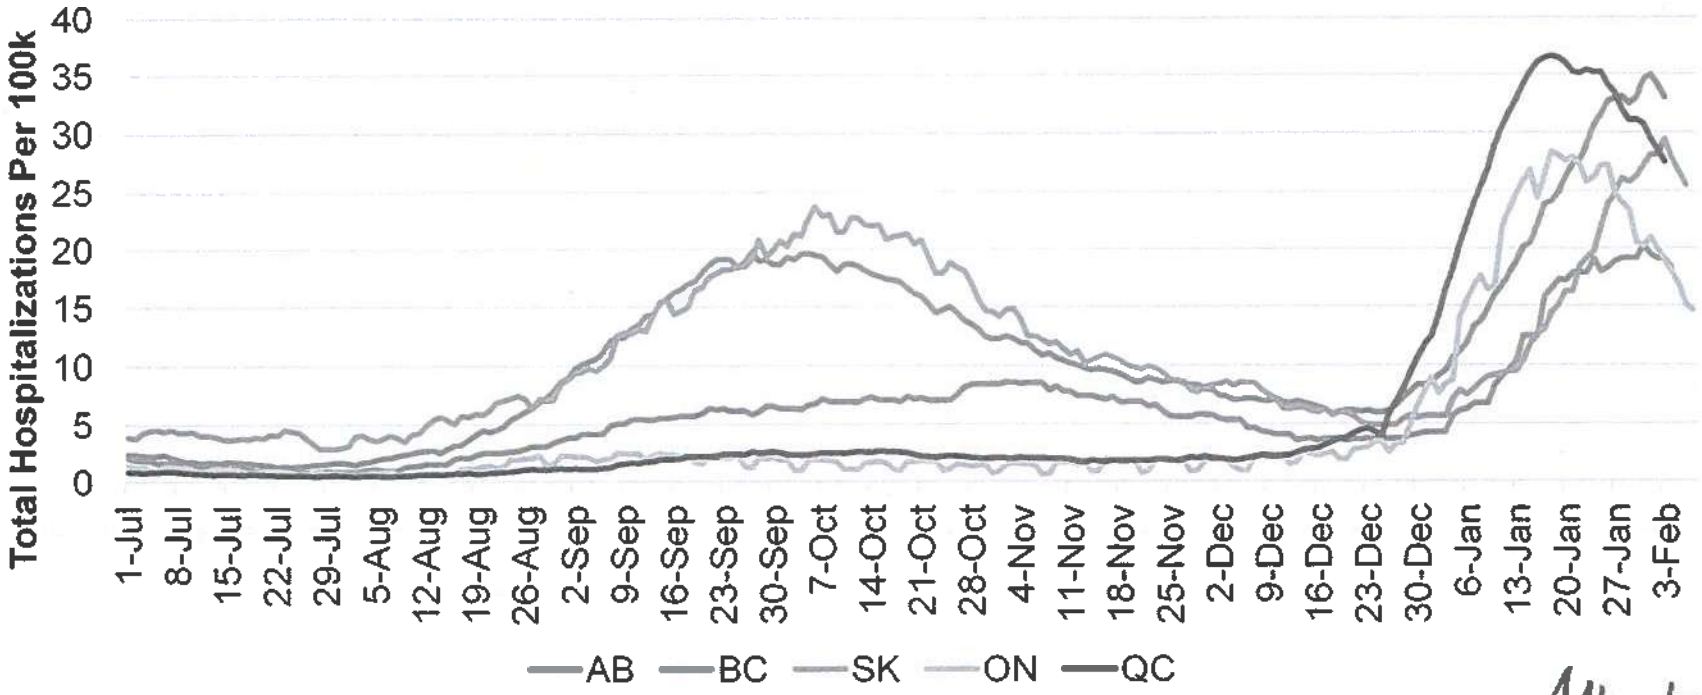
- Percent of 18+ population with three doses: 43.4%
- Percent of 12+ population with one dose: 89.9%
- Percent of 12+ population with two doses: 86.2%
- Percent of 12+ population with three doses: 39.9%
- Percent of 5+ population with one dose: 85.8%
- Percent of 5+ population with two doses: 79.8%
- Percent of 5+ population with three doses: 36.1%

Jurisdictional Comparison

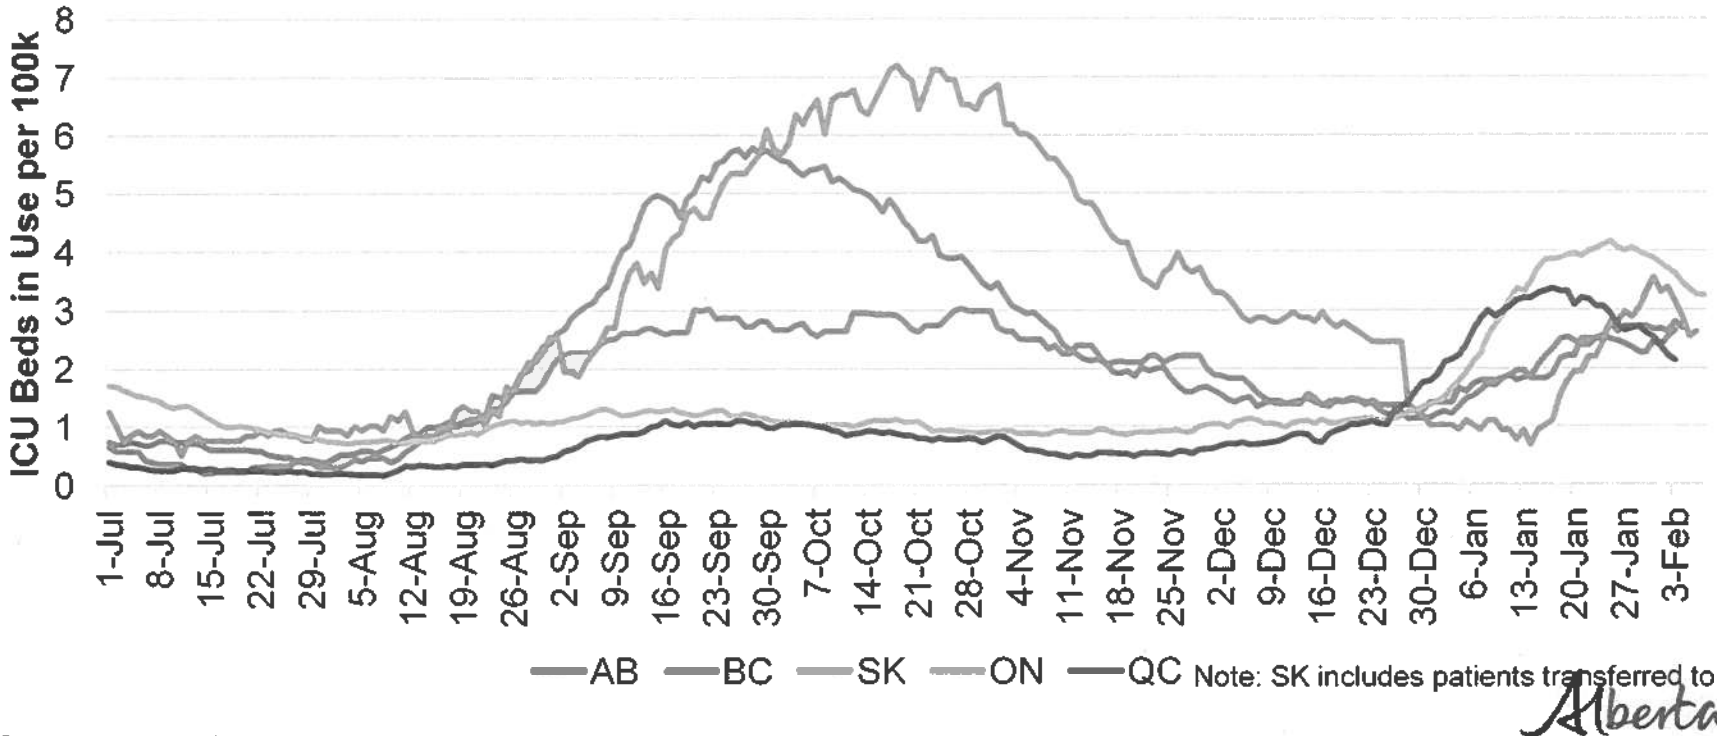
Last Updated: Feb. 7

COVID-19 hospitalization rate per 100k



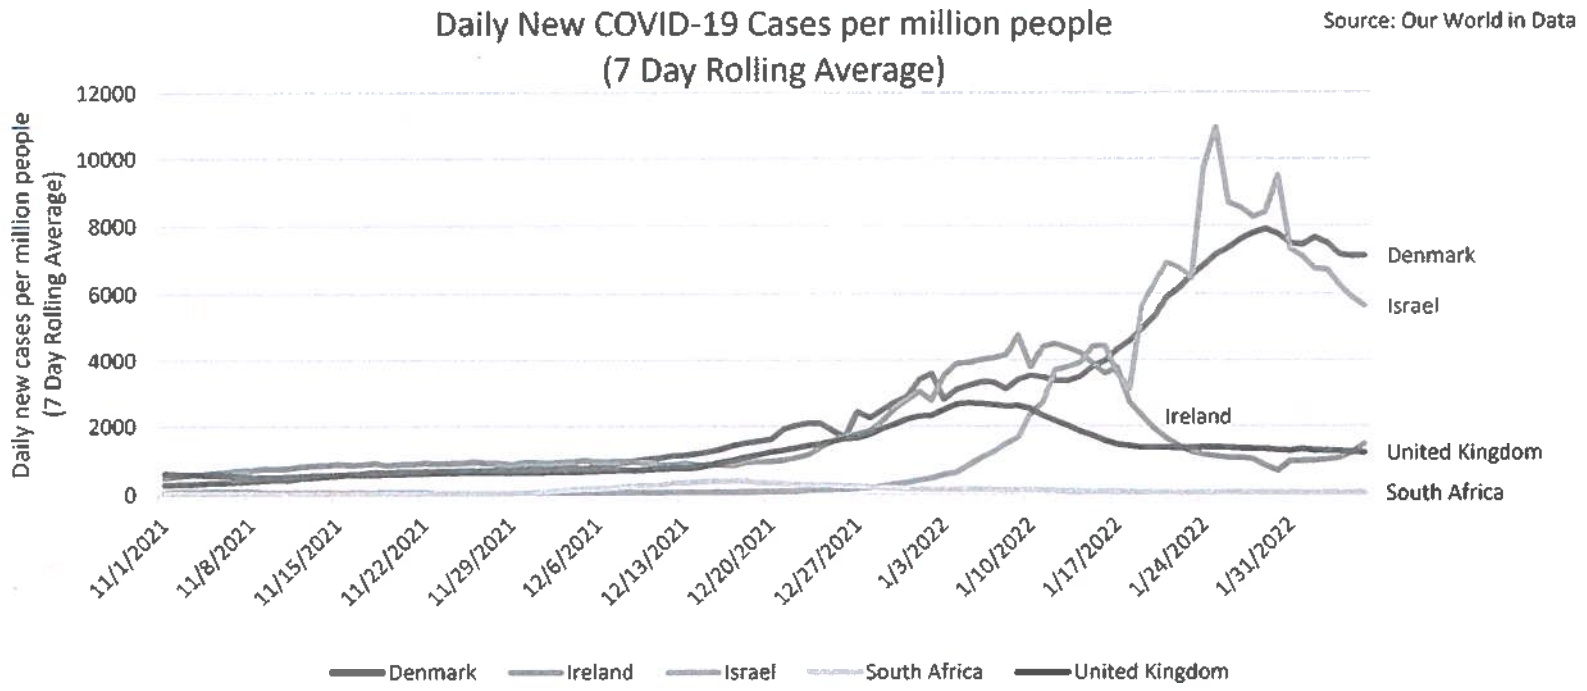
Last Updated: Feb. 7

COVID-19 ICU usage per 100k



Last Updated: Feb. 7

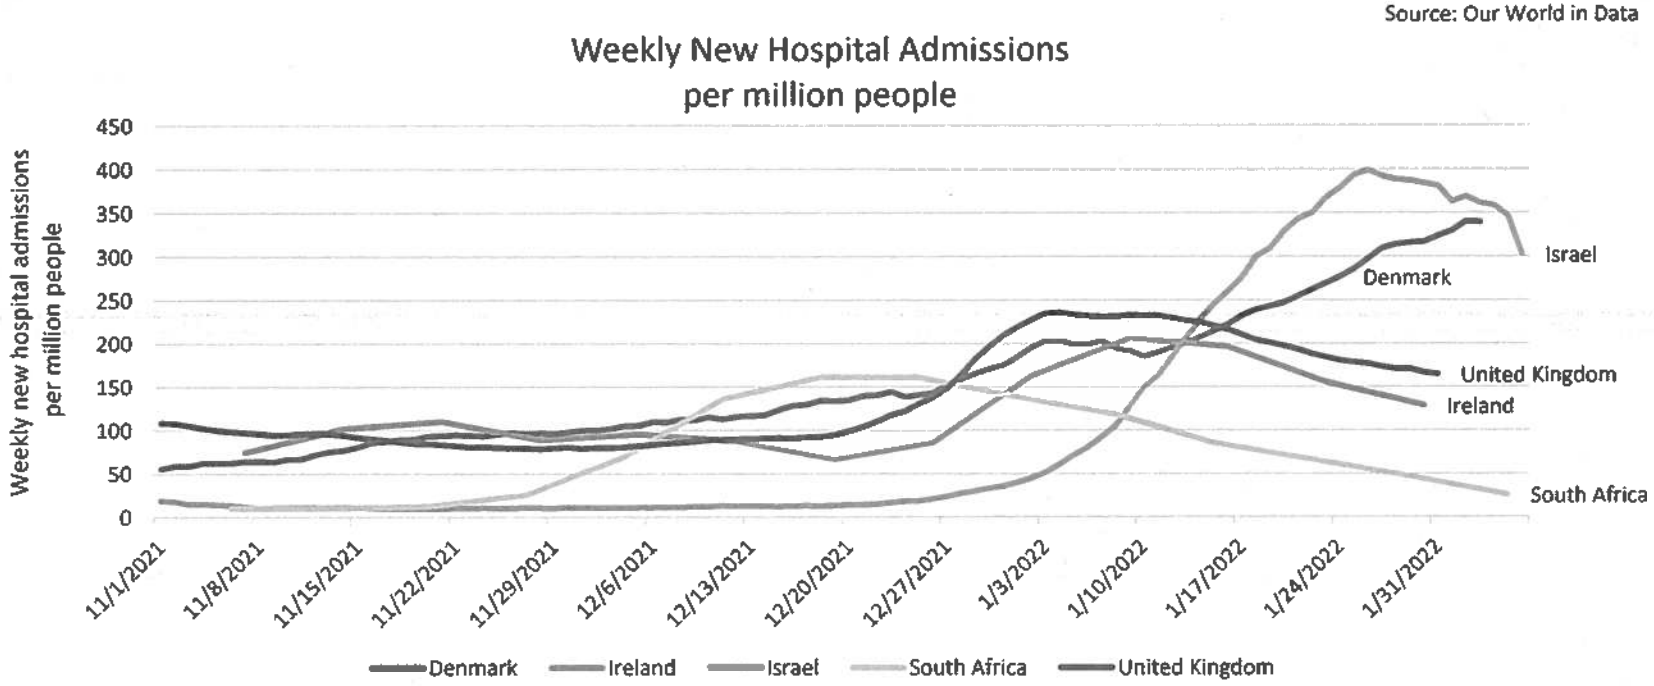
Daily new COVID Cases per million people



Last Updated: Feb. 7

Weekly new hospital admissions per million people

Source: Our World in Data



Easing Public Health Measures

Framework for Easing Public Health Measures

- Previous PICC direction on the following principles has informed the proposed approaches for easing public health measures.
- When:
  - Alberta has opted for a conditions-based approach, which requires certain metrics to be achieved before moving to subsequent steps.
  - Alberta will be a leader in entering the endemic space, balancing the risks and benefits to easing before other Canadian jurisdictions.
- How:
  - Gradual removal of public health measures, signaling the transition to endemic stage through a number of steps, which has the following benefits:
    - Enables monitoring and minimizes the impacts of a potential exit wave, with less risk of quickly losing system resources that may be needed if the exit wave is larger and more impactful than anticipated.
    - More opportunity to monitor and adjust if needed, and less chance of having to reverse easings.

Conditions for Easing of Measures

- Lifting of restrictions should begin only once pressures on the healthcare system have sufficiently eased and are likely to continue easing.
- Easing should also take into account an assessment of relevant trends and context, including positivity rates, wastewater surveillance, and the overall acute care system burden.
- Specifically, easing of measures should be predicated on declining rates of new COVID-19 hospitalizations over a sustained period of time.

Easing Measures

- Previously, Alberta Health recommended that the easing of measures be proportionate to the risk of transmission.
  - Measures should be removed as soon as safe to do so.
  - Measures that are least restrictive to Albertans and entities while effective for reducing the risk of transmission are retained for longer (i.e., allows more freedom for normalcy to resume in as many aspects of life as possible).
- Per previous PICC direction, 3-step approaches to easing are proposed, with a focus on removing the Restrictions Exemption Program and easing youth masking requirements.
- Three approaches have been developed for consideration:
  - The first approach includes a significant easing in step 1; any potential impacts of the initial easing can be monitored and adjusted for before moving to the next step (e.g., delayed entry into subsequent steps).
  - The second approach includes a moderate easing between all steps; any potential impacts more likely to be adjusted for throughout each step (e.g., able to enter subsequent steps without significant delays).
  - The third approach would be defined by the specific measures that PICC chooses.

Post-Easing

- As Alberta eases public health measures, Alberta Health will continue to monitor for any unintended outcomes or scenarios, which could include:
  - Larger than anticipated exit wave that leads to increase in hospitalizations and/or workforce impacts.
  - Emergence of a new, higher risk variant (e.g., changes in transmissibility, severity, effectiveness of vaccine, etc.).
- If the impacts of the above are beyond the ability of the health care system to cope, re-instatement of public health measures may be recommended.
  - Revisiting previous mechanisms to address COVID-19 transmission would need to be weighed with other policy considerations and Alberta's overall risk tolerance.

Option 1:

Step	Measures to be Eased	Potential Condition

1	• Restrictions Exemption Program removed.
	  ○ Entertainment venue restrictions also removed (e.g., capacity limits, liquor sales and operational hours, food/beverage in seating, interactive activities).
	• No capacity limits for entities that were out of scope for Restrictions Exemption Program.
	  ○ Physical distancing requirement removed.
	• Masking not required for youth (17 and under) in any setting.
	• Provincial school requirements removed (masking, K-6 cohorting, etc.).
	• Screening prior to youth activities removed.
	• No limits on indoor or outdoor gatherings.
		• Sustained decline in new COVID-19 hospitalization admission rate.

2	• Masking no longer required. • Shift to individual and family risk assessment. • Mandatory work from home removed.	• Continued decline in new COVID-19 hospitalization admission rate after initiation of Step 1.
3	• COVID-specific Continuing Care measures removed. • Mandatory isolation removed (becomes a recommendation only).	• Continued decline in new COVID-19 hospitalization admission rate after initiation of Step 2.

Considerations for Option 1

- Majority of public health measures are lifted in step 1.
- All existing public health measures will be lifted by step 3.
- Timing between steps depend on conditions.
- Pros
  - Less social and economic impact from prolonged continuation of public health measures. Businesses/entities are able to resume regular operations.
  - Measures that are least restrictive to participation in society are in place after Step 1. Albertans have opportunity to start assessing their personal/family risk and make decisions about their context (i.e., choice to wear mask, space out, size of social network, etc).
  - The measures that remain in place the longest protect the most vulnerable populations.
  - Alberta is a leader in reopening; easings will be ahead of most Canadian jurisdictions.
- Cons
  - Leading reopening provides less opportunity to learn from other jurisdictions, assess impacts, manage risk and avoid potential reversals.
  - Provides less time for the health system to regain capacity and resume normal operations.

Option 2:

Step	Measures to be Eased	Potential Condition

1	• Restrictions Exemption Program removed.
	  o Entertainment venue restrictions retained (liquor sales and operational hours, no food/beverage in seating, no interactive activities).
	• Large venues capped at 50 percent capacity (status quo for previous REP venues; increase for previous out of scope venues).
	  o Physical distancing recommended, but not required.
	• Masking not required for 5 and under.
	• Screening prior to youth activities removed.
	• No limits on outdoor gatherings; indoor gathering limits remain.
		• Sustained decline in new COVID-19 hospitalization admission rate.

2	• Capacity limits removed for large venues and entertainment venue restrictions removed. • No limits on indoor gatherings. • Mandatory work from home lifted. • Provincial school masking requirement removed.	• Continued decline in new COVID-19 hospitalization admission rate after initiation of Step 1.
3	• COVID-specific Continuing Care measures removed. • Remaining school requirements removed (i.e., K-6 cohorting). • Mandatory isolation removed (becomes a recommendation only). • Masking no longer required. • Shift to individual and family risk assessment.	• Continued decline in new COVID-19 hospitalization admission rate after initiation of Step 2.

Considerations for Option 2

- Step 1 includes significant lifting of public health measures while keeping some protective elements in private gatherings (where there is no masking) and large venues.
- All existing public health measures will be lifted by step 3.
- Timing between steps depends on conditions.
- Pros
  - This approach means that some protective measures are still in place while Alberta is experiencing cases and outcomes from the Omicron wave. The health system has additional time to regain capacity while the majority of businesses/entities are able to resume regular operations.
  - The measures that remain in place the longest protect the most vulnerable populations.
  - Provides more time for Albertans to adjust to reopening and to start assessing their personal/family risk and make decisions about their context (i.e., choice to wear mask, space out, size of social network, etc.).
  - Alberta is still a leader in reopening while minimizing any potential exit waves; easings will be ahead of most Canadian jurisdictions.
- Cons
  - Some Albertans may not be satisfied with the pace or sequencing of easings.
  - May not provide enough time for the health system to regain capacity and resume normal operations.

Option 3:

Measures to be removed	Step	Date
Businesses/Entities • Restrictions Exemption Program (REP). • Entertainment venue restrictions (liquor sales and operational hours, no food/beverage in seating, no interactive activities). • Capacity limits for entities that were out of scope for REP. • Work from home requirement.	• • • • •
Masking in Public Places • Masking requirements for youth (17 and under) in public places. • Masking for all Albertans in public places.	• •
Youth Specific Requirements • Mandatory masking for grades 4+. • Other school requirements (K-6 cohorting, physical distancing). • Screening prior to youth activities.	• •
Private Social Gatherings • Limits for outdoor gatherings. • Limits for indoor gatherings (private dwellings).	• •
Mandatory isolation.	•
COVID-specific Continuing Care measures.	•

Considerations for Option 3

- PICC selects individual measures which are in each of the three steps for easing.
- All existing public health measures will be lifted by step 3.
- Timing between steps depends on conditions.
- Pros
  - Steps are based on what is determined to be the most appropriate balance between public health and other policy considerations.
  - Potentially more responsive to public opinion.
- Cons
  - Legal and operational connections between some measures may constrain available options for sequencing.
  - Some Albertans may not be satisfied with the pace or sequencing of easings.
  - May not provide enough time for the health system to regain capacity and resume normal operations.

Decision: Approach for Easing of Measures

	Option 1	Option 2	Option 3

1	• Restrictions Exemption Program removed.
	  ○ Entertainment venue restrictions also removed (closing times, food/beverage in seating, interactive activities).
	• No capacity limits for entities that were out of scope for Restrictions Exemption Program.
	  ○ Physical distancing requirement removed.
	• Masking not required for youth (17 and under) in any setting.
	• Provincial school requirements removed (masking, K-6 cohorting, etc.).
	• Screening prior to youth activities removed.
	• No limits on indoor or outdoor gatherings.
		• Restrictions Exemption Program removed.
		  ○ Entertainment venue restrictions retained (closing times, no food/beverage in seating, no interactive activities).
		• Large venues capped at 50 percent capacity (status quo for previous REP venues; increase for previous out of scope venues).
		  ○ Physical distancing recommended, but not required.
		• Masking not required for 5 and under.
		• Screening prior to youth activities removed.
		• No limits on outdoor gatherings; indoor gathering limits remain.
			Specific measures in each step are chosen by PICC.

2	• Masking no longer required in all public places. • Shift to individual and family risk assessment. • Mandatory work from home removed.	• Capacity limits removed for large venues and entertainment. venue restrictions removed. • No limits on indoor gatherings. • Mandatory work from home lifted. • Provincial school masking requirement removed.
3	• COVID-specific Continuing Care measures removed. • Mandatory isolation removed (becomes a recommendation only).	• COVID-specific Continuing Care measures removed. • Remaining school requirements removed (i.e., K-6 cohorting). • Mandatory isolation removed (becomes a recommendation only). • Masking no longer required.

Public Communication of Approach

- Announce as a bold but prudent approach, highlighting the thresholds for each step of re-opening:
  - News conference, news release, social media, web update.
  - Support with advertising and later announcements.
  - Tele town halls with specific sectors (businesses, places of worship, etc.) to convey details and answer questions.
  - Messaging to highlight:
    - The importance of Albertans beginning to return to regular life.
    - The framework being gradual and dependant on reaching specific thresholds.
    - Clear details about each step and when they will happen.
    - Protections for the vulnerable and the health system continuing to be in place.

Endemic Planning Decisions

- Alberta Health will return to PICC in the coming weeks for direction on how the GOA should manage COVID-19 in the long term.
- In the meantime, using public health surveillance and indicators such as wastewater, Alberta Health will monitor the progress of the transition to endemic given the chosen approach to easing public health measures. If the situation worsens and the continued transition to endemic is not possible due to the level of strain on the acute care system, the reinstatement of public health measures may be recommended.
  - To stay in an endemic state, there would need to be sufficient health care capacity to respond to cyclical recurrence of COVID, and mandatory public health measures would not generally be used as long as severity is moderate to low. However, the health system has not yet returned to a baseline state, and acute care recovery, including surgical volume increases, will be slowed by the impact of rapid easing of measures.
- Future endemic planning decisions could include:
  - How will the GOA respond to COVID-19 outbreaks in the future?
  - What information will the GOA provide to the public on future COVID-19 case numbers, hospitalizations and deaths?
  - Given that it is extremely likely that new variants of concern will continue to emerge, how much surge capacity should the GOA maintain to address future waves of COVID-19?
  - What is the future approach to rapid test distribution?

Alberta Covid Records Considerations

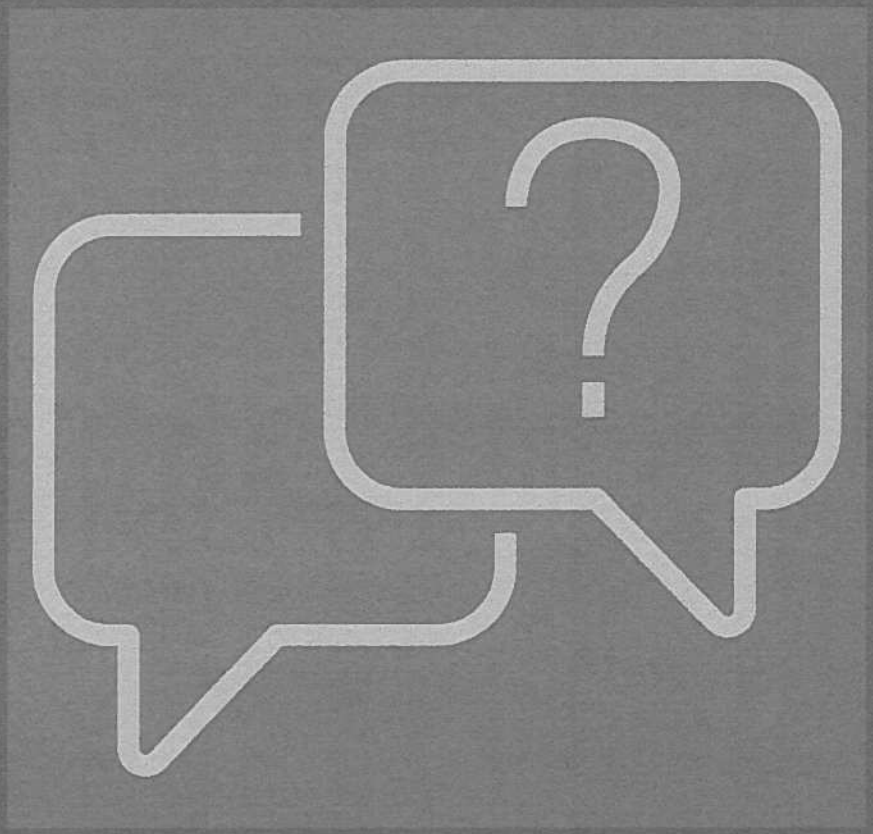
Alberta Covid Records – current Context

- Alberta Covid Records is currently comprised of two main components:
  - The website to generate proof of vaccination with QR code: alberta.ca/covidrecords.
  - Official verifier apps available on the Apple and Google stores that enable verification of Albertans' QR codes in support of REP.
- The availability of proof of vaccination QR code generation through alberta.ca/covidrecords is required for Albertans to support federal and international travel requirements.
  - When REP is discontinued, Alberta will need to maintain the Covid Records website to generate proof of vaccination with QR code to support these travel requirements.

Post REP options for Alberta Covid Records

1. Remove the official Alberta Covid Records verifier apps from the Google and Apple stores – Recommended.
   - Previously downloaded verifier apps could still be used. It is not possible to force removal from personal devices.
2. Provide explicit authority to permit voluntary use of Alberta Verifier App.
   - Those who choose to ask to validate vaccine status would need to obtain their own legal advice to confirm whether the organization has good legal authority to collect and use the information for its own purposes.
   - Employers may still be able to implement their own vaccine mandates and would benefit from being able to continue to use the validator app.
   - Through the QR code, the government makes Albertans' personal health information available to them, and it is up to Albertans to decide whether to provide that information to third parties.

Questions?



Appendix

Current Restrictions

Current Restrictions – Unchanged by REP

- Mandatory isolation (confirmed case or symptomatic; vaccinated vs unvaccinated).
- Mandatory masking in public places.
- Work from home.
- Private residences:
  - Up to 10 adults; no limit on youth under 18 (if with their parent/guardians); vaccinated or unvaccinated.
  - Limits on who can enter a private residence.
- Outdoor private social gatherings limited to 20 individuals.
- Measures for protests and similar activities.
- Attendance limited to 1/3 fire code for specific entities out-of-scope for REP:
  - Places of worship, retail, libraries.
  - Does not apply to health services, child care settings, schools, shelters, workplaces, personal and wellness services.
- Youth must be screened prior to undertaking an activity.
- School measures in place (e.g., masking, distancing, school buses).
- Operating and Outbreak standards for Continuing Care settings.

Current Restrictions – Without REP

- Physical distancing indoors and outdoors.
  - 3m for physical activity; 2m all other settings.
- Private social gatherings not permitted.
- Wedding and funerals.
  - Weddings and funeral services are permitted up to 50 people or 50% fire code, whatever is less.
  - No receptions permitted indoors; outdoor limit is 200.
- Attendance limited to 1/3 fire code for entities (at least 5 people permitted).
  - Can only attend with household/close contacts.
- Drive-ins permitted.
- Restaurants and similar:
  - Indoor dining not permitted.
  - Outdoor dining: limit 6 to a table; no mixing and mingling; liquor sales stop at 10 pm, consumption stops at 11pm.
- No indoor adult group physical activity/performance activity/recreation.
  - 1:1 or solo permitted.
  - Does not impact semi-professional/professional.

Alberta

Current Restrictions – With REP

- Individuals must be screened for proof of vaccination/negative COVID test/medical exception.
  - Mandatory masking and isolation requirements apply; mandatory physical distancing not required.
- Capacity limits:
  - Facilities with occupancy load 1,000+ - limit attendance to 50%.
  - Facilities with occupancy load 500 to 999 - limit attendance 500 attendees.
  - Facilities with occupancy load 499 or less – no capacity restriction.
- Food/beverage in audience settings
  - Permitted if stadium seating occupancy is 499 or less; concessions open.
  - Not permitted if stadium seating occupancy is 500 or more; restaurants/etc permitted in these settings if physically separate from stadium seating.
- Restaurants/events/etc:
  - Liquor sales and operating restrictions.
    - Class A, C and Special Events Licences: liquor sale stops at 11pm; close at 12:30am.
    - Facility, Gaming and Class B Licenses: liquor sale stops at 11pm; consumption stops at 12:30am.
  - Limit of 10 to a table, no mixing and mingling.
  - Interactive activities not permitted, exception for dancing at weddings.

Categories for Easing Measures

Category	Assessment
Gatherings	Outdoor – low risk • evidence indicates less likely for transmission. Indoor – high risk • household transmission still most likely source of COVID. • in private dwellings, individuals are not required to wear masks. • tend to be more social/intimate; less likely to maintain physical distancing.
Youth	• 0-4 ineligible for vaccination. • 5-11 eligible - timing for full vaccination variable. • increased exposure potential: o schools (adults still under Work From Home). o youth activities not required to be screened for vaccination/negative test. • may experience increased mental health impacts due to restrictions .
Considerations for businesses/entities	Medium risk • REP & Work From Home add a layer of protection to these settings. • may see breakthrough cases if not boosted. • may have implications for recommended masking at work stations if full staffing complement returns. • capacity restrictions: o reduce the number of people potentially exposed; o facilitates physical distancing. • Ventilation a factor.

Categories for Easing Measures

Category	Assessment
Continuing Care	Medium to High risk • vulnerable population; susceptible to infection and severe outcomes. • controlling entry into the space important for reducing transmission. • need to balance with overall mental health.
Masking	High risk • medical grade masking or greater quality has demonstrated impact on transmission. • low cost intervention; equitable and accessible. • physical and visual reminder of risk and potential for transmission.
Isolation	High risk • Infective individuals have limited interaction; reduces transmission potential.

Jurisdictional Scanning

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Context – High-Level Approach

Provinces have started to accelerate their easings as Omicron hospitalizations have stabilized.

- British Columbia has reopened gyms and fitness centres and is allowing youth tournaments but many other restrictions remain. British Columbia suggested additional public restrictions may be lifted by Feb. 21. British Columbia plans to maintain its proof of vaccination requirement until June 30.
- Saskatchewan has released its 'Living with COVID Plan', which closes its online booking tool for PCR testing. It is shifting from daily reporting of COVID-19 data, to weekly reporting.
- Manitoba is allowing larger private gatherings, and increased capacity in public places starting on Feb. 8. Manitoba is planning to lift all public health measures by spring.
- Quebec eased some public health measures on Jan. 31, and will make further easings on Feb. 7 and Feb. 14. Quebec has scrapped plans to tax the unvaccinated. Quebec plans to expand its proof of vaccination program to require a booster shot.
- Ontario is easing its measures in three phases starting on Jan. 31, with each phase being 21 days apart. Ontario originally intended to maintain its proof of vaccination requirements through all three phases, but has since announced they plan to reassess the value of the program.

Last Update: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – General Strategy and Masking

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON –Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
General Strategy	• On Feb. 3, Premier indicated the government will announce a firm date for lifting restrictions the week of Feb 7.	• On Feb 1, BC said it has reached the peak of hospitalization for the Omicron wave. • BC has started easing some restrictions and intends to gradually ease further restrictions in the weeks ahead. • BC has decided to extended their Vaccination Card program to June 30.	• On Feb. 3, SK announced its Living with COVID plan. The plan will see SK restricting the availability of PCR testing to people at risk of sever outcomes and reducing COVID-19 public reporting to once a week starting on Feb. 7. • SK plans to lift the proof of vaccination requirement by end of February.	• On Feb. 3, MB announced that it was planning to lift all public health measures by spring. • On Feb. 8, MB will introduce new public health measures that are less restrictive than current restrictions.	• On Feb. 3, ON said they need to reassess the value of its vaccine passport system. • On Jan. 20, ON announced a three phase plan to ease its Omicron measures, starting on Jan. 31. Each step will be separated by 21 days.	• On Feb. 1 QC cancelled the proposed tax on the unvaccinated and announced additional easings for gyms to take place of Feb. 14.
Masking	• Masking is required in all indoor public spaces for everyone over 2.	• Masking is required in all indoor public spaces for everyone over 5.	• Masking is required in all indoor public spaces for everyone over 2.	• Masking is required in all indoor public spaces for everyone over 5.	• Masking is required in all indoor public spaces for everyone over 2.	• Masking is required in all indoor public spacesfor everyone over 10. QC recommends people from 2 to 9 wear masks.

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Vaccines

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON –Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Vaccine Eligibility	• 18+ eligible for a booster after five months.	• 18+ eligible for a booster after six months. • Pregnant women can book a booster after eight weeks. • Immunocompromised individuals can get a 4th dose.	• 18+ eligible for a booster after three months.	• 18+ eligible for a booster after six months. • Interval can be shorted to five months for 60+, or those living in a First Nations Community.	• 18+ eligible for a booster after three months. • Immunocompromised individuals and residents of Long-Term Care can get a 4th dose after 84 days.	• 18+ eligible for a booster after three months. • People with chronic health conditions, pregnant women, health workers and people in remote areas also eligible. • QC plans to open pop-up vaccine clinics.
Proof of Vaccination	• Proof of vaccination, or negative test result, is required for everyone over 12 to enter all places participating in the Restrictions Exemption Program.	• Proof of vaccination is required for everyone over 12 to access some events, services and businesses.	• Proof of vaccination required for a list of establishments, businesses and event venues. • SK plans to lift the proof of vaccination requirement by the end of February.	• Proof of vaccination required for a list of establishments, businesses and event venues.	• Proof of vaccination required to access indoor dinning, theatres, gyms and other businesses. • ON not planning to require a third dose for people to be considered fully vaccinated.	• Proof of vaccination expanded to all large stores except grocery stores and pharmacies. • Proof of vaccination required for liquor and cannabis stores. • Booster will be required for vaccine passport once everyone has had an opportunity to get a booster.

Alberta

J-Scan – COVID Testing

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON –Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Rapid Testing	• Providing free rapid test at select locations. • First come first serve. • Limit one kit per person every 14 days.	• BC offers rapid tests for organizations seeking a rapid test screening program for their workforce. • To be used for asymptomatic people. • BC residents can report a positive rapid test result to a rapid test using an eForm.	• SK provides free rapid tests to residents; available at 600 locations around the province.	• MB replacing most of its PCR tests with rapid tests at all COVID-19 testing sites. • Residents no longer need a PCR test to confirm a positive rapid test result. • MB has Fast Pass Testing Sites for teachers and other staff working with students.	• ON has a limited supply of rapid tests that are being prioritized for health care and highest risk settings. This includes testing asymptomatic staff in these sectors to allow them to return to work. • ON provides free rapid tests for high-risk communities, organizations and workplaces. • ON provided students with two rapid tests each when they returned to school.	• Used for symptomatic screening. • Providing free rapid tests at pharmacies. • Rapid screening tests provided for parents, students (pre-school, K-6).
PCR Testing	• Prioritizing PCR testing for individuals in high-risk settings and individuals at risk for severe outcomes.	• BC prioritizing PCR tests for healthcare workers, emergency responders and high risk people. • BC provides rapid tests for those of low risk of having a severe outcome. • BC can conduct 20,000 PCR tests per day.	• As of Feb. 7, PCR testing will be reserved for priority populations at risk of sever outcomes. SK will end its online booking system for PCR testing; appointments will be made by appointment only.	• MB will provide PCR testing to symptomatic people and who: o Are experiencing homelessness. o Are hospitalized. o Have travelled outside of Canada in the past 14 days. o Have a positive rapid test are working with high risk individuals.	• ON providing PCR tests to symptomatic individuals who o Reside in a First Nation; Inuit or Metis community. o Are symptomatic students or education staff, who receive a PCR kit through school. o people who work in a hospital or congregate living setting. o high risk contacts connected to a confirmed outbreak. o Pregnant people. o Unvaccinated people over 70. o First responders.	• PCR testing only for certain groups of people, including health and social care workers and a list of priority individuals including frontline and essential workers and the vulnerable.

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Isolation and Quarantine

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Isolation requirements if diagnosed with COVID-19	• If fully vaccinated, self isolate five days from first date of symptoms; 10 days if unvaccinated. • Anyone leaving isolation prior to 10 days must wear a mask for an additional five for a total of 10 days.	• Vaccinated individuals and those 18 and younger need to self isolate five days from first date of symptoms; others must isolate for 10 days. • Anyone leaving isolation must wear a mask for an additional five days.	• Residents who receive a positive PCR or rapid antigen test will be required to isolate for five days, regardless of vaccination status.	• Self-isolation period for vaccinated people is five days from first date of symptoms; 10 days if unvaccinated. • Anyone leaving isolation must wear a mask and avoid high-risk settings for an additional five days.	• Self-isolation period for vaccinated people is five days from first date of symptoms; 10 days if unvaccinated or immunocompromised.	• If fully vaccinated must self isolate five days from first date of symptoms; 10 days if unvaccinated (5 days if under 12). • Anyone leaving isolation must wear a mask for an additional five days. • Health care workers to isolate for seven days.
Isolation requirements if a close contact	• Close contacts are not required to isolate. • If you are a household contact of a positive case, and not fully vaccinated you should stay home for 14 days, and monitor for symptoms.	• Close contacts do not have to self-isolate.	• Close contacts do not have to self isolate.	• Close contacts who do not have symptoms and are fully vaccinated (or tested positive in the past six months) do not need to self isolate. • Close contacts who are unvaccinated must self isolate for 10 days.	• Close contacts who are vaccinated and asymptomatic do not need to self-isolate. • Close contacts who are unvaccinated must self isolate for 10 days (5 days if under 12). • Individuals who work in high risk settings should not attend work for 10 days.	• High-risk contacts must self isolate five days if vaccinated. • High-risk contacts who are unvaccinated must self isolate for 10 days. • Low-risk contacts only need to watch for symptoms for 10 days.

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Private Gatherings

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Private Gatherings	• Indoor personal gathering limited to 10 adults. • Outdoor gatherings limited to 20 people, with 2m physical distancing. • Youth aged 18- do not count to the limit.	• Indoor personal gathering limited to 10 people plus one household. 12+ must be fully vaccinated. • No restrictions for outdoor personal gatherings.	• No limits.	• As of Feb. 8, indoor private gathering limits will be increased to 25 people plus household if vaccinated. Limited to ten people plus household if everyone is vaccinated. • Outdoor private gathering limits will be increased to 50 people plus household if vaccinated. Limited to 20 plus household if anyone is unvaccinated. • Youth aged 12- do not count to the limit.	• On, Jan. 31, social gatherings limits were increased to 10 people indoors and 25 people outdoors.	• Up to four people from different addresses, or a maximum of two family bubbles will be allowed to gather indoors. • Outdoor gatherings limited to 20 people from three households.

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Organized Gatherings

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures

Organized Gatherings	• Outdoor events that are fully outdoors have no capacity restrictions.
	• Places of worship:
	  ○ 1/3 capacity.
	  ○ 2 m physical distancing.
	• Weddings/funerals:
	  ○ Indoor wedding ceremonies and funeral services are capped at 50 people or 50% of capacity unless the facility implements REP.
	  ○ Indoor receptions are prohibited unless the facilities implements REP.
	  ○ Outdoor ceremonies, services and receptions are capped at 200 people unless the facility implements REP.
		• Indoor organized gatherings of any size are not allowed (this includes weddings and funeral receptions).
		• Outdoor organized seated gatherings can have a capacity of 5,000 or, 50%, capacity whichever is greater.
			• No limits.	• As of Feb. 8:
				  ○ Capacity limits on indoor events will be increased to 50% with proof of vaccination. If no proof of vaccination, limited to 25% capacity, or 250 people. Youth aged 12- do not count to the limit.
				  ○ Outdoor: must not exceed 50% capacity.
				  ○ Capacity limits on indoor weddings and funerals to stay the same: indoor limited to 50% capacity, or 250 people, if proof of immunization required; 25% or 25 people if proof of immunization not required.
					• On Jan. 31, indoor venues, including religious ceremonies/services were allowed to reopen at 50% capacity.
					• Outdoor events have no limits on numbers.
						• On Feb, 7, outdoor public events of up to 1,000 people will be allowed with vaccination passport (up from 250).
						• On Feb. 7, places of worship will be able to reopen at 50% capacity, with a maximum of 250 people with a vaccination passport. Funerals will be allowed with up to 50 people without a vaccination passport.
						• On Feb. 7, movies and theaters will be able to reopen at 50% capacity, with a maximum of 500 people (they are currently closed).

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Indoor Events

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Indoor events at venues	• Indoor facilities must limit capacity to: o 50% capacity if the facility has an capacity over 1,000. o 500 attendees if the facility has a capacity between 500 and 1,000. o No food or drink allowed in seated audience settings with more then 500 attendees. • Outdoor facilities have no capacity restrictions.	• Indoor events at venues can only have 50% capacity, no matter the size (includes concerts, sports events, movies, lectures). o Everyone must be fully vaccinated to attend. o Everyone must wear masks indoors. o Dancing is not permitted. o Spectators must be seated.	• No limits.	• Same as organized gatherings.	• On Jan. 31, concert venues, theaters and cinemas were allowed to reopen at 50% capacity.	• On Feb. 7, movies, theaters, entertainment venues and arenas will be able to reopen at 50% capacity, with a maximum of 500 people. Outdoor venues will be allowed to reopen with up to 1000 people.

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Exercise and Sport

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Exercise and fitness	• Unless the facilities has implemented REP: o Indoor group activities and competitions not permitted for 18+. • Outdoor activities can continue with no restrictions.	• Gyms allowed to be reopen with a space requirement of 7 square meters (7m²) per person. Individual and group fitness is allowed. • Programs for children and youth, activities that take place in pools and training for high performance athletes can continue. • Swimming pools can operate at 50% capacity.	• No limits.	• As of Feb. 8, gyms will be allowed to operate at to 50% capacity. This removes the 250 person limit.	• As of Jan. 31, gyms and sports facilities were allowed to reopen at 50% capacity. • Outdoor facilities able to operate at 50% capacity. • Proof of vaccination required for facilities with a capacity over 20,000.	• As of Feb. 14, gyms and spas that are currently closed may reopen at 50% capacity.
Sport	• Spectator attendance restricted to 1/3 fire code capacity; attendees limited to a single household or 2 close contacts if living alone. • Outdoor activities can continue with no restrictions.	• Adult indoor individual, group fitness and dance classes permitted – 25 max. per class, capacity limits 7m² per person, no drop-in. • Normal sport activities are allowed at 50% capacity. Non-employee supervisors, coaches and assistants for people 21 years or younger must be fully vaccinated. • Starting on Feb. 1, youth sports will be allowed for people 21 years or younger.	• No limits.	• As of Feb.8, indoor sport and recreational capacity at 50% capacity. No capacity limits for outdoor participants. This removes the 250 person limit. • Tournaments are allowed.	• As of Jan. 31, sporting arenas were allowed to open at 50% or 500 people, whichever is less. • Outdoor facilities open at 50% spectator capacity.	• As of Jan. 31, extracurricular sports allowed to resume for people under 18. Indoor tournaments not allowed. • Adult sports for groups of up to 25 people may resume on Feb 14. • Outdoor sports tournaments allowed with a health protocol and limited access to building.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Schools

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Schools		• School staff are required to disclose vaccination status. School districts may apply a vaccine mandate. • Families will only be notified of school exposures when attendance drops to below typical rates (i.e. approximately 10% higher then normal).	• Starting on Jan. 29, parents and caregivers no longer have to tell schools if their child has COVID-19. Schools will no longer record and communicate cases.	• Starting Jan.24, schools will resume offering vaccines for children aged 5-17. • Families will not be notified of close contacts, instead will provide staff and students with absenteeism reports through regular channels.	• Families will be notified of school exposures when absenteeism reaches 30%.	• Classrooms will only be shut down if 60% of students are in isolation. • Students will also no longer be required to isolate if they are a close contact. Isolation only required if they are a household contact. • Installing CO_2 readers in classrooms. • As of Jan. 31, extracurricular activities will be allowed to resume with proof of vaccination for 13 and up. Tournaments not allowed.

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Restaurants, bars and nightclubs

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Restaurants, bars and nightclubs	• Facilities that participate in REP: o Limit of 10 people per table. o No mingling between tables. o Liquor sales must end at 11pm, and must close at 12:30am. • Facilities that do not participate in REP: o No indoor dining. o Outdoor dining only for a maximum of 6 people per table. o Liquor sales must end at 10pm, and must close at 11pm.	• Places that do not offer full meal service must close (this includes bars, nightclubs and lounges that do not service meals). • Indoor and outdoor dining is allowed when: o A maximum of 6 people at a table. o Two metres physical barriers between tables. o Customers must stay seated. o No dancing. o Normal liquor service hours. o Masks are required when not seated at a table. • Restaurants and pubs must scan proof of vaccination.	• No limits.	• On Feb. 8: may operate at 50 percent capacity. o Limit of 10 people per table. o Individuals must provide proof of vaccination. o Liquor sales must end at 12pm. • On Feb. 8, individuals will no longer have to show proof of vaccination to pick up takeout.	• On Jan. 31, restaurants, bars without dancing were allowed to reopen at 50% capacity . o A maximum of 10 people at a table.	• On Jan. 31, restaurants were allowed to reopen at half capacity. Up to four people from different addresses, or two family bubbles will be allowed to share a table. • Complete closure of bars, taverns and casinos.

Alberta

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Retail, Work From Home, Other

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Retail Establishments	• Retail and shopping malls restricted to 1/3 capacity. • Attendees must be household members; or 2 close contacts if they live alone.	• Retail stores must have a COVID-19 Safety Plan.	• No limits.	• As of Feb. 8, retail establishments are allowed to operate at 100% capacity throughout Manitoba. Physical distancing measures and masks are still required.	• Retail settings, including shopping malls are permitted to operate at 50% capacity.	• 50% capacity limit and allow 20m² per person). • Vaccination passport required to enter stores with floor space greater than 1,500 m2.
Work From Home	• Mandatory work from home measures unless the employee has determined a physical presence is required.	• BC suggests businesses allow staff to work from home.		• As of Feb. 8, workplaces will be able to open without restrictions.	• Businesses and organizations will need to ensure their employees work remotely unless the nature of their work requires them to be on-site.	• Mandatory tele-work for any activity that can take place remotely.
Other		• BC requires businesses to reactivate their COVID Safety Plans.	• As of Feb 3, outbreaks related to public mass gatherings/events, places of worship, workplaces, daycares, and educational settings will no longer be investigated. • COVID-19 surveillance will be in alignment with reporting for other communicable diseases. The provincial COVID-19 dashboard will be discontinued and data updates will be provided on a weekly basis.		• Personal care services are required to operate at 50% capacity. • Public libraries limited to 50% capacity.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

J-Scan – Long-Term Care and Surgeries

	AB – Moderate Measures	BC – Moderate Measures	SK –Minor Measures	MB - Moderate Measures	ON – Significant Measures	QC –Significant Measures
Long-Term Care	• All visiting family and friends must wear a mask while indoors and in resident rooms. • Family and friends that are not fully immunized are asked to reconsider their need to visit onsite. • Operators have the authority to implement other measures (including require proof of vaccination, or rapid testing). • Announced plans to rescind a public health order barring health-care workers from working at more than one continuing-care facility by mid-February.	• Residents allowed to have one social visitor, in addition to a designated essential visitor. All visitors must show proof of vaccination. • All visitors over 12 must complete a rapid test at the entrance. • On Feb. 3, BC released an updated outbreak management protocol for long-term care and acute care systems	• All family and visitors to a long term care are required to wear a mask at all times. • Long-term care residents are encouraged to mask when outside their rooms and in common areas. • No limits on number of essential family/support persons. • Outbreaks in long-term care will continue to be publicly reported.	• Residents are to wear masks if they are medically able. • Designated family caregivers must be fully vaccinated. • General visitors can be scheduled by appointment.	• All general visitors to a long-term care home will need to be fully vaccinated to enter. • All staff, students, volunteers and caregivers to be tested at least twice a week prior to entry into the home. • Requires a negative test upon entry. • Additional tests and isolation for residents returning from an overnight absence. • As of Feb. 7, residents who are triple vaccinated will be able to take part is social day trips. • As of Feb. 7, up to four designated indoor caregivers allowed (up from two).	• Only caregivers are allowed to these facilities. • Residents will have to identify a maximum of four caregivers able to visit. • Caregivers will need to show proof of vaccination. • Masks must be warn and social distancing measures respected.
Surgeries				• MB implementing steps to address surgical, diagnostic backlog.	• ON taking phased approach to resuming non-emergent and non-urgent surgeries and procedures (Jan 31).	• QC has started to reschedule medical appointments and operating room activities.

Alberta

Easing Plans

British Columbia

BC does not have a formal reopening plan but has announced they will be slowly easing restrictions over the coming weeks.

BC's latest changes include:

- Adult indoor individual, group fitness or exercise activities and adult dance classes and activities are allowed with:
  - Capacity based on 7m² per person.
  - Group fitness and exercise classes have a capacity limit of 25 people.
  - Pre-bookings for drop-in where operationally possible.
- All indoor venues at 50% capacity; nightclubs/bars closed.
- Indoor personal gatherings limited to 10 visitors or one other household; no restriction on outdoor gatherings.
- Isolation of under 18 age group and vaccinated adult is reduced to 5 days and until symptoms improve – if tested positive.
- Contact tracing ended on January 21, 2022.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Saskatchewan

- Saskatchewan has released their 'Living with COVID' plan.
  - As of Feb. 7, PCR testing will be limited to people who are at a high risk of sever outcomes. Individuals will only be able to book PCR testing over the telephone.
  - Free rapid tests will continue to be available at 600 locations across the provinces.
  - Saskatchewan will no longer report COVID-19 information every day. Epidemiological information will be reported weekly, on Thursdays.

- Premier Moe has indicated that proof of vaccination requirement will be lifted by the end of February.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Manitoba

- Manitoba has announced easings effective February 8.
  - These easings will allow for larger private gatherings and higher capacity in public places for those who are fully vaccinated.
  - The 250-person maximum capacity for most venues will be lifted.

- Manitoba plans to end all public health measures by spring.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Ontario

- Ontario has announced a three-step easing starting on January 31, 2022 and lifting most measures by mid-March 2022. Ontario will be at roughly Alberta's level of measures by February 21.
  - Proof of vaccination requirement is currently being maintained during all three steps. However, the province has announced that it needs to reassess the value of its passport system.

- Phase 1: effective January 31
  - Increase social gathering limits to 10 indoors and 25 outdoors.
  - Increase/maintain capacity limits at 50% in most indoor public settings, including restaurants, bars, retailers, shopping malls, sports and recreational fitness facilities, gyms, cinemas, meeting and event spaces, recreational and amusement parks, museums, galleries, aquariums & zoos, casinos, bingo halls, gaming facilities, and religious services, rites, or ceremonies.

Ontario (continued)

- Phase 2: effective February 21
  - Increase social gathering limits to 25 indoors and 100 outdoors.
  - Lift capacity limits in indoor public settings where proof of vaccination is required (e.g. indoor sports and recreational facilities, cinemas).
  - Permit spectators at sporting events, concert venues, and theatres at 50% capacity.
  - Allow indoor public settings where proof of vaccination is not required to full capacity with 2 m physical distancing. Indoor religious services, rites or ceremonies may also operate at fully capacity with 2 m physical distance or no limit if proof of vaccination is required.
  - Increase indoor capacity limits to 25% in the remaining higher-risk settings where proof of vaccination is required (e.g. nightclubs, wedding receptions with dance, bathhouses and sex clubs).

- Phase 3: effective March 14
  - Lift capacity limits in all indoor public settings.
  - Increase social gathering limits to 50 indoors, no limits for outdoors.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Quebec

- Quebec plans to gradually lift public health measures.
  - Quebec has already ended its curfew and removed the requirement that non-essential stores close on Sunday.
  - Jan. 31:
    - Indoor private gatherings increased to a maximum of four people from different addresses, or two family bubbles.
    - Restaurants and dinning rooms may reopen at half capacity.
    - More people allowed to visit long-term care homes.
    - Extracurricular sports may resume for people under 18.

Quebec (continued)

- Feb. 7:
  - Movies theatres, entertainment venues and arenas may reopen at half capacity with a maximum of 500 people.
  - Places of worship may reopen at half capacity, with a maximum of 250 people.

- Feb. 14:
  - Gyms and spas may open at half capacity, along with sports and artistic activities for up to 25 people.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

United Kingdom

- The UK (England) has announced that the 'Plan B' restrictions they implemented to address Omicron will be lifted by Jan. 27, 2022:
  - Jan 17: self-isolation duration reduced to five days; COVID positive individuals can end self-isolation on day six if tested negative in two lateral flow tests taken on two consecutive days (day five and six).
  - Jan 19: return to workplace.
  - Jan 20: secondary and college students are no longer required to wear mask in classrooms.
  - Jan 27: the masking mandate and vaccine pass requirement for events and venues will be lifted.
  - Feb 11: fully vaccinated travelers will no longer need to take a COVID-19 test either before or after they arrive in the UK. If not fully vaccinated, travelers will need to take a pre-departure test and a PCR test on or before day 2 after arrival; and they will need to quarantine if tested positive.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Ireland

Ireland lifted most restrictions on January 24, 2022 while maintaining masking mandate and school measures until Feb 28, 2022.

- Effective January 22, 2022, the following restrictions were removed:
  - guidance in relation to household visiting.
  - early closing time for hospitality and event venues.
  - capacity restrictions for outdoor events, including sporting fixtures.
  - capacity restrictions for indoor events, including weddings.
  - sectoral protective measures such as physical distancing and sitting cohorts.
  - restrictions on nightclubs.
  - requirements to have a valid Digital COVID Certificate to enter various premises.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Ireland (continued)

- Effective January 24, 2022, the following restrictions were removed:
  - phased return to physical attendance in workplaces.

- Until February 28, 2022, the following measures will be required:
  - mask wearing in all settings where they are currently required.
  - protective measures in schools, early learning and long term care facilities.

Last Updated: Feb. 7, 10:30 am

Denmark

- Most restrictions were lifted on January 31, 2022.
- Denmark to no longer treating COVID-19 as a socially critical disease after February 5, 2022.
- Denmark's epidemic commission recommended the following:
  - Requirements for testing and isolation after entry into Denmark will continue for 4 weeks from Jan. 31, 2022.
  - Infection prevention measures will continue under the assumption that COVID-19 is a generally dangerous disease instead of a socially critical one.
  - Some special measures will be maintained to protect the elderly and vulnerable
  - Close monitoring and adaptation of measures will continue.

Rapid Testing

Last Updated: Feb. 7

Rapid Testing

- 77% of the tests have shipped for the second round of tests to schools as of end of day February 3, 2022.
  - AHS expects that all shipments will be out for delivery by end of day Monday, February 7 and all schools will receive their shipments by February 14, 2022.
- Alberta Health has shipped 1,775,520 tests to pharmacies in Calgary, Edmonton and Red Deer and 891,000 tests to AHS locations last week.
  - Albertans were able to start picking up tests at some pharmacies last Tuesdays and all shipments had been shipped by the end of last week.
- Alberta Health is shipping 930,000 tests to First Nations communities; providing two test kits for every individual living on-reserve.
- The plan remains to transition rapid test distribution from AHS sites to pharmacies outside of Edmonton, Calgary and Red Deer as supply and pharmaceutical distributor capacity permits.
  - Pharmacies outside of Edmonton, Calgary and Red Deer had the opportunity to order up to 648 kits per pharmacy (2,099,520 total tests) and shipments will begin later this week.

Last Updated: Feb. 4

Future Planning Considerations

As we plan for the shift from pandemic to endemic, there will need to be additional decisions made with respect to the rapid testing program. A plan to address the below considerations will be provided to PICC in the coming weeks:

- Alberta can expect to continue to receive rapid tests from Health Canada through March 2022.
- A transition of the rapid testing program needs to be considered.
  - User pay model?
  - Direct shipments from Health Canada to pharmacy distributor?
  - Strategic stockpile?
  - Community distribution model?
  - Future of the Employer and Service Provider program?

Endemic Planning Assumptions and Considerations

Indicators of Endemic Phase

- COVID-19 will be in an endemic state when it can be treated as a persistent yet manageable threat, similar to the seasonal flu. Some of the signs that COVID-19 is in an endemic state will include:
  - The health system is able to manage the volume of patients needing treatment for more severe outcomes without disrupting other care provision.
  - No known current threat of new variants with both significant immune escape and high severity characteristics.
  - Treatment options exist (i.e. anti-viral pills) to mitigate significant number of severe outcomes.
  - The public is increasingly tolerant of the disease.
- In an endemic state, there will no longer be the need for the GOA to mitigate the impacts of COVID-19 on an emergency basis. The GOA will respond to COVID-19 in a similar way to how it manages other communicable illnesses.

Endemic Planning Considerations

- Many of Alberta Health's past COVID-19 management activities were part of a pandemic approach where case identification and containment was the goal (e.g. widespread testing and case investigation). Interventions to manage COVID-19 can be divided into two groups: legal orders which mandate restrictions, and health system infrastructure to identify and respond to cases.
- In an endemic approach, where management is focused mainly on high risk settings, legal orders would no longer be necessary if vaccinations remain effective at preventing severe outcomes, and health system infrastructure could be recalibrated to support surveillance, individual clinical management and high risk outbreak response.
- However, once the transition starts and the operational 'ramp down' of health system infrastructure begins, it will not be possible to re-establish programs quickly. The system is complex with many co-dependencies. A coordinated de-escalation is required.
- With the removal of most restrictions, a small exit wave may occur. The risk of further burdening the health care system would be mitigated by waiting to remove restrictions until the acute care pressure has begun to ease from the fifth wave.

Endemic Planning Considerations

- In the future, new variants of concern of COVID will likely emerge. Their impact will be determined by how effectively they escape immunity from vaccines and previous infection as well as the severity of outcomes.
- Just as we must prepare for a future pandemic of any type, we should be prepared for a new variant that may be more severe; however, moving to an endemic state will mean that we would not pre-emptively respond to a new variant by moving back to a containment approach focused on case numbers. There will be ongoing acute care impacts as COVID continues to circulate.
- As Alberta de-escalates its response to COVID-19, it will be important to provide the public with timely and appropriate messaging. Different groups of Albertans have different levels of comfort with an endemic approach, and communication will need to be consistent and clear.

PCR Testing

- Through the transition, the GOA will continue to limit PCR testing to high risk settings and to those at risk of severe outcomes after the Omicron wave ends.
  - With high vaccination rates, case numbers are no longer the most important factor when considering public health measures.
  - It is expensive to offer widespread PCR tests to the public, and is not a strategic use of limited health system resources at a time when we are no longer striving for case containment.
  - However, Alberta will not be able to report accurate daily new case numbers or conduct case investigations and contact tracing in non-high risk settings, including schools.

TAB 14

PRIVATE

PRIORITIES IMPLEMENTATION CABINET COMMITTEE Minutes from February 8, 2022

9:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.
Chinook Room, McDougall Centre

MEMBERS PRESENT: Premier, Schweitzer, Copping, Toews, Nixon, McIver, Savage, Schulz

GUESTS:

Transition from Pandemic to Endemic

Hon. Adriana LaGrange, Minister, Education
Shannon Gill, Chief of Staff, Office of the Minister, Health
Nicole Williams, Chief of Staff, Office of the Minister, Education
Paul Wynnyk, Deputy Minister, Health
Andre Tremblay, Deputy Minister, Education
Bryce Stewart, Associate Deputy Minister, Health
Dr. Deena Hinshaw, Chief Medical Officer of Health, Health
Ethan Bayne, Assistant Deputy Minister, Incident Commander, Emergency Operations Centre, Health
Cameron Traynor, Assistant Deputy Minister, Strategic Communications, Communications and Public Engagement

Meeting called to order at 9:05 a.m.

I. STRATEGIC DISCUSSION

1. Transition from Pandemic to Endemic Framework — Copping (HLTH)

PICC RECEIVED options to ease public health measures as Alberta transitions from pandemic to endemic management of COVID-19.

PICC DIRECTED the Minister of Health to implement Option 2 to ease public health measures using a phased approach, specifically:

- Step 1 – Effective at 11:59 p.m. on February 8, 2022:
    - Entertainment venues:
        - Restrictions on food and beverages while seated are removed.
        - Restrictions Exemption Program (REP) removed along with all previous restrictions in these facilities with the exception of the following:
            - Restrictions on maximum people per table at restaurants, liquor service restrictions, closing times and interactive activities remain in force.

- Capacity limits for all facilities are as follows:
  - All facilities with a capacity of 499 or less are not limited;
  - All facilities with capacity of 500-1000 are limited to a capacity of 500; and,
  - All facilities with capacity of 1000+ are limited to 50% capacity.
- Effective at 11:59 p.m. on February 13, 2022:
  - Masking no longer required for children 12 years of age and younger, and no masking requirements for students in schools (masking requirements will remain in force for adults).

- Step 2 – If COVID hospitalizations continue to trend downwards, then PICC will confirm the implementation of the following, effective at 11:59 p.m. on February 28, 2022:
  - Remaining school requirements removed (i.e., K-6 cohorting).
  - Requirements for screening prior to youth activities removed.
  - Limits on gatherings removed.
  - Masking requirements removed.
  - Mandatory work from home requirements removed.
  - Capacity limits removed for large venues and entertainment removed.
  - Entertainment venues: Restrictions on closing times and interactive activities removed.

- Step 3 – Timing to be determined, contingent on hospitalizations continuing to trend downward:
  - COVID-specific continuing care measures removed.
  - Mandatory isolation requirement removed (becomes a recommendation only).

PICC DIRECTED the Minister of Health to expand booster shot availability for Albertans 12-17 years of age who have medical conditions that make them susceptible to COVID-19.

PICC DIRECTED the Minister of Health to work with the Minister of Service Alberta to remove the official Alberta COVID Records verifier apps from the Google and Apple stores.

PICC DIRECTED the Minister of Health to return to PICC with recommendations for the long-term management of COVID-19, timing to be determined by Executive Council.

PICC DIRECTED the Minister of Health to return to PICC with proposals for increasing the booster/third dose uptake among eligible Albertans, timing to be determined by Executive Council.

PICC DIRECTED the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to work with the Minister of Education, the Minister of Advanced Education, and any other relevant ministers on correspondence to broader public sector organizations/agencies/boards/commissions encouraging alignment of their COVID-related policies with the Government of Alberta.

PICC NOTED that relevant legal instruments will be amended to reflect the above.

PICC DIRECTED the Minister of Health to work with the Premier's Office and Communications and Public Engagement to finalize this item for announcement.

II. EXECUTIVE DISCUSSION

Premier
(EXC)

Meeting adjourned at 2:02 p.m.

Christopher McPherson
Deputy Secretary to Cabinet

Laura Lowe
Executive Director,
Cabinet Coordination

POLITICS

Many COVID-19 mandates are in provincial jurisdiction: Health minister

Posted February 8 2022 01:09pm

Asked about Liberal MP Joel Lightbound's comments against COVID-19 mandates during Tuesday's session of question period in the House of Commons, Health Minister Jean-Yves Duclos made it clear that lockdowns and many COVID-19 vaccine mandates are within provincial jurisdiction.

REPORT AN ERROR

MORE VIDEOS

'I'm feeling great': Biden speaks publicly for 1st time since recovering from

Politics

Trudeau calls on premiers and mayors to 'do the right thing' as COVID caseloads rise

PM urges provinces to bring back restrictions, targeted shutdowns

Catharine Tunney · CBC News · Posted: Nov 10, 2020 12:35 PM ET | Last Updated: November 10, 2020

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau listens to Canada's Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam as she speaks during a news conference in Ottawa, Tuesday, November 10, 2020. Trudeau publicly pleaded today for the country's premiers and mayors to "do the right thing" in their fight against rising COVID-19 cases. (Adrian Wyld/The Canadian Press)

comments

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau publicly called on the country's premiers and mayors today to "do the right thing" and impose restrictions to counter the recent rise in COVID-19 cases.

"We're seeing record spikes this morning across the country. So I'm imploring the premiers and our mayors to please do the right thing — act now to protect public health," Trudeau said during his regular morning briefing with public health officials.

"If you think something is missing in the support we're offering for your citizens — tell us."

Trudeau was asked by reporters to point out the provinces struggling with caseloads now, but he declined.

"I think it's extremely important to recognize that we are in a resurgence of COVID-19 and there are things that different regions can do to do more to fight COVID-19," he said.

"Our job as a federal government is to be there to make difficult decisions slightly less difficult."

WATCH | Trudeau calls on premiers and mayors to 'act now to protect public health:

Trudeau calls on premiers and mayors to 'act now to protect public health'

2 years ago | 2:25

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau tells reporters he worries that premiers may be easing restrictions to save businesses instead of following public health guidelines.

His sobering statement comes as health officials are reporting what the prime minister called a "concerning spike" in caseloads across the country.

The province of Ontario, which recently eased its strict restrictions on businesses and public activity in some regions, this morning reported 1,388 new cases of COVID-19 — a new daily high — and 15 additional deaths. Health Minister Christine Elliott said that number includes 520 new cases in Toronto and 395 in Peel Region.

- THE LATEST Coronavirus: What's happening in Canada and around the world on Tuesday
- Ontario reports record-high 1,388 new COVID-19 cases

"I don't know if he's speaking to me directly," said Premier Doug Ford when asked about Trudeau's warning.

"If he is, I want to thank him for his ongoing support, but we need more support for businesses. That's what we need."

Ford also used his own Tuesday briefing to call on the federal government to get money moving faster.

"By the way, any federal money that comes — even the prior commitments — we need to get that start flowing because it's not flowing as quickly as we'd like," he said. "That's on rent relief."

WATCH | Edmonton Mayor Tells Vassy Kapelos province best suited to enact stricter measures:

Edmonton Mayor says province best suited to enact stricter measures

2 years ago | 1:37

After Prime Minister Justin Trudeau urged mayors and premiers to act now to curb the spread of COVID-19, Edmonton Mayor Don Iveson says the Alberta government has more tools to enact tougher safety measures.

On Monday, a group of physicians in Alberta sent a letter to Premier Jason Kenney, his health minister and Dr. Deena Hinshaw, Alberta's chief medical officer of health, calling for swift moves to slow the spread of the virus.

"If the rate of COVID-19 spread continues, the consequences to the people of Alberta will be catastrophic," the letter said.

"The province should consider a two-week, short, sharp lockdown or 'circuit breaker' to drop the effective reproductive number and allow contact tracing to catch up."

'Regions can do more'

Trudeau said imposing targeted shutdowns and restrictions now could help prevent further problems down the line, and pointed out that the federal government has given billions of dollars in direct support to businesses affected by shutdown orders.

"With rising cases of COVID-19 here at home, there's an added pressure on all orders of government to keep people safe and to protect jobs," he said.

"But I would hope that no leader in our country is easing public health vigilance because they feel pressure not to shut down businesses or slow down our economy. I understand that worry, but let me tell you — that's how we end up with businesses going out of business, and the economy damaged even more. Beating COVID is the only way to protect our economy."

- UPDATED Alberta physicians call for 'sharp' two-week lockdown to curb spread of COVID-19
- Social gatherings banned, non-critical businesses closed as all of Manitoba moves to red alert level

Trudeau said he has seen no justification for invoking the Emergencies Act — never-before-used legislation that empowers Ottawa to do just about anything it thinks is necessary to cope with a national crisis.

"I've had over 20 conversations with the first ministers directly, 20 first ministers meetings since the beginning of this pandemic. The issue of the Emergencies Act has come up a number of times and I've continued to reassure them that I don't see it as being necessary right now," he said.

"I know that all premiers are thinking of the health of their citizens as well as they think of the health of their economy, and that's why I'm confident we're going to continue to work together well and do the right things."

Manitoba goes to 'code red'

As Trudeau was speaking in Ottawa, Manitoba Premier Brian Pallister took the step of announcing widespread shutdowns are coming, including a ban on social gatherings of any kind starting Thursday.

That move comes one day after his chief provincial public health officer announced 365 new cases, three deaths, a record provincial test positivity rate of 9.5 per cent and record numbers of COVID-19 patients in hospital and in intensive care.

Trudeau announced Tuesday his government is spending $61 million more on anti-COVID-19 efforts in First Nations in Manitoba, which are also seeing sharp increases in caseloads.

B.C. Premier John Horgan is urging his residents to "get with the program" and cut back on social interactions, warning that a return to tighter restrictions is possible if the province's COVID-19 case numbers don't come down.

"This is going to be challenging," Horgan said Monday.

"No one should be under any illusion based on what's happening in British Columbia, in Canada, in North America — around the world — that we're going to be out of this anytime soon."

With files from Jennifer Walter

CBC's Journalistic Standards and Practices | About CBC News

Report typo or error | Submit a news tip | Corrections and clarifications

Popular Now in News

1 Canmore gourmet business dumps president who sent transphobic email
676 reading now

2 Woman assaulted in Bowring Park says mental health system failed her and alleged attacker
430 reading now

3 Father says son with autism didn't intend to harm woman in St. John's Park
386 reading now

4 'I've never seen tragedy like this,' says man after child killed by GO train
344 reading now

5 2 men charged with 1st-degree murder in shooting death of Ripudaman Singh Malik